(4) recommendations for changes in laws and regulations that will reduce the costs specified pursuant to paragraph (2), or that will achieve a more favorable balance between the benefits specified pursuant to paragraph (3) and the costs specified pursuant to paragraph (2); and

(5) proposals for legislation, and a statement of planned administrative actions, to implement the recommendations specified pursuant to paragraph (4).

(c) In preparing the report required by subsection (a), the President shall consider the potential for reducing costs incurred by State and local governments in complying with intergovernmental regulations through the promulgation of intergovernmental regulations which utilize means such as performance standards, special provisions for small governments, marketable rights, economic incentives, compliance reforms, and simplified procedures to certify the compliance of Federal assistance recipients with Federal requirements.

PROCEDURES FOR PREPARATION OF REPORT

SEC. 102. (a) The President may delegate to the Director or to the head of any other Federal agency the responsibility for preparing the annual report required by section 101.

(b)(1) In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President, the Director, or the head of a Federal agency to which a delegation is made under subsection (a), shall prescribe standards to be used by Federal agencies in estimating the costs of compliance with, and the benefits provided by, intergovernmental regulations administered by such agencies.

(2) The President, the Director, or the head of a Federal agency to which a delegation is made under subsection (a) shall prescribe the standards required under paragraph (1)—

(A) after consultation with State and local governments and the Comptroller General of the United States; and

(B) after providing public notice and an opportunity for comment in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code.

(3) Standards prescribed under paragraph (1) may be revised from time to time to reflect changes in relevant economic and social circumstances and advances in pertinent branches of knowledge.

(c) The standards prescribed under subsection (b) shall provide, to the extent possible, for—

(1) uniform categories of costs of compliance with, and benefits provided by, intergovernmental regulations;

(2) methods to be used by the President, and by Federal agencies, in estimating the additional direct costs that will be incurred by State and local governments in complying with each intergovernmental regulation, including methods to estimate the amount of such costs that will be incurred for each fiscal year in which each such regulation is in effect;

(3) methods to be used by Federal agencies in compiling the information required to be submitted under subsection (d) which shall be designed to—

(A) minimize the costs that will be incurred by the State and local governments and the Federal assistance recipients from which such information will be collected; and

(B) ensure the collection of reasonably accurate information in a form that will be useful to States in complying with section 204(c);

(4) methods for preventing disclosure of information about individuals or businesses the confidentiality of which is protected under Federal law;

(5) procedures to be followed by Federal agencies in reporting the information required to be submitted under subsection (d); and

(6) such other procedures and guidelines as may be necessary for the implementation of this title.

(d) Each year, at a time prescribed by the President, the Director, or the head of the Federal agency to which a delegation is made under subsection (a), the head of each Federal agency which administered any intergovernmental regulation during a fiscal year for which a report is required under section 101, shall prepare and submit to the President, the Director, or such agency head, a report setting forth, for each such regulation, the information required to be included for such regulation in the report required under section 101.

TITLE II—COMPENSATION OF STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS FOR ADDITIONAL DIRECT COSTS

COMPENSATION REQUIRED

SEC. 201. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), a Federal agency or a court of the United States shall not require State governments or local governments to comply, in any fiscal year, with any intergovernmental regulation which—

(1) takes effect on or after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(2) is promulgated pursuant to a significant law, unless provisions of law have been enacted which provide a sufficient amount of funds for such fiscal year to reimburse such governments for the total amount of additional direct costs that will be incurred by such governments in complying with such regulation during such fiscal year.

(b)(1) Notwithstanding subsection (a), a Federal agency or a court of the United States may require State and local governments to comply with an intergovernmental regulation to which subsection (a) applies and which will be in effect during a fiscal year if, with respect to such intergovernmental regulation and such fiscal year, a joint resolution described in paragraph (2) is enacted by a two-thirds vote of the Members of each House of Congress, duly chosen and sworn.

(2) A joint resolution referred to in paragraph (1) is a joint resolution which, with respect to an intergovernmental regulation that will be in effect during a fiscal year, waives the provisions of subsection (a) that require that provisions of law be enacted to provide a sufficient amount of funds for such fiscal year to reimburse State and local governments for the total amount of additional direct costs that will be incurred by such governments in complying with such regulation during such fiscal year.

(c) For purposes of this section, the total amount of additional direct costs that will be incurred by State governments and local governments in complying with an intergovernmental regulation in any fiscal year shall be the total amount of such costs for such regulation estimated by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office for such fiscal year in the report required under section 202 for such fiscal year.

REPORT BY THE DIRECTOR OF THE CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE

SEC. 202. (a) For each fiscal year in which an intergovernmental regulation promulgated pursuant to a significant law will be in effect, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall prepare and transmit to the President and the Congress a report specifying, for such fiscal year and the fiscal year succeeding such fiscal year, an estimate of the total amount of additional direct costs that will be incurred by State governments and local governments in complying with such regulation in each such fiscal year.

(b) In preparing each report required by subsection (a), the Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall consider the estimate of additional direct costs for a fiscal year resulting from compliance with an intergovernmental regulation which are specified in the report submitted by the President under title I during the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

(c) The Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall transmit each report required by subsection (a) for a fiscal year to the President and the Congress by September 1 of the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

IMPLEMENTATION

SEC. 203. (a) For each fiscal year in which an intergovernmental regulation promulgated pursuant to a significant law will be in effect, the chairman of the committees of the Senate and of the House of Representatives having legislative jurisdiction over such significant law shall propose, to an appropriate bill or resolution providing funds for such fiscal year, an amendment containing provisions to appropriate funds to reimburse State governments and local governments for the additional direct costs incurred in complying with such regulation. The amount of funds proposed to be appropriated by such amendment shall be equal to or in excess of the amount described in section 201(a).

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply with respect to an intergovernmental regulation which will be in effect during a fiscal year if, with respect to such intergovernmental regulation and such fiscal year, a joint resolution has been enacted in accordance with section 201(b).

PROCEDURES FOR REIMBURSEMENTS TO STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

SEC. 204. (a)(1) The head of each Federal agency which administers an intergovernmental regulation promulgated pursuant to a significant law shall pay to each State government in each fiscal year the amount determined pursuant to this section to reimburse the State government and local governments in the State for the additional direct costs incurred by such governments in complying with such regulation in such fiscal year.

(2) A State government which receives payments under this section for reimbursement for additional direct costs incurred in complying with an intergovernmental regulation in any fiscal year shall pay to each local government in the State the amount determined pursuant to this section to reimburse such local government for the additional direct costs incurred by such local government in complying with such regulation in such fiscal year.

(b) The total amount to be paid to a State to reimburse the government of the State and local governments in the State for additional direct costs incurred by such governments in complying with an intergovernmental regulation in any fiscal year shall be an amount which bears the same ratio to the total amount for reimbursement of additional direct costs for all State governments and local governments described in section 201(a) with respect to such regulation for such fiscal year as the total amount of additional direct costs with respect to such regulation which is specified in the report submitted by the President under title I for such fiscal year for such State government and local governments in such State for such fiscal year bears to the sum of the total amounts of additional direct costs with respect to such regulation which are specified in such report for all State governments and all local governments for such fiscal year.

(c)(1) The total amount to be paid by a State government to local governments in such State to reimburse such governments for additional direct costs incurred by such governments in complying with an intergovernmental regulation in any fiscal year shall be the amount which is equal to the product of the amount paid to the State under subsection (b) for such fiscal year multiplied by the ratio determined by the President for such State with respect to such regulation for such fiscal year pursuant to section 101(b)(2)(B).

(2)(A) A State government which receives payments under this section to reimburse local governments in the State for the additional direct costs incurred by such governments in complying with an intergovernmental regulation in any fiscal year shall pay to each such local government an amount equal to the product of—

(i) the total amount determined under paragraph (1) with respect to such regulation for such fiscal year, multiplied by

(ii) the ratio (stated as a percentage and estimated by the State in accordance with subparagraph (B)) that the total amount of additional direct costs incurred by such local government in complying with such regulation in such fiscal year bears to the total amount of additional direct costs incurred by all local governments in such State in complying with such regulation in such fiscal year.

(B) Each State government which receives payments under this section for any fiscal year shall provide by law for the estimation of the amount of additional direct costs incurred by each local government in such State in complying with an intergovernmental regulation for which such payments are received. In providing for the estimation of such costs, the State shall establish procedures and methods for the estimation of such costs which are reasonably related to the actual additional direct costs incurred by such governments in complying with such regulation in such fiscal year.

(d) This section does not apply with respect to an intergovernmental regulation which will be in effect during a fiscal year if, with respect to such intergovernmental regulation and such fiscal year, a joint resolution has been enacted in accordance with section 201(b).

EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT ENACTMENTS

SEC. 205. No law enacted after the date of enactment of this title shall supersede the provisions of this title unless such law does so in specific terms, referring to this title, and declares that such law supersedes the provisions of this title.

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS

COST ESTIMATES

SEC. 301. Section 403(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by striking out "$200,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$100,000,000".●

By Mr. BENTSEN:

S. 1538. A bill to extend the temporary suspension of duty on fresh cantaloupes imported between January 1 and May 15 of each year; to the Committee on Finance.

TEMPORARY SUSPENSION OF DUTY ON CANTALOUPES

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, today I introduce a bill to extend for 2 additional years the current suspension of customs duty on fresh cantaloupe imported into the United States between January 1 and May 15 of each year.

In 1982, Congress first passed legislation temporarily suspending the 35 percent ad valorem rate of duty on fresh cantaloupe imported into the United States during the period when there is no domestic competition—January 1 through May 15 of each year. This temporary suspension has periodically been extended, and the current extension expires on December 31, 1990.

Because of adverse climactic conditions, there is no domestic cantaloupe on the market during the period from January 1 through May 15. Conversely, during the domestic growing season for cantaloupe, imported cantaloupe is unable to compete with the domestic fruit due to transportation and storage costs. In fact, domestic producers support extending the duty suspension because they believe having imported cantaloupe available during the domestic off season helps maintain consumer interest in cantaloupe and increases sales when domestic cantaloupe is in season. Thus, continued suspension should not have any adverse impact on domestic production—and may have beneficial impact—and duty suspension is warranted.

In 1988, approximately $17,956,250 in fresh cantaloupe was imported into the United States during the period covered by the duty suspension. Eighty percent of this produce originated from Mexico, and our border communities have benefited through the increased income and jobs created by as a result of the importation, distribution, and retail sale of Mexican cantaloupe. Failing to extend the duty suspension would deal a blow to the the border communities without serving any countervailing domestic interest.

In sum, Mr. President, I believe that this legislation is necessary and noncontroversial, and I urge my colleagues to support it. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1538

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

SECTION 1. Subheading 9902.08.07 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States is amended by striking out "12/31/90" and inserting in lieu thereof "12/31/98".

SEC. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this Act applies with respect to goods entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, after December 31, 1990.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. LEAHY, and Mr. D'AMATO):

S. 1539. A bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act so as to include Lake Champlain in the Clean Lakes Demonstration Program; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

INCLUSION OF LAKE CHAMPLAIN IN THE CLEAN LAKES DEMONSTRATION PROJECT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today along with Senators JEFFORDS, LEAHY and D'AMATO to introduce a rather simple measure, which, if enacted, would include Lake Champlain in the States of New York and Vermont in the Clean Lakes Demonstration Program under the Clean Water Act. I and my colleagues who have cosponsored this bill believe that such a designation will allow us to learn more about the lake, and how to better protect it.

Lake Champlain is the sixth largest lake in the United States, exceeded in size only by the five Great Lakes. It has 435 square miles of surface water, over 70 islands, 587 miles of shoreline, and a depth reaching 400 feet. The Lake Champlain watershed is bounded on the west and north by the Chateaugay and St. Lawrence River basins, on the east by the St. Francis and Connecticut River basins, and on the south by the Hudson River basin.

Stretching between the Adirondacks and Green Mountains, the lake is 120 miles long and only 12 miles wide at its widest crossing. Unlike most watercourses, Lake Champlain flows northward, discharging into the Richelieu River in Quebec, which in turn empties into the St. Lawrence River.

Lake Champlain is a unique resource, and has been so recognized by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization [UNESCO]. On April 25, 1989, UNESCO designated Lake Champlain and the neighboring Adirondack Mountains as an International Biosphere Reserve. Indeed, the fourth largest such reserve in the world. On June 28, 1989, the Environment and Public Works Committee's Subcommittee on Water Resources, Transportation and Infrastructure, of which I am chairman, held a field hearing on water quality in Lake Champlain. The hearing was held in two parts: a morning session in Burlington, VT, at the University of Vermont; and an afternoon session in Plattsburgh, NY, at Clinton Community College. Senator JEFFORDS joined me at these hearings, and we heard testimony from 19 witnesses.

This legislation is an outgrowth of what the committee has learned through the hearings. In short, we now understand that too little is known about the water quality of the lake. And we learned that the situation we now face is how to protect a lake that is still in good shape. Dr. James C. Dawson of the State University of New York at Plattsburgh aptly described the prognosis for Lake Champlain as "guardedly good." The lake is not significantly polluted, and we need to act quickly to keep it that way.

Inclusion of Lake Champlain in the Clean Lakes Demonstration Program will give researchers and local governments concerned with the lake a source of funds for their work. The grants administered by EPA, can be used to study water quality trends, fight nonpoint source pollution, and other worthy lake protection activities. The Clean Lakes Program is particularly valuable because it takes a holistic view of the lake as an ecosystem of many interrelated parts. Unfortunately, too many of our environmental laws divide the world into the separate realms of land, air, water and the like. The Clean Lakes Program can address whichever problems are most urgent for the lake, regardless of their nature.

Mr. President, I thank my colleagues for cosponsoring this bill, and I urge its prompt enactment. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at the appropriate point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1539

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America by Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) Lake Champlain is the sixth largest lake in the United States, exceeded in size only by the five Great Lakes;

(2) on August 23, 1988, the State of New York, the State of Vermont, and the Canadian Province of Quebec, all of which share a common boundary on the Lake, entered into a Memorandum of Understanding to conduct cooperative planning and research for the management, protection, and enhancement of Lake Champlain and its environment;

(3) the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) has designated Lake Champlain and the neighboring Adirondack Mountains as the Champlain-Adirondack International Biosphere Reserve, making it the fourth largest reserve of its kind in the world;

(4) toxic substances, particularly polychlorinated biphenyls (PCB's), are being accumulated by lake trout, prompting the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation and the Vermont Department of Environmental Conservation to issue a lake-wide health advisory warning against eating lake trout more than once a month; and

(5) little baseline data relative to the overall health of the Lake has been collected, and this has frustrated attempts to measure changes in the Lake's ecosystem.

SEC. 2. AMENDMENT.

Section 314(d)(2) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1324(d)(2)) is amended by inserting immediately before "Lake Houston, Texas" the following: "Lake Champlain, New York, Vermont;".●

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator MOYNIHAN, chairman of the Subcommittee on Water Resources and author of this bill, Senator LEAHY and Senator D'AMATO in introducing this important piece of legislation.

This bill simply amends the Clean Water Act to add Lake Champlain to the list of "clean lakes" as defined by section 314(d)(2) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act. As America's largest fresh water lake after the Great Lakes, Lake Champlain is a valuable resource that is deserving of special congressional attention. The significance of the Champlain Basin region is underscored by its recent designation as an International Biosphere Reserve by the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization—the fourth largest reserve of its kind in the world and unique in that it includes densely populated areas in addition to its natural splendors.

This lake is not only invaluable to the people of Vermont and New York, but also to the people of Quebec and millions of others who come to the Lake Champlain region to enjoy this beautiful resource. In the past, the lake has been a prominent commercial transportation corridor, and more recently it has served as host to increasing recreational uses. Much of the drinking water supply for the people in the Champlain region comes from the lake. Most important, it is an integral and irreplaceable part of the New England lifestyle enjoyed by many people and envied by many more.

Chairman MOYNIHAN and I, in conjunction with the other congressional representatives, recently held a field hearing to discuss issues surrounding Lake Champlain. In a full day of events, we heard testimony from Vermont experts in Burlington, then were carried by a research vessel to Plattsburgh to hear testimony from the New York experts.

While the record of the hearing is not yet available, at least two points are clear: there is a lack of historical and contemporary data on the lake, and a greater coordination between the State and Federal agencies and the Canadian Government is necessary. We believe that adoption of this bill would help to alleviate these problems.

We owe it to the residents of and visitors to the Champlain region, as well as to future generations to preserve the quality and diversity of Lake Champlain. A direct relationship exists between the quality of the lake and the lives of the lifestyle of the people of the region. Diverse industrial growth and agriculture policies, along with increasing population are threatening the water quality of the lake. This recent accelerated growth and change are contributing to a decline in water quality in ways that are difficult to quantify. Furthermore, persistent air pollution has been affecting streams, rivers, and lakes throughout the Northeast, many of which serve as tributaries to the lake.

Evidence indicates that increasing amounts of toxic substances and bacteria are accumulating in the lake, prompting a warning against eating lake trout more than once per month and causing occasional beach closings in some of the most populated areas along the shoreline. We need to understand the effects of the increasing use of Lake Champlain in order to better protect it for all the people who depend on the lake.

The importance of the lake to both the United States and Canada was recognized by the signing of the Memorandum of Understanding by Governors Kunin and Cuomo and Quebec's Premier Bourassa. While this is a significant step toward correcting the environmental problems of the lake, much more is needed to preserve this valuable resource. That is why I am joining my colleagues from Vermont and New York in introducing this legislation.

The limited baseline data that has been collected on the health of Lake Champlain and its value to the people of New England make it a strong candidate to be included in the Clean Lakes Demonstration Program. One of the largest lakes in the United States, encompassing the United States and Canada, the values and the importance of Lake Champlain cannot be overstated.

The overall water quality of the lake remains good, but this will not continue to be the case if we simply retain our present practices. With luck, we will not see catastrophic events poison Lake Champlain, but without incorporating prudent measures, we may see a gradual demise equally potent.

Finally, understanding its problems and effectively implementing a pollution reduction program at Lake Champlain could serve as an example for cleaning other lakes throughout the country. I urge my colleagues to support this bill to further the protection and preservation of one of America's finest resources.

By Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. PELL):

S. 1540. A bill to establish a critical languages and areas study program; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

CRITICAL LANGUAGES AND AREA STUDIES PROGRAM ASSISTANCE ACT

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, today I am pleased to be joined by Senators KENNEDY and PELL in the introduction of the Critical Languages and Area Studies Program Assistance Act. This legislation is designed to address the drastic deficiencies in our teaching and understanding of the cultures and languages of some of the more strategically important areas of the world.

It goes without saying that we are in a tremendous period of change in the world. We have moved beyond the postwar period of American preeminence to a time when we are being challenged on almost every continent.

In the Middle East, China, and the Soviet Union, it is a struggle to fully understand the swirl of events. That struggle is made more difficult by the dearth of Americans who have or will acquire knowledge of these areas.

This is far more than an empty academic exercise. It is not an exaggeration to say that the future of our Nation depends in no small part on our ability to understand these critical areas of the world. This understanding is now sorely lacking—in our diplomatic corps, among our national security forces, and among our business community.

Critical languages take 4 to 6 years to learn. By one measure, Chinese is five times as difficult to learn as Spanish. Their study must be initiated in the elementary and secondary grades.

Yet less than 17 percent of all elementary schools offer any foreign languages. The picture at the high school level is not much better. Less than 19 percent of all high school students take foreign languages, and less than 1 percent graduate with competence.

To put it more graphically, the Soviet Union has more teachers of English than the United States has students of Russian.

We need to attack both sides of the equation. We need to provide trained teachers, textbooks, curriculums, and educational technologies for our elementary and secondary schools, and we need to demand more of ourselves and our students.

The National Governors' Association issued a report this past spring outlining the need for foreign language and area studies. It stated the case very succinctly: "International education must be an integral part of the education of every student."

This bill will by no means solve the problem, but I think it will help with some important first steps. Consortia supported by this legislation would be required to: develop new curricula specifically designed for elementary and secondary students; develop and integrate new technologies and software for use in secondary and elementary schools; serve as clearinghouses for the dissemination of new teaching materials and technologies; advise school districts on the development and implementation of critical languages and area studies programs; and develop and implement teacher training programs.

Mr. President, we will not be a world leader if we sit back and expect the world to speak our language. We must go out into the world, and speak its languages. The small investment we will need to make to do so will be dwarfed by the dividends the effort will pay. I urge my colleagues to give this legislation their attention and support.●

By Mr. KERRY:

S. 1541. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to restore a capital gains tax differential for small and high-risk business stock held for more than 5 years; to the Committee on Finance.

SMALL AND HIGH-RISK BUSINESS INVESTMENT ACT

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation which would provide a much-needed incentive for investors to put their money into small and developing businesses. The "Small and High-Risk Business Investment Act of 1989" will encourage the kind of venture and high-risk investment necessary to the startup and growth of U.S. small businesses and, thus, the future economic competitiveness of the U.S. economy.

Mr. President, "competitiveness" has become the buzzword of the 1980's here on Capitol Hill and it is a word and a concept which I am certain we will hear more of in the 1990's. But what does competitiveness mean? Why is it so important to America's future?

In a world economy which is increasingly global in nature and technology based, we find ourselves competing with a growing number of players. Advancements in technology and instantaneous transfer of information dictates that the United States compete with sophistication and speed in an increasingly crowded world market. Consequently, businesspeople, educators, and makers of public policy must work together to build the kind of economy which will allow the United States to compete from a position of strength and vigor. This "economic mobilization," if you will, will require much effort by many people. But a key factor in boosting U.S. competitiveness will be our ability to foster the development and proliferation of innovative, entrepreneurial ventures.

Unfortunately, I believe that there is one aspect of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 which has made this type of economic development difficult. Although I supported tax reform because it went far in simplifying and making more equitable the U.S. Tax Code, I disagreed with its complete elimination of the capital gains differential. I believe that an unfortunate consequence of this particular measure may have been a decrease in the availability of investment capital for new, small, and expanding businesses.

However, unlike the President, I do not support an across-the-board cut in capital gains taxes. Someone who directs his or her broker to buy a share of IBM or AT&T stock on the secondary market and then sells that stock at a profit sometime in the future, has invested his or her money safely and wisely and will enjoy an increase in wealth as a result. Although such investments contribute to the overall wealth of the Nation and are often personally fruitful, they require relatively minimal risk on the part of the investor. What's more, capital gains of this type account for a large share of the earnings of the Nation's wealthiest individuals and I see no reason why such earnings should be taxed at a lower rate than wage-related income. I do not wish to follow George Bush back into the days of tax breaks for the rich. Such a policy is unnecessary and certainly inadvisable in the current budgetary climate.

My approach is to provide the type of incentive that will encourage those with the resources to invest in the kind of small and start-up ventures which, if successful, can be expected to create new jobs and products and, thus, contribute greatly to the future economic health of this country.

Unfortunately, the current treatment of capital gains in the U.S. Tax Code discourages rather than encourages investments in such job creating, competitiveness enhancing entrepreneurial activity. Our tax laws make no distinction between gains resulting from investment in GM stock and gains resulting from investment in a new, and often risky, small business venture. Nor do they distinguish between short-term and long-term investments. My legislation seeks to correct this inequity through the institution of a graduated capital gains differential which distinguishes between the type and the length of qualified investments.

The Small and High-Risk Business Investment Act is targeted specifically toward investments in small and start-up ventures. This bill will lower to 15 percent the tax rate on capital gains resulting from "small business" investment, that is, investment which involves a direct purchase, and minimum 5-year holding, of equity in a business worth $100 million or less. After a 10-year holding period, that rate decreases to 10 percent.

In addition, my proposal provides a second tier rate structure for "high risk" investment, that is, investment which involves a direct purchase, and minimum 5-year-holding period, of equity in a business worth $10 million or less. The capital gains rate for this type of investment will start at 10 percent after a 5-year-holding period and decrease to 5 percent after 10 years.

In proposing the institution of this two-tiered capital gains differential, my objective is to create an incentive for investment in the startup and expansion of small and mid-size businesses. Increasingly, it is these businesses, often entrepreneurial in nature, which develop and effectively market the types of new and innovative technologies utilized in today's economy. The success and growth of these types of businesses are vital to the economic future of the United States.

The two-tiered rate structure of my legislation serves to stimulate equity financing of both startup ventures, and small businesses in need of crucial expansion capital. By instituting a minimum 5-year-holding period for qualified investments and a further rate reduction for investments held 10 years or longer, this legislation creates an incentive to hold assets for long periods and, thus, seeks to remove pressure of operators of startup and expanding businesses to generate quick, paper profits. It is vital, Mr. President, that investors encourage entrepreneurs to make the kind of capital investments necessary for long-term growth and investment.

Investments in small and high-risk businesses, however, have to prove fruitful in order for an investor to take advantage of the lower capital gains tax rate. As any venture capitalist knows such success in these types of investments is far from guaranteed. Consequently, I believe that any legislation which provides an effective and workable incentive for high-risk investment must address the high failure rate of such investments. My bill will allow investors to deduct from their taxes up to $50,000 in losses resulting from direct equity investments in businesses worth $10 million or less. Currently, this deduction is limited to investments in companies worth $1 million or less, a figure set over 30 years ago and out of step with the startup and expansion costs in today's business environment.

Mr. President, in contrast to President Bush's efforts to enact an indiscriminate and across-the-board cut in the capital gains tax, my legislation addresses the real need for startup and expansion capital for America's new and innovative businesses. My proposal differs markedly from that of the President by making a direct correlation between the inherent risk of an investment, and the rate at which subsequent capital gains should be taxed. The riskier an investment, the smaller the rate and, thus, the larger the incentive. It's a simple concept yet one vitally important in today's economic climate.

I believe that this multifaceted and narrowly targeted proposal will encourage the kind of high-risk investment crucial to the economic growth and diversification that America needs as it faces an increasingly powerful Pacific rim and a united European Economic Community in the decades ahead. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this narrowly targeted incentive to stimulate investment in our Nation's future economic competitiveness.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Small and High-Risk Business Investment Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. ALTERNATIVE TAX RATES ON CAPITAL GAINS FROM CERTAIN SMALL AND HIGH-RISK BUSINESS STOCK.

(a) TAXPAYERS OTHER THAN CORPORATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by inserting after section 1201 the following new section:

"SEC. 1202. ALTERNATIVE RATES FOR CAPITAL GAINS ON SMALL AND HIGH-RISK BUSINESS STOCK HELD BY TAXPAYERS OTHER THAN CORPORATIONS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—If for any taxable year a taxpayer other than a corporation has a small business stock net capital gain, then in lieu of the tax imposed by section 1, there is hereby imposed a tax (if such tax is less than the tax imposed by section 1) in an amount equal to the sum of—

"(1) a tax computed on the taxable income, reduced by the amount of small business stock net capital gain, at the rates and in the manner as if this subsection had not been enacted, plus

"(2) the tax on small business stock net capital gain determined under subsection (b).

"(b) TAX ON SMALL BUSINESS STOCK NET CAPITAL GAIN.—The tax under this subsection shall be the sum of the amounts determined in accordance with the following table:

In the case of:	The tax is:
10-year high-risk gain	5 percent
5-year high-risk gain	10 percent
10-year small business gain	10 percent
5-year small business gain	15 percent.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) SMALL BUSINESS STOCK NET CAPITAL GAIN.—The term 'small business stock net capital gain' means the lesser of—

"(A) the net capital gain for the taxable year, or

"(B) the net capital gain for the taxable year determined by taking into account only gain or loss from qualified small business stock which has been held for more than 5 years.

"(2) 10-YEAR HIGH-RISK GAIN.—The term '10-year high-risk gain' means the lesser of—

"(A) the net capital gain for the taxable year, or

"(B) the net capital gain for the taxable year by taking into account only gain or loss from high-risk business stock held for 10 years or more.

"(3) 5-YEAR HIGH-RISK GAIN.—The term '5-year high-risk gain' means the lesser of—

(A) the net capital gain for the taxable year, reduced by 10-year high-risk gain, or

(B) the net capital gain for the taxable year determined by taking into account only gain or loss from high-risk business stock held for 5 years or more but less than 10 years.

"(4) 10-YEAR SMALL BUSINESS GAIN.—The term '10-year small business gain' means the lesser of—

"(A) the net capital gain for the taxable year, reduced by 5-year high-risk gain and 10-year high-risk gain, or

"(B) the net capital gain for the taxable year determined by taking into account only gain or loss from qualified small business stock (other than high-risk business stock) held for 10 years or more.

"(5) 5-YEAR SMALL BUSINESS GAIN.—The term '5-year small business gain' means the lesser of—

"(A) the net capital gain for the taxable year, reduced by 5-year high-risk gain, 10-year high-risk gain, and 5-year small business gain, or

"(B) the net capital gain for the taxable year determined by taking into account only gain or loss from qualified small business stock (other than high-risk business stock) held for 5 years or more but less than 10 years.

"(6) QUALIFIED SMALL BUSINESS STOCK.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified small business stock' means stock which—

"(i) is issued by a qualified small business after the date which is 6 months after the date of the enactment of this section,

"(ii) is first acquired (whether directly or through an underwriter) by the taxpayer, and

"(iii) is not issued in redemption of (or otherwise exchanged for) stock not issued during the period described in clause (i).

"(B) QUALIFIED SMALL BUSINESS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified small business' means a corporation the paid-up capital of which immediately after the date of issuance described in subparagraph (A) is $100,000,000 or less.

"(ii) ACTIVE TRADE OR BUSINESS REQUIREMENT.—A corporation shall not be treated as a qualified small business unless such corporation—

"(I) was engaged in the active conduct of a trade or business during the 5-year period ending on the date of issuance described in subparagraph (A) (or if shorter, its period of existence), and

"(II) is so engaged immediately after such date.

"(iii) EXCEPTION FOR PERSONAL SERVICE CORPORATIONS.—The term 'qualified small business' shall not include a personal service corporation (within the meaning of section 269A(b)(1)).

"(7) HIGH-RISK BUSINESS STOCK.—The term 'high-risk business stock' means stock which is qualified small-business stock under paragraph (6) determined by substituting '$10,000,000' for '$100,000,000' in subparagraph (B)(i) thereof."

(2) MAXIMUM RATE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 1(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (3) and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) SPECIAL RULE WHERE TAXPAYER HAS SMALL BUSINESS STOCK NET CAPITAL GAIN.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If a taxpayer has small business stock net capital gain for any taxable year, then the tax imposed by this section shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(i) the amount determined under paragraph (1), or

"(ii) the sum of—

"(I) the amount determined under paragraph (1) without taking into account small business stock net capital gain for purposes of subparagraphs (A) and (B) thereof, plus

"(II) the amount determined under section 1201(b).

"(B) SMALL BUSINESS STOCK NET CAPITAL GAIN.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'small business stock net capital gain' has the meaning given such term by section 1202(c)."

(B) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (B) of section 1(j)(3) of such Code, as redesignated by paragraph (1), is amended by inserting "paragraph (2) applies for such taxable year or if" after "if".

(b) CORPORATIONS.—Section 1201 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c) and by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) QUALIFIED SMALL BUSINESS STOCK NET CAPITAL GAIN.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If for any taxable year a corporation has a small business stock net capital gain, then—

"(A) in lieu of the tax imposed by section 11, 511, or 831 (a) or (b) (whichever is applicable), there is hereby imposed a tax (if such tax is less than the tax imposed by such sections) in an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) a tax computed on the taxable income reduced by the amount of the small business stock net capital gain, at the rates and in the manner as if this subsection had not been enacted, plus

"(ii) a tax on the small business stock net capital gain determined in the same manner as under section 1202(b), and

"(B) paragraph (2) of subsection (a) shall be applied as if it read as follows:

'(2) a tax equal to the sum of—

'(A) the amount determined under clause (ii) of subsection (b)(1)(A), plus

'(B) 34 percent of the net capital gain, reduced by small business stock net capital gain.'

"(2) SMALL BUSINESS STOCK NET CAPITAL GAIN.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'small business stock net capital gain' has the meaning given such term by section 1202(c)."

(c) TREATMENT AS PREFERENCE ITEM FOR MINIMUM TAX.—Section 57(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to items of tax preference under the alternative minimum tax) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(8) CAPITAL GAINS ON SALE OF CERTAIN SMALL AND HIGH-RISK BUSINESS STOCK.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a taxpayer with small business stock net capital gain, an amount equal to the rate differential portion for the taxable year determined under subparagraph (B).

"(B) RATE DIFFERENTIAL PORTION.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The rate differential portion of 5-year high-risk gain, 10-year high-risk gain, 5-year small business gain and 10-year small business gain is the same proportion of such amount as—

"(I) the excess of the highest applicable rate over the alternative tax rate, bears to

"(II) the highest applicable tax rate.

"(ii) HIGHEST APPLICABLE TAX RATE.—The term 'highest applicable tax rate' means the lesser of—

"(I) the rate determined under section 904(b)(3)(E)(ii), or

"(II) the rate determined under section 904(b)(3)(E)(iii).

"(iii) ALTERNATIVE RATE.—The term 'alternative rate' means the rate determined under section 1202(b), whichever is applicable.

"(C) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph, any term used in this paragraph which is used in section 1202 shall have the same meaning as when used in section 1202."

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (4) of section 691(c) of such Code is amended by striking "1(j), 1201, and 1211" and inserting "1(j), 1201, 1202, and 1211, and for purposes of section 57(a)(8)".

(2) Clause (iii) of section 852(b)(3)(D) of such Code is amended by striking "66 percent" and inserting "the rate differential portion (under section 904(b)(3)(E) or section 57(a)(8)(B)), whichever is applicable".

(3) Section 904(b)(3)(E) of such Code is amended by striking "1(j)" in clause (iii)(I) thereof and inserting "1(j) (without regard to paragraph (2) thereof)".

(4) Section 1445(e)(1) of such Code is amended by striking "34 percent (or, to the extent provided in regulations, 28 percent)" and inserting "34 percent (or, to the extent provided in regulations, the alternative tax rate determined under section 904(b)(3)(E)(iii) or section 57(a)(8)(B)(iii), whichever is applicable)".

(5) The table of sections for part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1201 the following new item:

"Sec. 1202. Alternative rates for capital gains on small and high-risk business stock held by taxpayers other than corporations."

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to stock issued after the date which is 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.●

S. 1543. A bill to authorize the Colonial Dames at Gunston Hall to establish a memorial to George Mason in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

ESTABLISHING A MEMORIAL TO GEORGE MASON IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

● Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, in 1991, we will celebrate the 200th anniversary of the ratification of the Bill of Rights, which makes our Nation the envy of the world. In order to commemorate that historic occasion, I am pleased to introduce legislation which would authorize the placement of a memorial to George Mason, the great statesman and Virginian whose authorship of the Virginia Declaration of Rights served as a model for the first 10 amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

Mason's articulation reached far beyond the Commonwealth of Virginia, and even beyond the U.S. Constitution. It was felt in France, where the Declaration of the Rights of Man drew on Mason; and his thoughts continue to give inspiration to peoples around the world.

This bill will authorize the Colonial Dames at Gunston Hall, a private, historical society, to establish a memorial to George Mason on Federal land in the District of Columbia. The measure would not cost the American taxpayers any money, but would surely enhance our appreciation of the words and deeds of this great Virginian.●

By Mr. SASSER:

S. 1544. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for the development of academic leaders in geriatrics through the establishment of centers of excellence in geriatric research and training; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

CENTERS OF EXCELLENCE IN GERIATRIC RESEARCH AND TRAINING ACT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise today to call your attention to a problem that could have some grave consequences for our Nation's health care system. The problem is that America doesn't have enough physicians specifically trained to meet the needs of our growing elderly population. Our Nation lacks geriatricians, that is, physicians who specialize in medicine for the elderly.

You may recall, Mr. President, that last Congress I attempted to address this shortage by introducing legislation known as the Centers of Excellence in Geriatric Research and Training Act. My bill called for the establishment of 10 centers around the Nation to perform research in geriatrics and to train more geriatricians to meet the growing need.

I was very pleased when the Labor Committee under the direction of Chairman KENNEDY, included many of the provisions of my bill under title 4 of the Public Health Service Act that was reauthorized last Congress. The reauthorization called for the establishment of 2 or 3 centers instead of the original 10 that I had proposed. Nevertheless, the establishment of these centers was a definite step in the right direction, and I was proud to be associated with it.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, it has come to my attention that only one center will be established this year through the Public Service Act. No centers are planned for future years. Frankly, I do not feel that one center for geriatric research and training is adequate to address the overwhelming need that is facing our Nation.

Because I am committed to maintaining a high quality of care in our Nation's health care programs for the elderly, and because I believe we have a responsibility to make certain that there are enough physicians to treat our seniors, today, I am reintroducing my legislation to establish 10 centers of excellence in geriatric research and training.

The need for more geriatricians is obvious. The greying of America promises to be one of the most serious health care challenges in the years ahead. We've all heard the statistics about how rapidly our population is aging. But the sad truth is that our Nation's medical community remains grossly unprepared to meet that challenge.

The problem is simple. The United States currently has a serious shortage of doctors who are adequately trained to deal with the chronic and complex ailments that strike the elderly. The present Medicare system is designed to treat only acute care, that is, maladies for which there is a treatment and a cure.

Many illnesses that affect the elderly have no cure. The goal for the treatment of elderly patients is often to make their lives as comfortable as possible rather than to cure them completely. It takes a well-trained geriatrician who can recognize the multidimensional ailments of the elderly to recognize the difference between the two.

Unless the United States does something to vastly improve geriatric training and education in its medical schools, the Nation may soon find itself overwhelmed by the tremendous health care demands of its rapidly aging population.

My legislation is based on a report that was issued by the prestigious Institute of Medicine. The report reveals just how few American physicians there are with expertise in geriatrics. Of the 450,000 practicing physicians in the United States, only 450—or 1 in every 1,000—have completed a postgraduate fellowship program in geriatrics. The Institute of Medicine study points out that we must double our current yearly output of geriatricians to meet the projected need of at least 2,100 geriatrics by the year 2000.

Some steps have been taken recently to improve geriatric training in the United States. However, these efforts are falling far short of what is needed. For example, although 75 percent of American medical schools now offer elective courses in geriatrics, only 4 percent of the medical students take them.

For advanced geriatric training the figures are even worse. In the 1987 academic year, there were only three geriatricians and not a single geropsychiatrist in advanced training in the United States.

Geriatrics has been largely ignored because it is not very glamorous. American medicine has always focused on fast cures to dramatic, acute illnesses. But there are rarely any fast cures for the chronic ailments of the elderly. In fact, there conditions often defy a doctor's natural desire to "make it all better."

As a result, doctors tend to lose interest in elderly patients. They are seen as hopeless cases even when they may greatly benefit from treatment. Physicians and all medical personnel must be taught that the chronic ailments of the elderly are not always hopeless conditions. Their treatment may require more time and attention. But positive results can be achieved and these results may be spectacular.

I read an account not too long ago, Mr. President, about an elderly man who entered a VA hospital. The man was described as "confused and swollen from renal failure, unable to walk because of bad pressure sores on his feet, malnourished, depressed, and curled up in a fetal position." Most of the hospital's medical staff gave up on the patient, expecting him to live possibly a few months in a nursing home. However, the hospital luckily had a trained geriatric team that persisted in their diligent evaluation and treatment of the patient. And within weeks, the man walked out of the hospital and returned home.

In light of our Nation's current shortage of geriatricians, imagine how many patients like the one I just mentioned are given up for dead rather than given the special treatment they need. I believe that we must act convincingly to correct our past neglect of geriatric medicine. And we must act now. That is why I am reintroducing this legislation that offers hope of improved medical care for our senior citizens.

In 1988, the National Institutes of Health earmarked some funds for geriatric research. I was pleased to see that attention was being given to the geriatric field. But the money was used for research only. And the money was only available for one research grant.

Now I am sure that those research dollars did some good, Mr. President, but we need more than a stop-gap approach for such a tremendous problem. My bill will provide not only for additional geriatric research but also will train new physicians to perform that research. More important, it will train new physicians to treat our elderly.

Let me tell you exactly what my legislation will do. It will establish centers of excellence in geriatric research and training at 10 medical schools across the country. These centers will conduct research and advanced training programs in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases, disorders, and complications related to aging.

The ultimate goal of the centers will be to develop critically needed academic leaders in geriatrics. Once we have those leaders, our medical schools will be able to train adequate numbers of practicing physicians and other health professionals to care for the rapidly increasing number of older Americans.

Last year, Congress expanded senior citizens' access to health care by passing the catastrophic health care bill. That's good news to our seniors.

Yet what good is expanding our older Americans' access to health care unless we are equally committed to ensuring that the care they receive is of high quality? To accomplish that, we must improve our Nation's academic training and research in geriatrics.

We have pediatricians to care for our children. Our seniors should have access to doctors who are just as interested and knowledgeable about their special health care needs.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation to help give our Nation's senior citizens the quality health care they deserve, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1544

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Centers of Excellence in Geriatric Research and Training Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) recent growth and projected growth in the number of elderly individuals in the United States raises concerns about how best to meet the health care needs of such individuals;

(2) providing high quality health care for elderly individuals requires special knowledge about the clinical syndromes and psychological changes related to aging;

(3) recent studies show that there is a serious shortage of physicians in the United States with adequate knowledge concerning geriatrics;

(4) unless positive national action is taken, the current shortage of trained geriatricians will grow even worse as the number of older Americans dramatically increases over the next several decades;

(5) the shortage of trained geriatricians is a result of inadequate training and research opportunities at all levels of medical education;

(6) although 75 percent of American medical schools currently offer elective courses in geriatrics, only about 4 percent of medical students take these courses;

(7) in the 1986-1987 academic year, there were no geropsychiatrists in advanced training in the United States and only three geriatricians in such training;

(8) in order to provide adequate health care for the rapidly increasing number of elderly Americans, it is important first to train a sufficient number of academic leaders in geriatrics who will, in turn, train sufficient numbers of physicians to care for elderly individuals;

(9) the training of geriatricians in the United States can be greatly improved by establishing centers of excellence in geriatric research and training; and

(10) such centers must have excellent faculty and support personnel as well as strong research, clinical, and educational components.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to—

(1) expand the authority of the National Institute on Aging to develop academic leaders in geriatrics; and

(2) authorize the establishment of centers of excellence in geriatric research and training to develop such leaders.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart 5 of part C of title IV of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 285e) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 445g. CENTERS OF EXCELLENCE IN GERIATRIC RESEARCH AND TRAINING.

"(a) COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS.—The Director of the Institute shall enter into cooperative agreements with, and make grants to, public and private nonprofit entities to pay all or part of the costs of the development or substantial expansion of centers of excellence in geriatric research and training. Each center developed or expanded under this section shall—

"(1) utilize the facilities of a single institution, or be formed from a consortium of cooperating institutions, meeting such research and training qualifications as may be prescribed by the Director; and

"(2) conduct—

"(A) research into the aging processes and into the diagnosis and treatment of diseases, disorders, and complications related to aging;

"(B) advanced training programs in current methods of diagnosis and treatment of such diseases, disorders, and complications;

"(C) programs to develop individuals capable of conducting research concerning aging and concerning such diseases, disorders, and complications; and

"(D) educational and training activities for students of the health professions in order to enhance the knowledge of such students in geriatrics.

"(b) EMPHASIS.—Each center developed or expanded under this section shall place primary emphasis on training of physicians to provide training in geriatrics to other physicians and to students of the health professions.

"(c) REQUIREMENTS FOR CENTERS.—In making cooperative agreements and grants under this section for the development or expansion of centers, the Director of the Institute shall provide that such centers are—

"(1) geographically distributed throughout the United States; and

"(2) located at entities with proven research capabilities.

"(d) EVALUATION.—The Director of the Institute shall evaluate on an annual basis the activities of centers developed or expanded under this section and shall on or before September 30 of each year prepare and submit, to the appropriate Committees of Congress, a report concerning the results of such evaluations.".

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 408(a) of such Art is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) For centers under section 445G, there are authorized to be appropriated—

"(A) $7,000,000 for the fiscal year 1990, which shall be available for the development or expansion of not more than five centers under such section for such fiscal year;

"(B) $11,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, which shall be available for the development or expansion of not more than seven centers under such section for such fiscal year; and

"(C) $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1992, which shall be available for the development or expansion of ten centers under such section for such fiscal year.".●

By Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mr. HEINZ, and Mr. BOND):

S. 1545. A bill to authorize the appropriation of funds for a pilot program to assist other countries in the development of their domestic industrial standards; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

PILOT PROGRAM TO ASSIST COUNTRIES IN DEVELOPMENT OF DOMESTIC INDUSTRIAL STANDARDS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today I am pleased to present to the Senate a bill which should make it possible for the United States to respond to an invitation. This invitation has been held out to us for 3 years without an appropriate response. Yet it offers an extraordinary opportunity to assure America's trading place in one of tomorrow's most promising international markets. I am speaking of the invitation by the Saudi Arabian Standards Organization to send a U.S. advisor to assist the Saudis in developing standards for thousands of products in every trading sector. The invitation was extended to other leading industrial nations as well. The Saudi enthusiasm for American involvement and for American products is emphasized by their generous offer to provide housing and transportation for an American standards advisor.

From my vantage point as a member of the Technology Assessment Board for the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment, I can tell you, Mr. President, that our ability to transfer American technology overseas is profoundly affected by the standards that are set. I can tell you that our lack of participation in this project to date has hurt us. Japan, Germany, Great Britain, France, India, the Netherlands, and even New Zealand, Finland, and Singapore have sent specialists. They have been actively involved in the Saudi program for a number of years. In the meantime, U.S. market share of Saudi imports has actually fallen from 37 percent in 1980 to 18 percent in 1987. Japan has supplied as many as six to nine specialists for many years. Today Japan has the biggest share of the market.

The American business community in the gulf has been informative and articulate about the number of trading opportunities we have lost with the gradual adoption of product standards favoring European and Far Eastern products over those produced in this country. Mr. President, our failure to advance our interests has also meant our inability to defend them as American standards are left out of a process that specifies everything from shelf life of food to the color of ground wires in air-conditioners. Just last year a General Electric shipment of gas turbine parts was held at the port of Dammam because one oil heater didn't conform to the new Saudi electrical standards.

To be sure, the Saudis are adopting many internationalized standards set by organizations in which U.S. private and public groups have representation. But these world-harmonized standards seldom define a product in its entirety, and they comprise less than 5 percent of the library of standards used most often as models by developing nations. Saudi Arabia is a growing, vibrant nation. The standards adopted by SASO are being adopted by all six member states of the Gulf Cooperation Council as they are written. In 1988, the United States had $5.7 billion in merchandise exports to the region, with $3.8 billion to Saudi Arabia alone. This trade supported 170,000 American jobs last year. From my own State of Utah, alone, we exported $3.3 million in products to the gulf states in 1988.

Legislation overwhelmingly approved by Congress last fall attempted to respond to the Saudi opportunity by authorizing the Department of Commerce to place an American representative "onsite" in a pilot project that would be funded by the private sector. Lacking funds up front, however, Secretary Verrity declined to launch the program. In the meantime, the private sector has demonstrated good faith; the American/Saudi roundtable has raised close to $200,000 for the project. Yet there is still no sign of a program underway at Commerce. There is much discussion that dances around the issue of whether this should be primarily a private or a Government initiative, especially in view of our paralyzing budget deficit.

Mr. President, I want to move us beyond this hesitation waltz by sponsoring an initiative that expressly calls for a Government role in both representation and funding. Certainly I have always opposed the practice of calling on Government to attempt what Americans better accomplish on their own, unfettered by Government. Let me explain, therefore, where I think Government has a modest, but crucial role to play in the business of harmonizing international standards. I say modest, because this bill does not call for spending a lot of money. I also say modest because I do not believe it is necessary for us to imitate the centralized and highly regulated standards clearinghouses of some of our foreign competitors. In the United States, the diversity of voluntary standard-setting procedures makes room for tomorrow's innovations, and we prefer it that way.

Today, however, the United States is involved in a world economy; and the vitality of the global economy is a key to our own prosperity. We are no longer the only big engine of progress out there; and while this involves some readjustment in our self-image, the growth of newly prosperous nations holds enormous promise for all the world. Yet the growth of an international market also means increased competition. The promulgation of product standards overseas is exploding into a powerful trade tool. Our competitors provide libraries of their standards to developing nations and fan out armies of experts to interpret them. This is a nuts-and-bolts, bread-and-butter, ground-floor route to trade, or conversely, to trade barriers.

We worry today over whether Europe's plan to integrate and standardize its market by 1992 will shut us out with a so-called fortress of specifications and standards incompatible with the United States. Fortunately, because of the dialog conducted by Secretary Mosbacher with the European commissioners and European standards bodies, American firms and standards organizations will have a chance to make their views known. The problem, however, is illustrative of the fact that European integration and the rapid development of newer economies has made Government involvement in the standards process far more crucial than it ever was in the past.

In the case of Saudi Arabia, a team approach is certainly needed. The Saudis expect a United States Government presence. Mr. Raymond Weser, director of strategic resources for Westinghouse in Europe, Africa, and the Middle East put it this way in his testimony before the House last week: "It's a government you're doing business with and governments like to work with governments." Yet the number of industry sectors are many and there are hundreds of standards within each. A Government representative would of necessity be a coordinator and conduit for our standards expertise in the private sector. Without that presence, no one industry or sector alone could or would keep such a process going. First of all, not all our industrial sectors are as yet in Saudi Arabia. Also, small business cannot afford to send its own representatives. Furthermore, trade associations cannot represent nonmembers. Finally, not every industry is flush with enough money to sustain a standards presence on every market front. Mr. Harry Lunt, chairman of ASTM Committee on Steel has noted that the private financing which permits American steelmakers to maintain representation in the International Organization for Standardization, or ISO, is "reaching the vanishing point."

Mr. President, I have supported the role of government as catalyst, facilitator, and coordinator where it is needed, such as in vital research. I believe it is time for government to become supportive of American trade in a proactive, rather than a defensive mode. The omnibus trade bill passed last year called for more competitiveness. There is much we can do that does not involve threatening our trading partners with trade sanctions while ignoring the budget deficit that is largely responsible for our troubles.

The key is investment in competitiveness at home. We have been exhorting Americans to spend less, save more, and above all, to invest in long-term productivity to make America more competitive abroad. Let us do the same with Government initiative. This project calls for a small but timely investment offering substantially high returns. The American Embassy in Riyadh has estimated that "if standards were harmonized, U.S. exports might increase by as much as $500 million per year." This would give us a minimum of 15,000 new U.S. jobs; and assuming a Federal tax payment average of only $1,000 per taxpayer, these jobs would minimally generate an additional $15 million in U.S. Government tax revenues.

Other developing nations, namely, Brazil, India, China, have invited our assistance in standards-writing and the question has been raised as to whether our response in Saudi Arabia would set a spending precedent. Perhaps so. I am told that to eventually do a thorough collaboration in the developing world and Europe would take an investment of $5 million. Yet failure to take such initiative also sets a kind of spending precedent, Mr. President. I hate to point out that in fiscal 1988 we spent over $250 million for trade adjustment assistance programs because the horse of trading surpluses had already left the barn. In the gulf, the horse is still in the barn. Failure to get this pilot project underway is to be penny wise and pound foolish indeed. It amounts to pocket change in the national till. Our competitors have dispatched standards experts to many nations.

Mr. President, the people of Utah astonish me every day with news of their international ventures—their absolutely innovative and ingenious exports in all levels of technology—to China, Brazil, the Middle East, virtually all areas of the world. It is not merely the coastal States which have a stake in world trade. We in Utah have always had a global outlook. For years we have exported our wealth and our talent without hesitation to the far reaches of the globe. We are a hard-working, frugal people and we do not shrink from leadership. We can also appreciate the challenges faced by fledgling economies because we have a strong pioneer heritage. Our productivity is still our best natural resource. So let me tell you, Mr. President, what I think the people of Utah and elsewhere expect of us. They expect Government to clear unnecessary obstacles and to help them work toward an open market overseas. Mr. President, this pilot project in Saudi Arabia is an ideal kind of investment whereby Government can facilitate American business. We must work to assure that American technology is reflected in the growing world market. We must work to assure that America remains central to the world prosperity that we have nurtured for so long.

By Mr. PRESSLER (for himself and Mr. DASCHLE):

S. 1546. A bill to authorize the planning and construction of the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

MID-DAKOTA RURAL WATER SYSTEM ACT OF 1989

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation with my colleague Senator DASCHLE to authorize the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System.

This is a water pipeline system that will bring clean drinking water to citizens in South Dakota.

For many years we have attempted to use the Missouri River water in a positive way for the citizens of our State.

After many hours of negotiation with the Governor's office and with local water groups, we are presenting this legislation. Mid-Dakota will provide clean drinking water for a large area of eastern South Dakota. It will be another step in our long struggle to get fair treatment for South Dakota.

The Mid-Dakota Rural Water System is endorsed by all affected groups in South Dakota after long negotiations. I would like to pay a special tribute to Julie Apgar, manager of Mid-Dakota Rural Water System, for her hard work and dedication to this project.

Water development in South Dakota has a long history. In the 1940's, South Dakota agreed to sacrifice over 500,000 acres of farmland for the construction of four Missouri River mainstem dams. These dams have provided hydroelectric power, flood control, and navigation for downstream States. In return for the sacrifices South Dakota made for the construction of the dams, the Federal Government made a commitment to South Dakota. That commitment was to provide water development in the State. Since coming to Congress over 14 years ago, I have continually fought for the development of South Dakota water projects. We have had some success in the area of water development during that time with the construction of the WEB project and the rehabilitation of the Belle Fourche irrigation project, but the Federal commitment to South Dakota has not been fulfilled. The authorization of the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System is an effort to obtain a partial fulfillment of the Federal commitment to South Dakota.

Mr. President, South Dakota's future is water. What good are pastures with no dependable source of drinking water? How can we promote rural development without first providing clean, safe drinking water to rural America? My goal is to see my fellow South Dakotans, from border to border, have a safe, dependable supply of drinking water.

This proposed $100 million pipeline project will serve more than 2,600 rural customers and 23 cities in 10 counties in east-central South Dakota. Many people have put years of hard work into the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System. Now they want to see the fruits of their labor realized by an understanding Congress sympathetic to their needs of good, clean drinking water.

Mr. President, I request that the text of the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System Act be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1546

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Mid-Dakota Rural Water System Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—For purposes of development of safe and adequate municipal, rural, and industrial water supplies, mitigation of wetland areas, and water conservation in South Dakota, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of the Interior the amount of $100,000,000. Such amount shall be used for planning and construction of a rural water treatment and distribution system in portions of, but not limited to, Beadle (including the city of Huron), Buffalo, Hand, Hughes, Hyde, Jerauld, Potter, Sanborn, Spink, and Sully Counties in South Dakota that will furnish water for domestic and other purposes. Such rural water treatment and distribution system is hereafter referred to in this Act as "the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System", as generally proposed by the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System, Inc. and as described in the report "Mid-Dakota Rural Water System Feasibility Study and Report", dated November 1988 and revised March 1989. The funds authorized to be appropriated by this section may be increased or decreased by such amounts as may be justified by reason of ordinary fluctuations in development costs incurred after January 1, 1989, as indicated by engineering cost indices applicable for the type of construction involved.

(b) FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary of the Interior shall use funds appropriated under this Act to provide financial assistance to plan and develop the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System under the terms and conditions of section 306 of Public Law 87-128 and the rules and regulations promulgated under that law, except to the extent such law or rules or regulations promulgated thereunder are inconsistent with the provisions of this Act. Such funds shall be made available in a combination of grants and loans as may be necessary to plan and construct the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System. Loans shall be at an interest rate of 5 percent per annum. Interest on a loan shall not be charged during construction and the first payment shall not be due until after the project is complete. Grants may exceed 75 percent of eligible development costs, regardless of median household income, if necessary to reduce user costs to a reasonable level.

SEC. 3. WATER CONSERVATION.

The Secretary may not obligate any Federal funds for the construction of the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System, until the Secretary finds that appropriate non-Federal interests have developed and implemented water conservation programs throughout the service area of the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System. The purpose of such programs shall be to ensure that such rural water systems and its customers are utilizing the best practical technology and management techniques to reduce water use and water system costs.

SEC. 4. MITIGATION OF FISH AND WILDLIFE LOSSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Mitigation for fish and wildlife losses incurred as a result of the construction and operation of the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System, shall be on an acre-for-acre basis, based on ecological equivalency, concurrent with project construction.

(b) TREATMENT OF COSTS.—Facilities and any other project features which furnish waterfowl and other fish and wildlife benefits beyond the mitigation required shall be constructed, operated, and maintained and the costs of such construction, operation, and maintenance shall be nonreimbursable and nonreturnable.

SEC. 5. USE OF PICK-SLOAN POWER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) From power designated for future irrigation and drainage pumping for the Pick-Sloan Missouri River Basin Program and subject to the conditions set forth in subsection (b), the Administrator of the Western Area Power Administration shall annually make available during the period specified in paragraph (3) the capacity and energy required to meet the pumping requirements, and operational uses incidental thereto, of the Mid-Dakota Rural Water Systems. For the purposes of this section—

(A) the term "pumping requirements, and operational uses incidental thereto," means all power requirements incident to the operation of intake facilities, pumping stations, water treatment facilities, reservoirs and pipelines to, but not beyond, the point of delivery of water by the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System to, as the case may be—

(i) each entity which distributes water at retail to individual users, or

(ii) each rural use location; and

(B) the term "rural use location" includes a water use location in or in the vicinity of a municipality identified in appendix A of the Feasibility Report referred to in section 2(a), if on December 31, 1988, no entity referred to in subparagraph (A) was engaged in the business of distributing water at retail to users in that municipality or vicinity, and there are no more than 40 water use locations in and in the vicinity of that municipality.

(2) The period referred to in paragraph (1) is the summer electrical season of the Western Area Power Administration which commences in the month of May and extends through October 1.

(b) CONDITIONS.—The availability of the capacity and energy referred to in subsection (a) is subject to the following conditions:

(1) The Mid-Dakota Rural Water System shall be operated on a not-for-profit basis.

(2) The Mid-Dakota Rural Water System shall contract to purchase its entire electric service requirements, including the capacity and energy to be made available under subsection (a), from cooperatives which purchase power from a cooperative supplier which itself purchases power from the Western Area Power Administration.

(3) The rate schedule applicable to the capacity and energy made available under subsection (a) shall be the firm power rate schedule of the Pick-Sloan Eastern Division of the Western Area Power Administration in effect when such power is delivered by the Western Area Power Administration.

(4) By contract among the Westen Area Power Administration, the power supplier with which the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System contracts under paragarph (2), that entity's power supplier, and the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System, for the capacity and energy made available under subsection (a), the benefit of the rate schedule identified in paragraph (3) shall be passed through to the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System. This requirement shall not preclude the power supplier to the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System from including in the charges to the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System for such electric service any and all other usual and customary charges.

(5) The Mid-Dakota Rural Water System shall pay its supplier for electric service, other than for capacity and energy made available under subsection (a), in accordance with that supplier's then effective applicable rate schedule.

SEC. 6. RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.

Nothing in this Act is intended, nor shall be construed, to preclude the State of South Dakota from seeking congressional authorization to plan, design, operate, or construct additional federally assisted water resource development projects.

SEC. 7. WATER RIGHTS.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to—

(1) impair the validity of or preempt any provision of State water law, or of any interstate compact governing water;

(2) alter the rights of any State to any appropriated share of the waters of any body of surface or ground water, whether determined by past or future interstate compacts, or by past or future legislative or final judicial allocations;

(3) preempt or modify any State or Federal law or interstate compact dealing with water quality or disposal; or

(4) confer upon any non-Federal entity the ability to exercise any Federal right to the waters of any stream or to any ground water resources.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr President, I rise today with my colleague from South Dakota, Senator LARRY PRESSLER, to introduce legislation to authorize the construction of the Mid-Dakota Rural Water System. The project is vitally needed to provide safe and reliable drinking water to eastern South Dakota. If authorized, Mid-Dakota would largely complete the puzzle of providing the rural drinking water needs of South Dakota.

The Mid-Dakota Rural Water System will be located in central South Dakota, east of the Missouri River. The project will pump drinking water from the Missouri River at Lake Oahe to all or portions of Beadle, Buffalo, Hand, Hughes, Hyde, Jerauld, Sanborn, Spink, and Sully Counties. The project is to service an area of more than 7,000 square miles through a series of pumps, storage tanks, and approximately 3,370 miles of buried pipe.

The Mid-Dakota Rural Water System will service an area with 18 municipalities and up to 4,900 rural hookups. The total population for the project area is more than 36,000. The bill authorizes $100 million for the construction of the project. Cost-sharing will be an integral part of the package, but the specifics of this are still being worked out by the State.

The Mid-Dakota project follows in the tradition of the WEB and Mni Wiconi pipelines. These have been ground breaking projects. They are rural drinking water systems bringing water to areas where nature does not provide either an adequate quantity or quality of drinking water. The projects are environmentally benign and they are the most cost-effective means of meeting pressing water needs.

East-central South Dakota faces the same water problems that affect north-central and western South Dakota, the areas of the WEB and Mni Wiconi projects, respectively. I will not go into detail about the water quality problems facing this primarily agricultural region, but recent surveys have showed that 42 percent of the rural wells randomly sampled in the area do not meet Safe Drinking Water Act standards for a variety of compounds. The bad water is hard to escape. The cost of a new well in the region generally runs from $15,000 to $20,000, and even these do not ensure safe water.

Over the past several years, the project sponsors have gone through the project area collecting signups for the proposed Mid-Dakota project. To signup, rural residents had to make a $35 payment. To date, more than 75 percent of the rural residents have signed up for the project, and this before a bill was even introduced. The residents do not expect free water from the government. The sponsors estimate that each rural household will have a monthly water bill in excess of $40.

Need is easy to demonstrate, but there are other aspects of the Mid-Dakota bill that I would like to highlight. The power provisions of the bill are truly ground-breaking. The bill provides a combination of low cost hydroelectric power and rural electric power supply for pumping to the rural domestic bulk water system. The agreement provides some of the much needed development under Pick-Sloan, the 1944 Flood Control and Power Act that cost South Dakota 530,000 acres of prime agricultural land beneath three main stem dams on the Missouri River. While promised irrigation benefits from Pick-Sloan have been nearly nonexistent for South Dakota, the Mid-Dakota project does help fulfill some of the promise of development under the act.

Specifically, power interests, the State of South Dakota and the Mid-Dakota sponsors have been negotiating for months on language that shifts seasonal pumping power reserved for irrigation to the rural drinking water system. The Mid-Dakota project will have the benefit of low cost Federal power in the summer months—when irrigation would have been practiced—and then purchase power from local rural cooperatives during the winter months. The consumer-owned power systems in the Pick-Sloan region view the new policy as a renewed attempt to revitalize Pick-Sloan's role in rural economic development. For Mid-Dakota, the policy means that more than $100,000 in pumping costs will be saved annually.

I believe that the power provisions in Mid-Dakota are extremely significant and could represent a procedure through much of the Pick-Sloan basin. Many individuals have worked extremely hard to set up these provisions, but I would like to specifically acknowledge the effort, patience, and spirit of compromise of three people who largely made the cooperative effort possible: Jeff Nelson of East River Electric Power Cooperative, Tom Graves of Midwest Electric Consumers Association, and Julie Apgar of Mid-Dakota.

I set stringent criteria for projects in the State that want authorization. Central to this is that the project be, at worst, environmentally neutral. Mid-Dakota goes beyond neutrality—it will provide concrete environmental benefits. The acre-for-acre mitigation standard, based on ecological equivalency, is included in the bill. Beyond this, the bill establishes the framework for using the system to enhance wetlands and wildlife habitat throughout the region. With the continuing drought, such a framework could prove extremely beneficial. Finally, the bill includes strict water conservation language mandating that water conservation programs be developed and implemented throughout project area before the Secretary of the Interior can obligate any construction funds for the project.

The Mid-Dakota project is based on consensus, innovation, and years of trial and error. I firmly believe that Mid-Dakota represents a new breed of Federal water projects, designed to address real human needs in rural America. Clean water is the necessary first step to improving the quality of life in rural America, and with it can come needed economic development. I look forward to working with my colleagues in the Senate during the months ahead to achieve passage of Mid-Dakota. It is a project I enthusiastically support, and I believe that it deserves the support of the Congress.

By Mr. BUMPERS (for himself, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. LUGAR):

S. 1547. A bill to provide special rules for health insurance costs of self-employed individuals; to the Committee on Finance.

HEALTH INSURANCE DEDUCTION FOR SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to rectify one of the most egregiously discriminatory provisions in our Federal tax law. This bill will amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to allow self-employed individuals, namely, the sole proprietors and partners in millions of America's small businesses, to deduct 80 percent of the cost of health insurance for themselves and their dependents. As chairman of the Small Business Committee, I believe it is long past time that the self-employed are placed on the same tax footing as employees of large corporations who may enjoy excellent health benefits without any tax liability.

Under the Tax Reform Act of 1986, as under prior law, an employer's contribution to a plan providing health and accident benefits is excludable from an employee's income. No similar exclusion was provided under prior law for self-employed individuals. The self-employed paid tax on their health benefits, for the most part, while employees did not. This unequal treatment cannot be justified. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 included a modest provision to rectify the large inequity in the treatment of self-employed individuals by allowing them to deduct 25 percent of the expense for health insurance for themselves, their spouse, and their dependents, but only through 1989. The Senate tax reform bill, incidentally, allowed a 50 percent deduction for these health insurance costs, while the House bill gave nothing. The conferees split the difference by allowing for a 25-percent deduction which expires at the end of 1989.

At the same time, however, the 1986 act reduced the tax deduction for personal health expenditures by raising the floor which such expenses must exceed from 5 percent to 7½ percent of a taxpayer's adjusted gross income before becoming allowable as a deduction when determining taxable income. For example, consider the case of a taxpayer who earns $40,000 a year; before the 1986 act, this taxpayer's medical expenditures must have exceeded $2,000 in a given year before any of those expenditures would be allowable as a medical deduction. After the 1986 act, however, only those medical expenditures exceeding $3,000 were deductible. Hence, much of what the Tax Reform Act gave with one hand was taken away by the other hand.

I believe that we must address the need for adequate protection from the potential ravages of health care expenses for the uninsured and underinsured citizens and their families in our country. Thirty-seven million Americans are without any kind of health insurance today. Moreover, there are 14 million self-employed people in this country. How many of those 14 million self-employed are part of the 37 million uninsured because the Internal Revenue Code makes insurance unaffordable is unclear. However, my bill will encourage the purchasing of health insurance by self-employed people. At a minimum, it will eliminate the current tax penalty imposed on self-employed individuals or unincorporated businesses that provide health insurance for these owner-operators and their families, as compared to employees of corporations.

The importance of small business to the American economy cannot be emphasized enough. During our last recession, the smallest businesses, those employing fewer than 20 people, were responsible for creating all new jobs from 1981 to 1982—a net 1 million jobs—according to the 1984 Report of the President on the State of Small Business. The 1988 report of the President states that 10.5 million new jobs were created during the period from 1980 to 1986, and of that total, 63.5 percent were created by businesses with less than 500 employees and 38.7 percent by businesses with fewer than 20 employees. Yet, just over one-quarter of the smallest firms feel they can afford to offer health coverage, compared to more than three-quarters of all corporations which do offer such coverage. Undoubtedly, this is in no small part due to the tax deduction incorporated businesses enjoy for providing health coverage for employees. The Treasury is thereby heavily subsidizing the cost of health coverage by providing tax-exempt status, and I do not quarrel with this policy. It is only fair that we demonstrate our willingness to end this discrimination and extend this opportunity to self-employed individuals who play such an active and vital part in the American economy.

According to estimates made by the Joint Committee on Taxation, my proposal to allow self-employed individuals to deduct 80 percent of health insurance costs would reduce Federal budget receipts by a total of $7.4 billion over a 5-year period, costing $800 million in the first year, 1990.

The legislation I am introducing strikes an important balance between the urgent need for this deduction and the cost of providing it. While I agree in principle with other proposals which would provide a 100-percent deduction to the self-employed, my proposal is more economically feasible. A bill calling for a 100-percent deduction would have a price tag of $1 billion in 1990 and $9.2 billion from 1990 through 1994. In the first year alone, 1990, my legislation costs $200 million less to the Treasury.

Let me make it perfectly clear that this deduction will not line the pockets of the wealthy or create a tax loophole for any wealthy corporation; it will provide a sensible approach to addressing a serious need at a modest price and benefit many of the people who are currently without any type of health coverage.

Mr. President, as a former small business owner and as the chairman of the Small Business Committee, I will continue to fight for this legislation because it is sorely needed and has been unjustly denied to many small business owners for too long. I hope my colleagues will demonstrate their support for the small business community by supporting this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD after my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1547

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SPECIAL RULES FOR HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 162(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to special rules for health insurance costs of self-employed individuals) is amended by striking "25 percent" in paragraph (1) and inserting "80 percent".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.●

By Mr. COATS:

S. 1548. A bill to amend the Controlled Substances Act to strengthen minimum imprisonment provisions for employing persons under 18 years of age in drug operations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

JUVENILES IN DRUG CRIME PREVENTION ACT

● Mr. COATS. Mr. President, the outbreak of drug-related crimes across this country is unparalleled in our history. And to me the most disturbing development in this crisis is the increasing use and involvement of young people in drug trafficking. More and more kids in their teens, and even younger, have become the pawns of cynical, calculating drug kingpins and dealers; first, as users, then as dealers, selling coke, crack, and other deadly drugs to other kids. The employment and utilization of minors in drug distribution traps our youth in an industry of addiction; stripping them of conviction, character, and even of life.

The legislation which I am introducing today addresses this problem of using juveniles in drug crimes by strengthening penalties for adults who use minors to do their dirty work. The juveniles in Drug Crime Prevention Act of 1989 would amend the Controlled Substances Act to increase minimum imprisonment provisions for employing minors in drug operations.

In title 21, United States Code, section 845B currently makes it an offense for an adult to employ, hire, use, persuade, entice or coerce a juvenile under the age of 18 to engage in drug violations under the Controlled Substance Act, or assist in avoiding detection or apprehension for such an offense. The penalty for a first offense is up to twice the term of imprisonment and twice the fine authorized for the offense. Provided that the term of incarceration must be not less than 1 year. The current penalty for a second offense is up to three times the term of imprisonment and three times the amount of the fine authorized for the offense, with the same proviso that the prison term be at least 1 year.

Section 2 of this bill would increase mandatory minimum terms of imprisonment for adults who employ persons under 18 years of age in illegal drug activities. The minimum sentence is raised from 1 year to 5 years for a first offense and from 1 year to 8 years for a second offense. This change eliminates the unjustifiable anomaly on current law whereby the mandatory minimum sentence is the same for first and repeat offenders.

In title 21, United States Code, section 845b(d) currently provides in part for imprisonment of up to 5 years for using or employing persons 14 years of age or younger in violation of the Controlled Substances Act or in avoiding detection for such a violation. Section 3 of my bill would strengthen that penalty by raising the term of incarceration to 10 years, or a fine of not more than $50,000, or both. Section 3 would also add a new minimum term of imprisonment for adults who employ very young juveniles in drug operations under the act. The minimum sentence would be fixed at 7 years for a first offense and 10 years for a repeated offense.

These changes proposed in sections 2 and 3 are appropriate both as a deterrent and as punishment. They are consistent with language in section 6454 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988—Public Law 100-690—in which the Congress directed the sentencing commission to increase penalties for drug crimes involving minors to an offense level no less than level 26. The sentencing commission recommended that such sentences fall within 63 and 78 months' imprisonment. These enhanced penalties are supported by Indiana law enforcement officials with whom my staff has consulted on this matter.

Under the Armed Career Criminal Statute, 18 U.S.C. 924(E), it is an offense punishable by at least 15 years' imprisonment for any person who has three previous convictions for a "violent felony" or a "serious drug offense," or both, to receive or possess a firearm. The Congress recognized that the violence associated with drug trafficking and other drug-related crimes is all to frequently carried out with the use of weapons. Section 6451 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 added as a new predicate offense category to the armed career criminal statute these acts of juvenile delinquency involving the use of or carrying of a firearm, knife, or destructive device that, if committed by an adult, would constitute a "violent felony." In other words, acts of juvenile delinquency that would meet the definition of a "violent felony" if committed by an adult and involve the use of dangerous weapons may now be counted toward the three required prior offenses of 18 U.S.C. 924(E).

Section 4 of my bill would amend the Armed Career Criminal Statute so that acts of juvenile delinquency that fall within the definition of a "serious drug offense" if they had been committed by an adult may also be counted toward the three predicate offenses. A serious drug offense is one punishable by imprisonment for at least 10 years.

This language is contained in section 106 of the Comprehensive Violent Crime Control Act of 1989, the President's crime control package. It is strongly supported by the Justice Department.

Mr. President, there is no greater crime than the corruption of a child—robbing them of hope and conviction by feeding a desire for illicit gain. And there is no greater cowardice than hiding drug corruption behind a shield of youth. This bill addresses this problem with the firm measures it requires. And I hope it will be quickly considered.

I request unanimous consent that the full text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1548

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Juveniles in Drug Crime Prevention Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. INCREASED MINIMUM IMPRISONMENT FOR EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONS UNDER 18 YEARS OF AGE IN DRUG OPERATIONS IN CASE OF PRIOR CONVICTION.

(a) FIRST OFFENSES.—The second sentence of section 405B(b) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 845B(b)) is amended by striking "one year" and inserting "five years".

(b) SECOND OFFENDERS.—The second sentence of section 405B(c) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 845b(c)) is amended by striking out "one year" and inserting in lieu thereof "eight years".

SEC. 3. NEW MINIMUM IMPRISONMENT FOR EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONS UNDER 14 YEARS OF AGE IN DRUG OPERATIONS.

Section 405B(d) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 845b(d)) is amended—

(1) by striking "five years" and inserting "10 years";

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively;

(3) by inserting "(1)" after "(d)"; and

(4) by adding at the end of the following new paragraph:

"(2) Except to the extent a greater minimum sentence is otherwise provided—

"(A) a term of imprisonment under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall be not less than 7 years; and

"(B) in the case of a second or subsequent violation, a term of imprisonment under such paragraph shall be not less than 10 years.".

SEC. 4. SERIOUS DRUG OFFENSES BY JUVENILES AS ARMED CAREER CRIMINAL ACT PREDICATES.

Section 924(e)(2)(A) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of clause (i);

(2) by striking "and" at the end of clause (ii) and inserting "or"; and

(3) by adding a new clause (iii), as follows:

"(iii) any act of juvenile delinquency that if committed by an adult would be a serious drug offense described in this paragraph; and". ●

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 1549. A bill to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to eliminate the requirement that manhole covers be marked on the top surface; to the Committee on Finance.

MARKINGS ON MANHOLE COVERS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in 1984 Congress amended the country-of-origin-marking law to specifically require that imported manhole covers, rings or frames, and assemblies thereof, be marked as to the country of origin on their top surface only. This was a unique requirement not applied to any other product. My constitutent,

D&L Supply Co. of Orem, UT, is an importer of municipal casting products and this company has provided ample evidence that the extra marking requirement for this particular product is both impractical and discriminatory. Because the provision is technically difficult to meet, and because a top surface marking affects the product's marketability, the 1984 provision has become, in effect, a nontariff trade barrier.

I have reviewed section 304 of the Tariff Act of 1930 and must agree that it is inconsistent with the marketing requirement for all other imported articles. It exceeds what is needed to satisfy the fundamental rationale of the law, which is to enable the ultimate purchaser to know by inspection the country of origin of that article. There does not appear to be any logical reason that this industry should be singled out for unnecessary and damaging restrictions.

The bill which I am submitting today would simply reinstate the pre-1984 requirements of the law by deleting the phase "on the top surface," from section 304(e). This will in no way exempt manhole covers from any of the other marking requirements imposed by the law.

This legislation will also correct potential conflicts with U.S. obligations under article IX of the General Agreements on Tariff and Trade, which calls for marking laws to protect consumers against misleading indications without reducing a product's value.

By Mr. GRASSLEY:

S. 1550. A bill to amend title XVII of the Social Security Act to include rural health clinics within the definition of provider services with respect to such title; to the Committee on Finance.

INCLUSION OF HEALTH CLINICS IN DEFINITION OF PROVIDER SERVICES

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill which would make it possible for rural health clinics to appeal to the Medicare Provider Reimbursement Review Board.

At this time, it is not possible for these rural health clinics to appeal to this Board. The reason for this is that these clinics are not mentioned in section 1861(u) of the Social Security Act which defines "providers of services." Therefore, they may not appeal to the Board authorized under section 1878 of the act for appeals from "any provider of services which has filed a required cost report within the time specified in regulations . . . with respect to such cost report."

According to staff at the Health Care Financing Administration, that agency may not authorize by regulation appeal rights before the Board for rural health clinics. I am informed that they believe that legislative action is necessary to authorize this.

I have been unable to discover any objection to this change, Mr. President, or any reason why we should not take this step. Rural health clinics do have provider numbers, just as do other Medicare providers. They do file cost reports with the Medicare Program. The services of such clinics are discussed in section 1861(AA)(1) of the Law.

I believe that they should be able to appeal to the Board. My bill would accomplish this by including rural health clinics in section 1861(u) which defines "providers of services."

By Mr. MATSUNAGA (for himself, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. GORE, Mr. DODD, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. PELL, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 1552. A bill to amend title VII of the Public Health Service Act to increase the support provided to programs for the training of medical rehabilitation health personnel, to establish a Division of Allied Health Professions within the Health Resources and Services Administration, to initiate a pilot program concerning allied health research, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

ALLIED HEALTH PROFESSIONALS PROMOTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I am today introducing legislation designed to alleviate the severe shortage of allied health professionals throughout our Nation. Hospitals, nursing homes, home health agencies, rehabilitation facilities, school systems, and other service providers, all are simply unable to recruit sufficient numbers of qualified personnel to provide essential services. This manpower shortage is approaching crisis proportions, particularly with respect to rehabilitation professionals, whose skills and services are highly critical in the provision of care to the elderly, the chronically ill, handicapped children, and the developmentally disabled.

Mr. President, these shortages will intensify in the years ahead unless there is a renewed Federal effort to assure the availability of an adequate number of practitioners.

I am, therefore, pleased to be joined by my forward colleagues, Senators HARKIN, ROCKEFELLER, INOUYE, GORE, DODD, RIEGLE, PELL, MOYNIHAN, and DASCHLE, in introducing the Allied Health Professionals Promotion Act of 1989. The bill would amend title VII of the Public Health Service Act to increase and target Federal support available under the act for the training of allied health professionals in short supply.

There is compelling evidence of the growing magnitude of these personnel shortages. Studies, surveys, and reports by organizations and agencies such as the American Medical Association, American Hospital Association, American Society of Allied Health Professions, the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs, the Institute on Aging, the Medicare Prospective Payment Assessment Commission, the U.S. Department of Education, and the Institute of Medicine, all underscore the seriousness of the diminishing pool of allied health personnel and the worsening outlook of the horizon. Among the fields experiencing the most acute shortages are occupational therapy, physical therapy, respiratory therapy, and speech-language pathology and audiology.

The American Hospital Association [AHA] recently completed a survey of over 7,000 hospitals nationwide to determine the extent of health care personnel shortages. This survey revealed that among allied health personnel, those with the highest full-time vacancy rates were physical therapists at 16.3 percent and occupational therapists at 14.7 percent, with vacancy rates for speech-language pathologists at 9.2 percent. The survey further revealed that a reduction in essential services was the most common consequence to these personnel shortages, with 22.4 percent of responding hospitals reducing services, 15.3 percent closing beds or units, and 12.6 percent of hospitals diverting patients.

A recently released study by the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs [VA] provided even more urgent evidence of the need for immediate action, Mr. President. The vacancy rate throughout the VA medical system for occupational therapists is now 19.1 percent, and for physical therapists, 26.3 percent.

These shortages result from a combination of factors, the main one being a surge in demand for services from a population in which more individuals survive into old age, often with chronic conditions or multiple disabilities. In addition, Mr. President, medical and technological advancements have increased the frequency of survival from accidential trauma or severely disabling conditions present at birth, thus heightening the demand for a range of services to enhance functional independence and quality of life.

Last year, 48 health care institutions in my State were sent surveys on human resources in each of 150 job categories by the Healthcare Association of Hawaii. These institutions consisted of acute care, speciality, long-term care, mixed—acute and long-term care—mental health, clinic and care homes. The findings of this study indicate that some of the major shortages are found under rehabilitation services. The vacancy rate was 19 percent for certified occupational therapy assistants, 18 percent for senior physical therapists, and 17 percent for physical therapists.

According to Dr. Patrick J. Duarte, president and chief executive officer of the Rehabilitation Hospital of the Pacific in Honolulu, HI, commenting on the unfilled positions, "There are the obvious problems of limiting the number of patients we are able to serve and decreasing to less than optional the number of length of treatment we offer to our patients." In addition, Mr. President, one of the critical problems is that our educational institutions have not been able to meet this rising demand. The allied health educational system lacks resources to expand existing programs or create new ones. There are serious shortages of qualified faculty, and student recruitment is hampered by a shrinking pool of college-age individuals. Moreover, the cost of attending health profession schools have been rising in excess of inflation. All this has occurred at a time when overall Federal support for allied health education has declined dramatically over the past 8 years.

Future projections of demand for these rehabilitation professionals show a worsening picture and underscore the need for us to take steps to avert the crisis that looms just a few years ahead. The latest data available from the Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics [BLS] indicates that between now and the year 2000, demand for physical therapists, occupational therapists, and respiratory therapists will increase by 87, 52, and 34 percent, respectively, with similar increases for other allied health professions.

Last year during our consideration of the reauthorization of title VII, the Labor and Human Resources Committee reported our legislation, S. 2229, which incorporated several proposals of mine designed to address this critical problem. I was gratified with the strong, bipartisan support that S. 2229 received both in committee and on the floor of the Senate, particularly in light of the fact that authority for allied health professions training initiatives had not been authorized for appropriations since 1980. However, the final product that emerged from the conference committee, which was incorporated into the Health Omnibus Program and Extension Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-607), fell far short of the original allied health provisions contained in S. 2229, and certainly far short of what is urgently needed to address a problem of this magnitude.

My proposal today seeks to build on the modest initiatives that were included in last year's reauthorization measure, and incorporates additional provisions designed to consolidate and focus the Federal Government's efforts in support of allied health education, training, and research. The proposed legislation also incorporates some of the recommendations contained in the Institute of Medicine's [IOM] recently completed study entitled, "Allied Health Services: Avoiding Crises," the first major independent examination of the allied health professions. It also draws upon the evidence and recommendations presented to the Labor and Human Resources Committee during our hearings last year.

The bill contains initiatives targeting Federal support to those allied health fields or specialties that are experiencing the most severe personnel shortages. In addition, it seeks to ensure that the future needs of our aging population and disabled community are met by directing support to those fields that have a significant role in the care and rehabilitation of the elderly or disabled. This legislation will assist in expanding existing allied health education programs and in creating new programs. It will help address the shortage of qualified faculty and will provide incentives for attracting individuals into key allied health professions.

Mr. President, my proposal also seeks to redress the lack of a central entity within the Federal Government to plan, oversee, and administer our allied health initiatives. With over 60 percent of our health care work force comprised of allied health professionals, we simply must strengthen and focus our efforts. Accordingly, the legislation would establish a division of allied health within the Health Resources and Services Administration's Bureau of Health Professions.

Allied health professionals share important responsibilities for the delivery of health care services. These responsibilities include services related to the prevention, identification, and evaluation of diseases and disorders, health promotion services, rehabilitation services, and health systems management services. Despite these critical roles in our health care system, Federal support for essential research in allied health is practically nonexistent.

My proposal, therefore, would establish a very modest pilot project of limited duration supporting innovative allied health reseach projects to determine which areas hold promise for the future and to explore the appropriateness and viability of an expanded Federal role in support of such research in the future.

To assist in all of these endeavors, the legislation would create an advisory council on allied health to provide the executive branch and Congress with advice and recommendations on policy matters relevant to allied health education, training, and research. This advisory council would consist of key Federal health experts including the Department of Health and Human Services' Assistant Secretary for Health, the Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration, and the Department of Veterans Affairs Chief Medical Director. In addition, the council would have members representing the allied health professions, health care facilities, health insurers, and schools of allied health.

Mr. President, the legislation which I am introducing today is strongly supported by a broad coalition of health care consumers, facilities, providers, and professional associations including the American Occupation Therapy Association, American Physical Therapy Association, American Speech-Language-Hearing Association, National Association of Rehabilitation Agencies, National Association of Rehabilitation Facilities, National Easter Seal Society, American Association for Respiratory Care, American Hospital Association Section for Rehabilitation Hospital and Programs, and the United Cerebral Palsy Association. I urge my Senate colleagues to join me in support of this measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the legislation, and a summary of the act, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1552

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Allied Health Professionals Promotion Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. REFERENCES.

Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201n et seq.).

SEC. 3. USE AND AUTHORIZATION OF PROJECT GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.

(a) USE.—Section 796(b) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 295h-5(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) The Secretary shall allocate 75 percent of the funds authorized under subsection (d) for grants and contracts made or entered into under subsection (a) to those allied health fields or specialties as the Secretary shall, from time to time, determine to have—

"(A) the most significant national or regional shortages of practitioners; and

"(B) a significant role in the care and rehabilitation of clients and patients who are elderly or disabled.".

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Subsection (d) of section 796 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 295h-5(d)) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) For the purpose of making payments under grants and contracts under subsection

(a), there are authorized to be appropriated $7,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, and $9,000,000 for fiscal year 1991.".

SEC. 4. ALLIED HEALTH STUDENT TRAINEESHIPS.

Title VII of such Act is amended by adding after section 796 (42 U.S.C. 295h-5) the following new section:

"SEC. 796A. ALLIED HEALTH STUDENT TRAINEESHIPS.

"(a) GRANTS.—The Secretary may make grants to, and enter into contracts with, public and nonpublic private schools of allied health, or other educational entities offering an allied health program, to assist students in meeting the costs of entry level education.

"(b) USE OF GRANTS.—Grants or contracts awarded under subsection (a) shall be used to assist in the payment of costs associated with tuition, fees, and such other stipends and allowances for trainees as the Secretary may consider necessary.

"(c) LIMITATION.—The Secretary shall allocate 75 percent of the funds authorized for grants and contracts made or entered into under subsection (a) to those allied health fields or specialties as the Secretary shall, from time to time, determine to have—

"(1) the most significant national or regional shortages of practitioners; and

"(2) a significant role in the care and rehabilitation of clients and patients who are elderly or disabled.

"(d) TAXATION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any payment to, or on behalf of, a participating student of tuition under this section shall be exempt from taxation.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—To carry out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, and $12,000,000 for fiscal year 1991.".

SEC. 5. ADVANCED TRAINING OF ALLIED HEALTH PERSONNEL.

Subsection (c) of section 797 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 295h-6(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For purposes of making payments under grants and contracts under subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated $7,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and $9,000,000 in fiscal year 1991.".

SEC. 6. DIVISION OF ALLIED HEALTH PROFESSIONS AND ADVISORY COUNCIL.

Subpart II of part G of such Act (42 U.S.C. 295h-4 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 798A. DIVISION OF ALLIED HEALTH PROFESSIONS AND ADVISORY COUNCIL.

"(a) DIVISION OF HEALTH PROFESSIONS.—In order to consolidate and focus the efforts of the Federal government in support of allied health education, training, and research, there is established within the Health Resources and Services Administration's Bureau of Health Professions, a Division of Allied Health Professions.

"(b) ADVISORY COUNCIL ON ALLIED HEALTH.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established within the Division of Allied Health Professions an Advisory Council on Allied Health (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'Council'). The Council shall—

"(A) meet twice annually to provide advice and make recommendations to the Secretary and to the Committees on Labor and Human Resources and Finance of the Senate and the Committees on Energy and Commerce and Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, with respect to—

"(i) the supply and distribution of allied health personnel in the United States;

"(ii) current and future shortages or excesses of allied health personnel;

"(iii) priority research needs within the allied health professions;

"(iv) appropriate Federal policies with respect to the matters specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii), including policies concerning changes in the financing of undergraduate and graduate allied health programs, changes in the types of allied health education, and the appropriate Federal role in the development of a research base in the allied health professions;

"(v) appropriate efforts to be carried out by health care facilities, schools and programs of allied health, and professional associations with respect to the matters specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii), including efforts for changes in undergraduate and graduate allied health education programs, and private support for research initiatives;

"(vi) deficiencies and needs for improvements in existing data bases concerning the supply and distribution of training programs for allied health in the United States and steps that should be taken to eliminate those deficiencies; and

"(vii) problems, and recommendations for their resolution, relating to the roles and functions of professionals within the allied health fields and other fields such as medicine and dentistry; and

"(B) encourage entities providing allied health education to conduct activities to voluntarily achieve the recommendations of the Council under subparagraph (A)(v).

"(2) COMPOSITION.—The Council shall be composed of—

"(A) the Assistant Secretary for Health;

"(B) the Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration;

"(C) the Chief Medical Director of the Department of Veterans' Affairs;

"(D) eight members appointed by the Secretary that include representatives of physical therapy, occupational therapy, speech language pathology and audiology, respiratory therapy, dietetics, clinical laboratory personnel, dental hygiene, and medical records administration; and

"(E) five members appointed by the Secretary that include representatives of schools and programs of allied health, health care facility employers of allied health personnel, health insurers, and professional organizations representing the allied health professions.

"(3) APPOINTMENT.—

"(A) TERMS.—Members of the Council appointed under subparagraphs (D) and (E) of paragraph (2) shall be appointed for a term of 4 years, or until a replacement is appointed, except that the term of office of three of the members first appointed shall expire, as designated by the Secretary at the time of appointment, at the end of 4 years.

"(B) TIME FOR APPOINTMENT.—The Secretary shall appoint the first members to the Council under subparagraphs (D), (E), and (F) of paragraph (2) within 60 days after the date of enactment of this section.

"(4) CHAIRPERSON.—The Council shall elect one of its members as Chairperson of the Council.

"(5) QUORUM.—Nine members of the Council shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may hold hearings.

"(6) VACANCIES.—Any vacancy in the Council shall not affect its power to function.

"(7) COMPENSATION.—Each member of the Council who is not otherwise employed by the United States Government shall receive compensation at a rate not greater than the daily rate prescribed for GS-18 under the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, for each day, including traveltime, such member is engaged in the actual performance of duties as a member of the Council. A member of the Council who is an officer or employee of the United States Government shall serve without additional compensation. All members of the Council shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties.

"(8) ADMINISTRATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—To carry out this section, the Council may—

"(i) collect such information, hold such hearings, and sit and act at such times and places, either as a whole or by subcommittee, and request the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents as the Council or such subcommittee may consider available; and

"(ii) request the cooperation and assistance of Federal departments, agencies, and instrumentalities, and such departments, agencies, and instrumentalities are authorized to provide such cooperation and assistance.

"(B) COORDINATION.—The Council shall coordinate activities carried out under this section with the activities of the National Advisory Council on Health Professions Education under section 702 and with the activities of the Secretary under section 708. The Secretary shall, in cooperation with the Council and pursuant to the recommendations of the Council, take such steps as are practicable to eliminate deficiencies in the data base established under section 708 and shall make available in its reports such comprehensive data sets as are developed pursuant to this section.

"(9) REPORTS.—In the reports required under paragraph (1), the Council shall specify its activities during the period for which the report is made.".

SEC. 7. ALLIED HEALTH RESEARCH PILOT PROGRAM.

Subpart II of part G of such Act (42 U.S.C. 295h-4 et seq.) (as amended in section 6) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 798B. ALLIED HEALTH RESEARCH PILOT PROGRAM.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish a 2-year pilot program to make grants to support innovative allied health research projects.

"(b) ADMINISTRATION.—The program established under subsection (a) shall be administered through the Division of Allied Health Professions, and priorities for research projects shall be developed by such division in consultation with the Advisory Council on Allied Health.

"(c) USE OF GRANTS.—Grants made under this section shall be used by the recipients to conduct innovative allied health research projects that have been determined by the Division to require support under this section.

"(d) APPLICATION.—To receive a grant under this section an entity shall submit an application at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary shall require.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section, $500,000 in fiscal year 1990, and $1,000,000 in fiscal year 1991.".

SUMMARY OF THE ALLIED HEALTH PROFESSIONALS PROMOTION ACT OF 1989

Project Grants and Contracts—Section 796 of Title VII provides that the Secretary of Health and Human Services may make grants to and enter into contracts with allied health educational entities to assist in the recruitment of individuals into allied health professions, and to assist in the improvement and expansion of available faculty and program resources. The proposed legislation would increase the existing authorization under this section from $2 million in each of fiscal years 1990 and 1991 to $7 million in fiscal 1990 and $9 million in fiscal year 1991. In addition, the Secretary will be required to direct 75 percent of the funds available for such grants to eligible entities for the purpose of supporting programs in those allied health field or specialties that have significant shortages and a significant role in the care and rehabilitation of patients and clients who are elderly or disabled.

Entry-Level Student Traineeships—The proposed legislation would create a new Section 796 (A) under Title VII to provide that the Secretary shall make grants to and enter into contracts with allied health educational entities to provide assistance to students in meeting the costs of entry level education. The Secretary will ensure that 75 percent of the funds available for such grants and contracts be directed to eligible entities for the purpose of preparing individuals to enter fields or specialties that have significant shortages and a significant role in the care and rehabilitation of the elderly and disabled. Authorized to be appropriated under this new section would be $10 million in fiscal year 1990 and $12 million in fiscal 1991.

Traineeships for Advanced Training—Section 797 of Title VII authorizes the Secretary to make grants to and enter into contracts with allied health education entities to assist them in the development and operation of doctoral programs for the advanced specialty training of allied health professionals who plan to teach and conduct research, and to provide financial assistance to doctoral students in the form of traineeships or fellowships. The current statutory language also requires the Secretary to direct grants and contracts entered into under this section to those field or specialties that have the most significant national or regional shortages of practitioners, insufficient numbers of qualified faculty, and a significant role in the care and rehabilitation of the elderly and disabled. The proposed legislation would increase the existing authorization under this section from $2 million in each of fiscal years 1990 and 1991 to $7 million in fiscal 1990 and $9 million in fiscal year 1991.

Division of Allied Health Profession and Advisory Council—The proposed legislation would create a Division of Allied Health Professions within the Health Resources and Services Administration's Bureau of Health Professions. The purpose of this Division would be to consolidate and focus federal efforts in support of allied health education, training, and research. The measure would also create an Advisory Council on Allied Health to provide advice and recommendations to the Secretary and the Congress on policy matters relevant to education, training, and research.

Pilot Program in Allied Health Research—The proposed legislation would establish a two-year pilot project to design and fund a program of grants to support innovative allied health research projects. Priorities for the research projects would be developed by the newly created Division of Allied Health in consultation with the Advisory Council on Allied Health. Authorized to be appropriated for this pilot program would be $500,000 in fiscal year 1990 and $1,000,000 in fiscal 1991.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, tremendous advances in health care technology creates new horizons—new hopes for all of us. Yet, access to these new opportunities may be substantially limited if there are not enough trained specialists to provide services to the millions of Americans who are or will be in need of such services.

There is an eminent crisis in the shortage of allied health professionals. We are all concerned about the growing shortage of nurses and the likely impact on patient care. At the same time, we must not overlook an equally grave problem—a rapidly growing shortage of physical therapists, occupational therapists, communication disorders specialists, and other allied health professionals.

More than 30 million people in the United States have communication disorders, including 22 million who have either total or partial hearing loss. Speech and language impairments are most common among children and make up the second largest category of disabilities in the public schools. Yet, the Department of Education, in its ninth annual report on the implementation of Public Law 94-142 found a shortage of more than 2,500 specially trained personnel to serve these children. Further, there has been a serious decline in graduate program faculty in communication sciences and disorders.

Physical therapists and occupational therapists are critical to the rehabilitation process of individuals of all ages who are physically, psychologically or developmentally disabled, including those suffering from strokes, heart disease, arthritis, diabetes, disabling injuries, neurological disorders, serious burns, spinal cord injuries, and psychiatric disorders. Current estimates predict that each year, there will be an additional shortage of more than 1,300 physical therapists. There is, currently, a nationwide shortage of occupational therapists of at least 32 percent. Academic training programs for both physical and occupational therapists are unable to keep up with the demand.

As the population ages, the demand for allied health professionals will become greater. Those people most adversely affected are people living in smaller, more rural areas—many in my own State of Iowa—because that is where shortages of health care professionals are felt first and hardest.

Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator MATSUNAGA in introducing legislation which will increase existing authorization for allied health training. This legislation targets training programs in shortage areas and emphasizes rehabilitation services for people who are elderly or disabled. I urge the Congress to act swiftly to enact it, thus assuring adequate and appropriate health and rehabilitative services to all Americans.

By Mr. COATS (for himself, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. DOLE, Mr. ROTH, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. BOND, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. WARNER, Mr. MACK, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. GORTON, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. WILSON, Mr. BURNS, Mr. GARN, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. LOTT, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. HATCH, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. THURMOND, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, and Mr. PRESSLER):

S. 1553. A bill to grant to power to the President to reduce budget authority; pursuant to the order to August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

LINE-ITEM VETO

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, a few years ago the chief economist for the Office of Management and Budget admitted, "You just don't see people running through the streets to have the deficit cut."

An obvious point, but one that gets to the core of the deficit problem. It's time the Congress confessed to something everyone else knows already. The deficit was one whirling, thunderous adventure to create: all those new agencies and popular votes—with plenty of credit to go around. But controlling the deficit, on the other hand, could only inspire visions in the most committed accountant.

The problem of spectacular disregard for responsible limits—the exciting failure of legislative overreach—will be solved by measures that have all the drama of watching someone balance their checkbook.

Self-discipline is never exciting—only essential. And in this case we have everything at stake—what Jefferson called the stark choice between "economy and liberty, or profusion and servitude."

But now the Congress has been asked by the Department of the Treasury to increase the public debt limit by tens of billions of dollars—to a level well over the $2.8 trillion debt limit we set. Most taxpayers don't realize it, but the Treasury must ask for legal authority to continue its yearly borrowing against our children's future. And now that figure is nearly $3 trillion.

The Congress, charged with the public trust—as well as its tax money—has an awesome responsibility to tame the deficit. But so does the President. Voters hold him responsible for spending, and cast their votes based on the cuts he promises. Yet, in reality, the President is left with very little authority to control deficit spending. And before we criticize him, or any other recent President, we need to consider what exactly he can do.

The President submits his annual budget, which the Congress largely ignores. He also submits rescissions, or spending cuts, which the Congress rarely enacts. Despairing of a lack of other options, many cry for tax increases to fund more and more spending. But there is, or course, another option. Why not do the obvious and give the Executive real power to trim congressional excesses?

It's for this reason I'm pleased to introduce today the Legislative Line-Item Veto Act of 1989, aimed at helping to restore fiscal responsibility to the budget process by beefing up the President's power to cut spending.

Rescission, simply put, is the budgetary term for prudent second thoughts. Under the current law—title X of the Budget Control and Improvement Act of 1974—the President can propose to Congress that previously allotted budget authority be rescinded whenever the President determines it is excessive. For the President's rescission to take effect, it has to be approved by a joint resolution of Congress within 45 days of submission. All Congress needs to do to veto the President's action is ignore it.

That is just a little too convenient for a Congress prone neither to restraint nor to quick action. It guts rescission of its power.

But our bill, developed by myself, Senator MCCAIN, Senator DOLE, Senator ARMSTRONG, and Senator HUMPHREY—and cosponsored by 27 more of my colleagues—changes the burden of action. A new title would be added to the Budget and Impoundment Act of 1974 to allow Presidential rescissions, sent up at the same time the President submits his annual budget, to take effect in 20 days unless Congress specifically disapproves of it in a joint resolution.

Our bill would also add a provision allowing the President to cut spending from any appropriations bill he has signed into law, within 20 days of having done so. Again, Congress would have 20 days to act to disapprove the proposed cuts. If legislative inertia sets in, then so will the cuts.

The President of the United States manages the largest budget in the world, yet has less control over that budget than any corporate chief executive or the Governors of most States. The time has come to give the President the tools he needs to rescind unnecessary expenditures.

Congress would still be able to disapprove proposed rescissions by a simple majority vote if it felt that spending was necessary. But Congress would no longer be able to evade its responsibilities by simply avoiding a vote altogether—hiding behind a shield of indecision. This legislation would force Congress to put itself on the record when it comes to Government spending. And it would shift the burden of proof to Congress. If we in the Congress wish to overturn a Presidential cut aimed at pork or budgetary fat, we have to put our votes on the line.

This legislative line-item veto doesn't quit quicken the pulse like a New Deal, a New Frontier or a Great Society. But in the next few years we must learn to become heroic champions for the boring necessity of self-restraint. There may be more blame than credit, but the stakes are too high to fail. And this bill is a fine place to start.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I am delighted to join with Senator COATS in sponsoring the Legislative Line-Item Veto Act of 1989.

I have made this proposal a priority of mine for quite a while. Earlier this session, other like minded proposals were introduced, but now we have all pulled together with this single approach that we have all agreed upon. This piece of legislation is the result of many hours of hard work in which we have been joined by the Senators ARMSTRONG and HUMPHREY as well as the distinguished Republican leader. In my view, the Legislative Line-Item Veto Act achieves the goals that anyone who supports the line item veto or enhanced rescission has in mind. It is a strong, well balanced bill which will lend new credibility to our budget process when it is enacted.

It would do so by addressing a frustration that is universally shared by taxpayers across the country: The time honored practice of pork barrel spending.

We all know of congressional "pork" that has been added to appropriations bills. These wasteful expenditures cannot be justified on their merits, and they destroy public confidence in Congress' ability and willingness to get serious about deficit reduction. This kind of pork barrel spending is fiscally irresponsible, and the President has no effective defense to stop it. It is also continuing to undermine public confidence in our institution—confidence which is tragically at an all time low.

Nevertheless, in spite of these realities, Congress Can't resist spending billions of dollars on pork. Year in and year out, Congress squanders the taxpayer's money without any having to answer for its profligacy.

And the taxpayer, who, on average worked over 2 hours a day just to pay his or her annual tax bills—whose paychecks from January until May are just enough to cover his or her tax liability—has no choice but to foot the bill.

The problem is that our budget process doesn't require us to be thrifty and conscientious with the money that is entrusted to us—the process is broke. We get away picking the taxpayers' pockets with one hand while handing goodies from the pork barrel to the special interests at home.

There can be no doubt that it is time we adopt a budget tool that will force us back in line; that will force us to spend the taxpayer's money prudently; and that will help fix this budget process that is so clearly flawed. That budget tool is the legislative line item veto.

And, in case anyone is in doubt about this, Mr. President, just think about the things on which we squander the taxpayer's money: Army trucks the Army doesn't want, sonar catfish counters, belgian endive research, studies on peach trees, and beaver damage to trees.

The list goes on and on and on.

How can we fall short on drug enforcement funds but manage instead to buy surplus sunflower oil—and a private underwater lab?

How can we tell the young couple, both of whom work long hours and who are trying to save for that down payment on their first home, that we are using their hard earned dollars to pay for a study on milk consumption? And to battle maple sap line damage done by squirrels and rats?

With 100 Senators and 435 Congressmen all rushing to make sure their States and districts get their shares of Federal funds, is it any wonder that Congress has been unwilling and unable to keep a lid on spending?

Obviously not.

We lack discipline. No one can make us resist the temptation to indulge in pork.

We are spending addicts and we can't admit it.

We can't "just say no."

We need help, Mr. President, and the measure we are introducing today is exactly what we need to help us say "no" to pork barrel spending.

We also need to enact this bill in order to ensure that we focus on funding priorities like the war on drugs, housing for the homeless, and education, instead of automated tide gauges and research on new methods of producing tailored clothing.

Let me explain the measure we are presenting now. It is simple because it is based on an idea that has been a household term for most of this decade—the line-item veto. The majority of Americans support the line item veto, Mr. President, because it enables the President to get to the very line items of wasteful special interest spending that embarrass us whenever we pass an appropriations bill.

Let me explain how this works. Very simply, it gives the President two opportunities every year to strike out wasteful spending. First, he can line item veto out pork within 20 days after signing a spending. Second, he can submit rescissions with his budget proposal in the beginning of the year, just in case there are provisions that he misses in the first go around.

In either case, Congress has 20 days to decide whether to overturn those line item vetos or accept them. If we feel the spending on its own merits, we adopt a joint resolution disapproving the rescissions. If Congress doesn't act, the waste the President has identified is erased—and the taxpayer's money is saved.

A President armed with the legislative line item veto embodied in this bill can force Congress to face up to the responsibilities of the power of the purse.

A President so armed can make a profligate Congress a responsible Congress.

Mr. President, that's what the American people want, and we owe it to them to give this amendment our whole-hearted support. I am pleased to say that this bill already has over 30 cosponsors as well as support from the President. I strongly urge the rest of my colleagues—if they are serious about combating unnecessary spending and reaching the Gramm-Rudman target of a balanced budget in 1993—to support giving the President of this country the power that 43 Governors already have and use successfully—the line-item veto.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, if we are ever to restore fiscal sanity to our Nation, we must make Congress more accountable for its decisions to spend taxpayer dollars. A corporation is accountable to its stock holders, an employee is accountable to his employer, a man is accountable to his God, and so, my colleagues, must the Government of this Nation be accountable to those it governs.

I rise today to voice my strong support for a budget process reform that is long overdue. The Coats-McCain Legislative Line Item Veto Act of 1989 would inject some fiscal discipline into a process that is badly in need of medical attention. This legislation would strengthen the executive power of the President to control Federal spending. Specifically, it would enhance the President's ability to cancel unnecessary spending.

Under current law, the President may propose to Congress that previously appropriated budget authority be rescinded. But, a proposed rescission does not take effect unless Congress specifically approves it by joint resolution within 45 calendar days. Congress can simply ignore rescissions and kill these proposed savings by inaction—Congress' speciality.

This legislation would insert a new title into the Budget and Impoundment Act of 1974 to reverse this presumption and make inaction work to the benefit of budgetary savings. It would provide that proposed rescissions take effect unless specifically disapproved by Congress by joint resolution. The current veto by inaction would be replaced by a requirement that Congress step up to the plate and openly reject proposed savings, if that is its determination. In other words, it increases our accountability.

In case there are still some of my colleagues who believe Congress does not need any injection of fiscal discipline—in case there is even a single Member left who believes we always spend taxpayer dollars wisely—I would like to list just a few of the highlights of our recent spending history. When Senators hear these items, I hope they ask themselves how their constituents would react if they were here on the Senate floor: $100 million for the Small Business Administration's direct business and disaster loans which have funded projects such as a homosexual bathhouse, an x-rated book store, and a $200,000 yacht; $43 million for the Asian Develoment Bank, using tax dollars to subsidizes overseas competitors; $82 million to pay for "blanket mailings" to the home districts of Members of Congress; $20 million for sunflower and cottonseed oil; $706,000 for fishing gear entanglement research; $1.4 million for an Arkansas catfish farm; $764,000 for the District of Columbia's Lottery and Charitable Games Enterprise Fund; $200,000 for crawfish and redfish production research; $285,000 for a milk consumption study; and $500,000 to bring foreign politicians to study the U.S. Congress.

Mr. President, this is only a small portion of a dismayingly long list. It is enough, however, to make the point that our record is less a "Hall of Fame" than a "Not-So-Little Shop of Horrors."

How could such spending decisions occur? How can the International Coffee Organization get $540,000 of taxpayer money? The answer is quite simple, really. The President of the United States presides over the largest budget in the world and yet has less executive control over that budget than the chief executive of a business or most State Governors.

Unfortunately, the rescission power as currently drawn has more often than not been ineffective in allowing the President executive control over spending. Since 1975, Congress has rejected more than $32 billion in proposed savings that three Presidents determined were necessary. In most years since the power has existed, only a fraction of proposed Presidential rescissions have been granted.

The Budget and Impoundment Act of 1974 severely restricted Presidential authority over appropriated funds, while establishing what most believed would be a budget process creating incentives for Congress to control fiscal policy. After more than a decade's experience, it is clear that spending money is still the main incentive in Congress. The time has come to reestablish a greater role for the President in the budget process. Under this legislation, Congress would still have the opportunity to reject a Presidential rescission if it insists on spending the funds in question. What Congress could not do is simply ignore the proposal and allow billions to be spent that our Nation's Chief Executive believes should be saved.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table detailing the historical data on proposed Presidential rescissions be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

NA—Nonapplicable.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, I began this battle almost a decade ago, in February of 1981, with a bill to reverse the operation of the provision on rescission. In 1983, Senator Russell Long and I joined forces to trigger an enhanced rescission power on a quarterly basis. We came painfully close to success, and our amendment to the Oympic Duty Resolution was tabled by a vote of 49 to 46. Since then, I have brought this issue before the Senate in 1985, 1987, and earlier this session. Today, I voice support for a proposal that is the best effort of a number of Senators concerned with restoring fiscal sanity to this Nation. The Legislative Line Item-Veto Act of 1989 is both sound and necessary budgetary policy. I urge Senators to go home over the recess and ask their constituents whether the legislative line-item veto is needed. There is a rule around here that a bad idea can get enacted into law very quickly, but it often takes years for a very worthwhile law to gain favor. This is an idea whose time has finally come.

In closing, I would like to leave my colleagues with one final thought. Thomas Jefferson, a man whose wisdom has made him famous through two centuries, once stated, "The greatest security against the introduction of corrupt practices and principles into our government is to make [them keep] * * * public expenditures down to their minimum."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, this legislation is a major initiative to control spending. I support it enthusiastically.

The time is ripe to move on proposals which would increase the President's power to rescind funds appropriated by Congress. The bill would allow the President to target specific programs to be rescinded. Congress would have 20 days from receipt of those proposals to take action to disapprove the rescissions. Failing action, rescissions would go into effect.

The legislation is the product of several months work on the part of many Senators interested in effecting meaningful budget reform. Today, I joined Senators ARMSTRONG, MCCAIN, and COATS at a meeting with President Bush regarding this bill. I am pleased to report to the Senate that the President enthusiastically endorses this proposal.

When Congress created the Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, it established a relatively weak rescission mechanism. The President could propose a rescission—either reducing or eliminating items appropriated—but the rescission would be implemented only if approved by Congress. By sheer inaction, Congress can kill a Presidential rescission request.

As Allen Schick, a budget scholar, said: "The outcomes of rescissions (and deferrals) proposed since 1975 provide conclusive evidence that the branch that prevails in case of legislative inaction has the upper hand." The bill being introduced today reverses this situation by allowing rescissions to go into effect unless disapproved by Congress.

Congress' track record on approving rescissions has been predictable. Of all the rescissions President Reagan promised from 1983-88, Congress approved a mere 2 percent. Only 7 percent of President Ford's rescissions were approved, and less than 40 percent of President Carter's were approved.

The amount of money involved over the years in rescissions proposed by the President and not approved by Congress is significant. Of $8.6 billion in rescissions proposed by President Ford, Congress rejected $6 billion; Congress rejected $2.1 billion in rescissions proposed by President Carter; and Congress rejected $26.6 billion of President Reagan's rescissions. Over 13 years, nearly $35 billion of rescissions requested by three Presidents were rejected—through inaction—by the Congress.

The legislation will put teeth in the rescission process. It is a significant step forward toward budget reform. I urge my colleagues to give it thoughtful and careful consideration.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for the legislation being introduced today to provide the President with enhanced rescission authority. As one who led the debate in 1974 to provide the President with greater authority to rescind unnecessary funding, I believe this type of legislation is more necessary than ever.

It is clear that our present efforts to significantly reduce the deficit have failed. This is made all the more clear as we will soon consider an extension of the debt limit to $3 trillion. If ever there was a time for spending restraint, now is it.

Mr. President, I believe this legislation is necessary to break a pattern of budget deficits and spending growth beyond our means. Between 1980 and 1988 Federal revenues jumped 76 percent. Federal spending grew at a faster rate. The source of our deficit is not that America is undertaxed, but that the Federal Government spends too much. It is critical that we restrain spending growth. And I strongly believe that we should provide the President with this enhanced rescission authority if other means fail to cut the deficit.

In his budget message to Congress, President Bush expressed his support for enhanced rescission authority. While the President can now rescind spending, this authority is quite limited. Under the present process, Congress can simply reject the President's rescissions by inaction. Unfortunately, this allows the Congress to easily disregard the President's efforts.

Since the Budget Act was enacted, all too many times the Congress has used inaction to block the President's rescissions. I believe the President is entitled to an up-or-down vote by Congress. This is the minimum we must do in the quest for fiscal responsibility. And this is precisely what this legislation does.

Mr. President, I would like to point out to my colleagues that I have introduced similar legislation, S. 829, the Deficit Reduction Guarantee Act. This legislation also provides the President with enhanced rescission authority, but instead of providing the authority immediately, the authority is tied to the ability of the Congress and the President to reduce the deficit.

The triggering mechanism in S. 829 is the amount of Federal debt held by the public as published by the Department of Treasury. This debt increases approximately by the amount of the unified budget deficit. Under the provisions of S. 829, once the Federal Government surpasses a level in the Federal debt held by the public, the President is provided with enhanced rescission authority.

This public debt trigger is tied to the Gramm-Rudman targets. If the Congress and President succeed in meeting the targets through 1993, the enhanced rescission authority under S. 829 will not be activated. If the Government fails to meet the targets, the debt will exceed the trigger, and the authority will be activated.

The net result is that the President is given enhanced rescission authority if other procedures continue to fail. This authority would be on the same terms that he has constitutional authority to veto legislation in its entirety. Enactment of this bill will be a valuable tool in guaranteeing the fiscal discipline the Federal Government sorely lacks and pushing the Federal deficit down.

I support enhanced rescission authority for the President. I urge my colleagues to look at the bill we are introducing today, as well as the approach outlined in S. 829.

By Mr. REID:

S. 1554. A bill to ratify and implement water settlements involving the Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe, the States of California and Nevada and other parties regarding the waters of the Truckee and Carson Rivers and Lake Tahoe in Nevada and California, to provide for enhancement of endangered and threatened species, and to preserve valuable wetlands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

TRUCKEE-CARSON-PYRAMID LAKE WATER RIGHTS SETTLEMENT ACT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Truckee-Carson-Pyramid Lake Water Settlement Act.

This legislation evolved from extensive negotiations to develop a solution to the shrinking supplies of water in the West, particularly in areas of Nevada and California. The problem of water availability is mounting toward crisis proportions. This bill describes the means by which scarce water resources will be allocated.

The legislation will accomplish several objectives. It will equitably allocate waters in the Carson River, Lake Tahoe, and the Truckee River Basins between Nevada, California, and the Pyramid Lake Pauite Tribe.

The bill will implement water supply agreements that will provide 40 years of drought protection for the citizens of Reno and Sparks in western Nevada.

The bill will improve water supplies and enhance recovery efforts for endangered and threatened species in the Truckee River and Pyramid Lake.

Additional supplies of fresh water for valuable wetlands in Nevada's Lahontan Valley will be provided for with this legislation.

The bill also seeks to settle outstanding claims against the Federal Government and State governments, thus ending decades of litigation.

The Truckee-Carson-Pyramid Lake Water Settlement Act is the outgrowth of 2½ years of negotiations. The parties involved in this process include the States of California and Nevada, the Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe and other water users on the Truckee and Carson River systems.

The negotiations are only the latest attempt to end the water wars surrounding these two small but vital desert rivers. These two bodies of waters have been the focus of water wars spanning decades—battles have been waged since the turn of the century, and they continue to this day. My legislation represents a final truce to these longstanding disputes.

Since 1909, wars have raged over water rights, water quality standards, endangered fish species, and overall management of federal reclamation projects on the rivers.

Over the years, dozens of lawsuits have engaged every significant water rights holder and agency in a quest for their share of the region's water resources.

This legislation does not represent the first effort to reach a negotiated settlement of the conflict surrounding the Truckee and Carson Rivers and Lake Tahoe. Californians and Nevadans argued over the waters of Lake Tahoe, which straddles the State border, as far back as the 1880s.

In the late 1950's, California and Nevada embarked upon serious negotiations to divide up the waters of the Walker, Carson, and Truckee Rivers, and Lake Tahoe. The two States eventually emerged with an agreement in 1970, but continued controversy over the terms of the agreement blocked its final approval.

Our recent negotiations reached back to this 1970 agreement, and used the allocations for the Carson River, Truckee River, and Lake Tahoe Basins as the basis of our approach. We tried to build on past accomplishments.

The intergovernmental allocations contained in this bill are not fully agreed upon by the interested parties. Consensus has been reached on about 80 percent of the issues, but there are still critical decisions that must be made. Provisions that have been agreed to include appropriate statutory language. In the case of unresolved issues, the parties have been mandated to continue their negotiations. Parameters are established for conducting these negotiations.

I am optimistic that the remaining negotiations on the intergovernmental allocation of the waters of the Truckee and Carson Rivers and the Lake Tahoe basin will be completed in an expedient manner. The final decisions arising from those negotiations will then be incorporated in this legislation.

Despite the incompletion of some aspects of these negotiations, I chose to introduce the legislation today so that we can begin our consideration of the bill. This is complicated legislation dealing with complicated problems. I have no doubt that we in Congress will need the remaining months of this session to consider the bill and its many ramifications.

As I previously mentioned, this bill is ambitious. It accomplishes a great deal and will mark progress on issues that have been dragged out year after year, decade after decade.

In addition to provisions I have already mentioned, the legislation will provide a guaranteed drought year reserve in Stampede Reservoir. This will benefit the cities of Reno and Sparks in Nevada, while concurrently providing more beneficial water supplies for endangered species inhabiting the Truckee River and Pyramid Lake.

The water purveyor for Reno and Sparks and the Pyramid Lake Tribe reached an historic agreement earlier this year under which the cities of Reno and Sparks will gain drought protection for the next four decades. This agreement did not come easily. It required significant sacrifices. But the sacrifices will be well worth it. When this agreement is implemented, the quality of life for Reno and Sparks residents will be greatly improved both at the time of approval and for years to come.

The legislation also proposes action to save irreplaceable wetlands in the Lahontan Valley. Only a few years ago, 50,000 acres of viable wetlands graced the region at the terminus of the Carson River. The most prominent of these wetlands was the Stillwater National Wildlife Refuge. Stillwater and adjacent wetland areas comprise critical parts of the Pacific Flyway and the National Shorebird Refuge System.

Today, what was once 50,000 acres of wetlands has shrunk to only about 3,000 acres. Much of what is left of these glorious wetlands has succumbed to toxic waters. The very waters that whole species of our wildlife depend on for survival are drying up, and what remains is a concentration of poisons. This is a tragedy, but we can still reverse the damage and restore the wetlands. My legislation gives us the means to do that.

President Bush has called for no net loss of this country's wetlands. Many of my colleagues in the Senate have joined me in sponsoring a national wetlands bill, introduced by the distinguished majority leader.

My legislation allows us to take action on our stated commitment to save and revitalize the wetlands. My bill authorizes $16 million over 4 years to purchase water for the Lahontan Valley wetlands, thereby saving a national resource that, once gone, can never be restored.

The bill also contains a provision stating that, within 2 years of its enactment, the Secretary of the Interior will be required to recommend to Congress possible transfers of existing Lahontan Valley wetlands to a permanent U.S. national wildlife refuge. Creation of a national refuge for specifically identified wetlands areas would make permanent the Federal Government's role and responsibility in maintaining the wetlands. Any decisions made in this regard will require congressional approval.

This legislation also benefits the endangered and threatened species in the Truckee River and Pyramid Lake. Agreements associated with this bill improve the timing of spawning flows in the Truckee River. Additional water supplies are also provided to Pyramid Lake from Federal lands surrounding Fallon Naval Air Station. Finally, the bill mandates that the Fish and Wildlife Service complete a recovery program for the endangered cui ui and threatened Lahontan cutthroat trout.

The Pyramid Lake fishery's problems began with the construction of the Newlands Irrigation project early this century. To serve the irrigation needs of the Newlands agricultural lands, substantial amounts of water were diverted from the Truckee River, which feeds Pyramid Lake. As a result of this water diversion, Pyramid Lake suffered a precipitous drop—a drop to a level where the indigenous cui ui could not even enter the river mouth to spawn.

The inability to spawn, coupled with the increasing level of pollutants in the Truckee River water that did actually make it to the lake, effectively decimated both the cui ui and the Lahontan cutthroat trout.

In 1970, the Secretary of the Interior reacted to the listing of the cui ui as an endangered species by restricting the use of the waters stored in Stampede Reservoir. The reservoir had been built in part to supply Reno and Sparks, and was now being restricted—to be used only for the exclusive benefit of the endangered fish.

Despite this action, the cui ui is still an endangered species. We clearly need to do more if the species is to recover. This bill addresses that important need.

The legislation also settles several outstanding claims against the Federal Government and State government. Passage of this bill would mean the end to years of protracted and costly litigation. Millions of dollars will be saved in litigation costs alone.

The bill also provides for an economic development fund for the Pyramid Lake Tribe, and authorizes negotiations between the Federal Government and the Fallon Paiute-Shoshone Tribe. Such negotiations would be aimed at settling outstanding water claims that the tribe has against the Government.

Mr. President, this legislation and its associated agreements affords us the best opportunity in years to stop the water wars over the Truckee and Carson River systems. There have been many losers in this war. And there will be many more if we do not enact this legislation.

One of the more significant losses is that suffered by our wetlands and wildlife. Where there were once scores of thousands of acres of luxuriant wetlands and millions of shorebirds and waterfowl, there are now only stagnant pools.

I conducted a hearing on the plight of the wetlands in Reno. At that hearing, the director of the Nevada Department of Wildlife gave a stark assessment of the threatened wetlands. He said: "If the Lahontan Valley wetlands are lost, it will be the greatest natural resource disaster in this century in Nevada."

The additional actions provided for in this legislation are the best hope for recovery of our endangered species.

The losses in the water wars are also felt strongly by the residents of Reno and Sparks. These people are totally dependent upon the flow of the Truckee River for their water supply. As we have discovered in the last 2 years, there is no flexibility in the water supply during dry years. Unless additional drought year supplies of water are provided for Reno and Sparks, the people living there will be forced to confront frequent droughts and ever greater restrictions on their water supplies.

The residents of California and Nevada will continue to lose ground in this water war. There can be no true cooperation between neighbors until our water differences are settled and certainty of supply is provided to state and local governments.

Joining all those who have suffered defeats in the water wars are the taxpayers. Continued litigation between the municipal governments, State governments, the Federal Government and the Pyramid Lake Indians have cost and are continuing to cost millions of dollars. Without an agreement, it is likely that millions more will be spent as all sides wrangle over these issues in court.

It is clear that we will continue to suffer greater and greater losses if these water wars continue. I fear that, before long, the wars will take a devastating toll on the residents, wildlife, and environment.

We must try to bring an end to the water wars. That is why I have worked with the parties directly involved to reach a settlement. We have worked together for 2½ years. Our extensive effort has culminated in the legislation introduced today.

We are ready to present the fruits of our labor to Congress. Our proposal and our progress depends on congressional approval. I intend to enlist the support of my California colleagues and others who believe that, through cooperation, we can solve these problems. Much remains to be done, but I am hopeful that, with the passage of this legislation, we will complete the long, arduous journey toward our destination—an ending to the water wars and a beginning of the fair allocation of scarce water resources.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and the "Preliminary Settlement Agreement" be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1554

SEC. 1. This Act may be cited as the "Truckee-Carson-Pyramid Lake Water Rights Settlement Act."

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND UNDERSTANDINGS.

The Congress finds that this Act and associated agreements—

(1) further the goals of the Endangered Species Act as concerns species dependent upon water from the Truckee and Carson Rivers;

(2) are consistent with federal goals to protect valuable national wetlands from further environmental degradation and protect the habitat of many species of wildlife dependent upon these wetlands;

(3) provide for settlement of outstanding claims against the Federal Government and state governments and help to end decades of litigation;

(4) provide for the equitable apportionment of the waters of Lake Tahoe and the Truckee and Carson Rivers to promote intergovernmental cooperation and comity between the States of California and Nevada and to provide certainty to the administration of their respective water rights law;

(5) help to reduce the effects of drought conditions on the citizens of western Nevada, and

(6) provide water for the citizens of California for their use within the Carson, Tahoe and Truckee Basins.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior;

(2) the term "Tribe" means the Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe;

(3) the term "Preliminary Settlement Agreement" means the agreement signed by the Tribe and Sierra Pacific Power Company on May 23, 1989.

(4) the term "Operating Agreement" means the agreement described on page 24, paragraph (f) of the Preliminary Settlement Agreement.

(5) the term "Lower Truckee River" means the Truckee River below Derby Dam.

(6) the term "Alpine Decree" means the final decree of the United States District Court for the District of Nevada in United States of America v. Alpine Land and Reservoir Company, Civil No. D-183, entered December 18, 1980, and any supplements thereto.

(7) the term "Orr Ditch Decree" means the decree of the United States District Court for the District of Nevada in United States of America v. Orr Water Ditch Company, et al.—in Equity, Docket No. A3.

(8) the term "Orr Ditch Court" means the court having continuous jurisdiction over the Orr Ditch Decree.

(9) the term "Truckee River Agreement" means a certain agreement dated July 1, 1935 and entered into by the United States of America, Truckee-Carson Irrigation District, Washoe County Water Conservation District, Sierra Pacific Power Company, and other users of the waters of the Truckee River and is incorporated in the Orr ditch decree.

(10) the term "Pyramid Lake Fishery" means the two primary species found in Pyramid Lake, the cui-ui (Chasmistes cujus) and the Lahontan cutthroat trout (Salmo clarki henshawi).

(11) the term "Lake Tahoe Basin" means the drainage area naturally tributary to Lake Tahoe, including the Lake, and including the Truckee River upstream of the intersection between the Truckee River and the western boundary of Section 12, Township 15 North, Range 16 East Mount Diablo Base and Meridian.

(12) the term "Truckee River Basin" means the area which naturally drains into the Truckee River and its tributaries and into Pyramid Lake, including that Lake, but excluding the Lake Tahoe Basin.

(13) the term "Carson River Basin" means the area which naturally drains into the Carson River and its tributaries and into the Carson River Sink, but excluding the Humbolt River drainage area.

(14) the term "Federal Water Master" means the individual appointed by the United States District Court of Nevada to carry out and enforce the provisions of the Orr Ditch Decree and the instructions and orders of the Court pertaining to the decree.

(15) the term "Truckee River General Electric Decree" means the decree entered June 4, 1915, by the United States District Court for the Northern District of California in United States of America v. Truckee River General Electric Co., No. 14861, which case was transferred to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California on February 9, 1968, and is now designated No. S-643.

(16) the term "Truckee River General Electric Court" means the Court having continuing jurisdiction over the Truckee River General Electric Decree.

TITLE I—INTERSTATE WATER APPORTIONMENT PROVISIONS

SEC. 101. THE CARSON RIVER.

(a) CONFIRMATION OF COURT ALLOCATION.—The interstate allocation of waters of the Carson River and its tributaries represented by the Alpine Decree is confirmed.

(b) FURTHER ALLOCATIONS.—(1) In addition to the allocations referred to in subsection (a), the States of California and Nevada are further allocated sufficient water from the Carson River and its tributaries to serve beneficial uses which are not encompassed in the Alpine Decree and were initiated prior to the effective date of this Act. The total amount of water allocated by this subsection shall not exceed 1,500 acre-feet per annum by depletion for use in California and 2,131 acre-feet per annum by depletion for use in Nevada.

(2) RIGHT TO COMPENSATION FOR DISCONTINUANCE.—If all or any portion of the effluent imported from the Lake Tahoe Basin into the watershed of the Carson River in California on or after the effective date of this Act is discontinued by reason of the disposal of such effluent, including underground disposal, within the Truckee River basin or the Lake Tahoe Basin, the allocation to California of the waters of the Carson River and its tributaries for use in California shall be augmented by an amount of water which will compensate California for any such discontinuance; provided that any such augmentation shall be for use only on lands to which rights decreed by the Alpine Decree are appurtenant; and, provided further, that nothing in this Act shall be construed to prohibit the continued use of all or any portion of such effluent on lands within California.

(c) APPLICATION OF STATE LAWS.—Nothing in this section shall preclude application of the laws of the State relating to abandonment or forfeiture of water rights for nonuse.

(d) VOLUNTARY INTERSTATE TRANSFERS.—The State of California and Nevada, the Tribe, and the Secretary may negotiate an agreement permitting the voluntary interstate transfer of water or water rights for use within the Carson River Basin. Any such agreement shall, prior to implementation, first be approved by the appropriate water right administration authority of each State pursuant to the State laws applicable to transfer of water or water rights.

(e) MUNICIPAL AND INDUSTRIAL WATER USES IN NEVADA.—Nothing in this Act precludes the State of California and Nevada, the Tribe, and the Secretary from negotiating an agreement that permits the State of Nevada, agencies of the State, and private entities and individuals from constructing storage facilities within the State of Nevada on the Carson River or its tributaries that result in inundation of lands in California; provided further that this agreement may:

(1) recognize and confirm the right to change the beneficial use of water from irrigation to storage for municipal and industrial and related uses provided that such changes are in accordance with the Alpine Decree,

(2) permit water storage under this procedure to be diverted to storage in a given year and held for use in that or subsequent years, and

(3) confirm the historic practice for operation of reservoirs identified on pages 145 and 146 of the Alpine Decree to store, release and use quantities of water determined by the capacity of the reservoirs and the yield of the tributary basins.

(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed as modifying or terminating any court decree or as affecting the applicability of state law and procedures to the water allocated hereunder.

SEC. 102. THE LAKE TAHOE BASIN.

(a) ANNUAL GROSS DIVERSION TOTALS.—The total annual gross diversions for use within the Lake Tahoe Basin from all natural sources including ground water and under all water rights in the basin shall not exceed 34,000 acre-feet annually, of which—

(1) 23,000 acre-feet annually are allocated to the State of California for use within the Lake Tahoe Basin; and

(2) 11,000 acre-feet annually are allocated to the State of Nevada for use within the Lake Tahoe basin.

After use of the water allocated in this subsection such water may be exported from the Lake Tahoe basin or reused.

(b) DETERMINATION OF GROSS DIVISION.—The States of California and Nevada, and the Tribe, and the Secretary shall negotiate an agreement on the manner in which the gross diversion amounts under section (a) will be determined. The agreement shall include the following provisions.

(1) Water diverted and used to make snow shall not count against the gross diversion allocation of either California or Nevada unless and to the extent that the snow is produced for use outside the basin,

(2) Unmetered diversion or extraction of water by residences shall, for the purpose of calculating the amount of California's or Nevada's gross diversion, be conclusively presumed to utilize a gross diversion of fourtenths of one acre-foot per residence per annum.

(c) TRANSBASIN DIVERSIONS.—(1) The transbasin diversions from the Lake Tahoe basin in Nevada and California identified in paragraph (2) below, may be continued, to the extent that such diversions are recognized as vested or permitted rights under the laws of the State where such diversion is made. Unless otherwise provided in this section, such diversions are in addition to the other allocations made by this section.

(2) The transbasin diversions referred to in paragraph (1) above are—

(A) the diversion of a maximum of 3,000 acre-feet per annum from Marlette Lake for use in Nevada:

(B) the diversion of a maximum of 561 acre-feet per annum from Lake Tahoe for use in Nevada, except that such diversion shall count against the allocation to Nevada made by this section;

(C) the diversion of water from Echo Lake for use in California, pursuant to rights vested under California law; and

(D) the diversion of water from North Creek as set forth in the State of Nevada Certificate of Appropriation of Water No. 4217.

(3) The transbasin diversion identified in paragraph (2) may be transferred, for use only in the State where the recognized transbasin diversion exists, by lease of the right of use or by conveyance of the right. Any such transfer shall be subject to the applicable laws of the State in which the right is vested or permitted. Water made available for use within the basin as a result of any such transfer shall not count against the allocations made by this section, and such water may be depleted.

(d) EFFECT OF ALLOCATION OF CERTAIN WATER.—(1) Water imported from any source outside the Lake Tahoe basin shall not count against the allocation made by this section but shall count against the allocation, if applicable, of the basin of origin.

(2) Water diverted or extracted in one State for use in the other shall count against the allocation under this section of the State in which the water is used.

SEC. 103. THE TRUCKEE RIVER.

The State of California and Nevada, the Tribe and the Secretary shall negotiate an agreement allocating the waters of the Truckee River basin between California, Nevada and the Tribe. The allocation of water to California under this section shall not form the basin for additional claims of water from any water right holders by the Tribe under the Endangered Species Act.

SEC. 104. COMPLIANCE WITH INTERSTATE ALLOCATIONS.

The States of California and Nevada, the Tribe, and the Secretary shall negotiate an agreement for administering the allocations made under this title.

SEC. 105. FORFEITURE OR ABANDONMENT NOT TO AFFECT ALLOCATIONS.

The forfeiture for nonuse or abandonment of water rights under the applicable law of each state shall not affect the allocations to each state made by this title.

TITLE II—TRUCKEE RIVER WATER SUPPLY MANAGEMENT

SEC. 201. IMPLEMENTATION OF WATER SUPPLY AGREEMENT.

(a) The Secretary shall enter into such contracts and take such actions as are required to carry out the terms and provisions of the Preliminary Settlement Agreement and the Operating Agreement, including, without limitation, contracts for the use of space in Truckee River Reservoirs for purposes of storing and exchanging water, provided that;

(1) California, Nevada, the Tribe, Sierra Pacific Power Company, and the United States have formally approved the Operating Agreement;

(2) the Orr Ditch Court and Truckee River General Electric Court have approved any proposed modifications in river operations, including storage and exchange of water, that would modify any provision in the Orr Ditch Decree or the Truckee River General Electric Decree, except for those rights that are voluntarily relinquished by the parties to the Operating Agreement.

(3) all applicable dam safety and flood control requirements are met; and

(4) all storage and releases required to satisfy the rights set forth in the Orr Ditch Decree and the Truckee River General Electric decree are met.

SEC. 202. MODIFICATION OF TRUCKEE RIVER DIVERSION FACILITIES.

Such funds as may be required to permit the Secretary, in consultation with the State of Nevada and with the approval of affected water rights owners, to modify existing Truckee River diversion facilities and operations to the extent necessary to ensure that implementation of the Operating Agreement does not impair or diminish any water rights on the Truckee River, are hereby authorized.

TITLE III—WETLANDS PROTECTION

SEC. 301. AUTHORIZATION TO PURCHASE WATER RIGHTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to purchase water rights and water righted lands within the State of Nevada and to transfer, hold, resell, or otherwise dispose of such water rights and related interests to benefit federal and state wildlife areas in the Lahontan Valley and the Fernley Sink in Nevada in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(b) CONDITIONS.—The purchase of water rights and related interests pursuant to this Act shall be subject to the following conditions:

(1) Water rights purchased within the Newlands Irrigation Project must satisfy the eligibility criteria adopted by the Fish and Wildlife Service in connection with acquisition of water rights for the Stillwater National Wildlife Management Area pursuant to Public Law 100-446.

Water rights shall be purchased from willing sellers, but the Secretary may target purchases in areas deemed by the Secretary to be most beneficial to such a purchase program.

(3) All water rights purchased shall be transferred in accordance with State law.

(4) Water rights purchased shall be managed by the Secretary through the United States Fish and Wildlife Service in cooperation with the State.

(c) TRANSPORT.—The Secretary is authorized to—

(1) use existing water transport systems where available; and

(2) reimburse non-Federal entities, including but not limited to the Truckee-Carson Irrigation District, for full operation and maintenance charges in carrying out the provisions of this section.

(d) CONSTRUCTION OF THE SECTION.—The federal water purchase program authorized in this section is specific to this section and shall not be construed as a precedent in determining Federal responsibilities toward wildlife areas.

(e) AUTHORIZATION.—There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section $4,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994.

SEC. 302. STUDY OF NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE CREATION.

Within two years of the date of passage of this Act, the Secretary shall provide the Congress with recommendations concerning the transfer of certain U.S. Bureau of Reclamation withdrawn public lands within existing wildlife use areas in the Lahontan Valley to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service for establishment of the permanent National Wildlife Refuge and Wildlife Management Area to be managed for fish and wildlife purposes in cooperation with the signatories of the 1948 Tripartite Agreement.

TITLE IV—CUI-UI AND LAHONTAN CUTTHROAT TROUT ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

SEC. 401. TRANSFER OF FALLON NAVAL AIR STATION'S WATER RIGHTS.

(a) ALTERNATIVE AGRICULTURAL OUTLEASE PROGRAM.—No later than 1 year after the effective date of this Act, the Secretary of the Navy, in consultation with and with the assistance of the Secretary, shall develop and implement an alternative program for the lands owned by the United States within the Naval Air Station at Fallon, Nevada to replace the agricultural outlease program. The alternative program shall satisfy the Navy's dust abatement and fire safety requirements in the most water efficient manner. The water rights appurtenant to those lands which are not needed for dust abatement and fire safety requirements shall be transferred to the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation for fishery purposes.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such funds as are necessary to develop and implement the alternative program for the Naval Air Station at Fallon, Nevada described in subsection (a).

(b) REIMBURSEMENT OF COSTS.—The Secretary shall reimburse the Truckee-Carson Irrigation District for the full operation and maintenance charges associated with the water rights transferred pursuant to this section.

SEC. 402. RECOVERY PLANS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Pursuant to section 4(f) of the Endangered Species Act (16 U.S.C. 1533(f)), the Secretary through the United States Fish and Wildlife Service shall revise and update plans for the recovery of the cui-ui and Lahontan cutthroat trout. Such plans shall be completed not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act. If implementation has not begun within six months following the completion of the recovery plan and Congress has not acted to the contrary, the Secretary shall proceed to implement such plans.

(b) CRITERIA FOR DEVELOPING PLANS.—In developing the recovery plans pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary shall—

(1) take account of and include the transfer of the water rights of the Naval Air Station at Fallon, Nevada described in section 401(a);

(2) take account of, include, and make the plans subject to and consistent with the provisions of the interstate allocation described in title I, any additional agreements authorized under title I, and the Preliminary Settlement and Operating Agreements authorized under title II of this Act;

(3) consider water quality needs in the lower Truckee River and Pyramid Lake;

(4) consider possible habitat improvements in the lower Truckee River;

(5) consider possible access improvements to the month of the Truckee River;

(6) establish a schedule which is designed to achieve implementation of a recovery plan for the cui-ui in the Truckee River/Pyramid Lake ecosystem;

(7) establish a schedule which is designed to achieve implementation of a recovery plan for the Lahontan Cutthroat trout;

(8) consider measures to increase the number and size of juvenile Lahontan cutthroat trout recruited to Pyramid Lake through natural reproduction where possible, or through construction or expansion of hatcheries and related facilities;

(9) consider other actions consistent with the allocations described in sections 101, 102 and 103 of this Act and the Operating Agreement described in section 201 of this Act that might enhance recovery of the endangered and threatened species.

TITLE V—PYRAMID LAKE DEVELOPMENT FUND

SEC. 501. PYRAMID LAKE FUND.

(a) There is hereby established with the Treasury of the United States the "Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribal Development Fund".

(b) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribal Development Fund $75,000,000 together with interest accruing from the effective date of this act at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury taking into consideration the average market yield on the outstanding Federal obligations of comparable maturity. Following execution of the settlement agreements, judgments, and other appropriate final dispositions specified in section 603, the Secretary of the Treasury shall allocate and make available such monies from the trust fund as are requested by the Tribe. Any monies not allocated to the Tribe and remaining in the fund authorized by this section shall be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in interest-bearing deposits and securities in accordance with the Act of June 24, 1938 (25 U.S.C. 162a). The Secretary of the Treasury shall allocate and make available such interest from the trust fund as is requested by the Tribe.

(c) All of the Funds appropriated pursuant to this section shall be invested or used for economic development.

(d) Notwithstanding any provision of law, the Tribe shall have complete discretion to invest and manage the funds appropriated pursuant to this section provided that the United States shall not bear any obligation or liability regarding the investment, management or use of such funds that the Tribe elects to invest, manage or use.

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. CLAIMS SETTLEMENT.

(a) This Act is contingent upon settlement of the following outstanding litigation as indicated:

(1) Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe v. California, civ. S-81-378-RAR-RCB, United States District Court, Eastern District of California, to be dismissed with prejudice;

(2) United States v. Truckee-Carson Irrigation District, 2987-RCB, United States District Court, District of Nevada, including those matters asserted in the Tribe's proposed amended complaint, water issues to be dismissed;

(3) Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe v. Lujan, Civil S-87-1281-LKK, United States District Court, Eastern District of California, to be dismissed;

(4) All claims presented in Pyramid Lake Paiute Indian Tribe v. Department of the Navy, Civil No. R-86-115 BRT in the United States District Court for the District of Nevada and Docket No. 88 1650 in the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, to be dismissed; and

(5) The withdrawal of all pending motions filed by the Tribe in Docket No. E-9530 before the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

(b) The signatories under section 201 shall negotiate an agreement to insure that the matters settled by this Act and its associated agreements will not be subject to litigation subsequent to the effective date of this Act.

(c) On request by and in accordance with a resolution of the Business Council of the Fallon Paiute—Shoshone Tribe, the Secretary shall negotiate diligently with the Business Council: (1) to establish a program for full and prompt implementation of the provisions of Public Law 95-337 and/or alternatives thereto that are acceptable to the Fallon Tribe; and (2) to settle any outstanding claims arising from breaches of the 1906 Agreement between the Fallon Tribe and the United States, P.L. 95-337, and the federal trust responsibility to the Fallon Tribe. Such negotiations shall commence within sixty days of the date of the Business Council resolution and shall conclude within twelve months thereafter, unless the Business Council by resolution requests an extension of the negotiations. To enable the Fallon Tribe to fully protect its interests in such negotiations, the Secretary shall provide adequate funding for technical and legal assistance under his existing authorities and programs. Neither the provisions of this Act nor the occurrence of negotiations under this section shall: release or modify any obligations or liabilities of the United States under the 1906 Agreement, P.L. 95-337, or the federal trust responsibility; or modify, extinguish or otherwise affect any water rights appurtenant to lands within the Fallon Indian Reservation.

SEC. 602. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

(a) All of the trust land within the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation shall be permanently held by the United States in Trust for the sole use and benefit of the Tribe.

(b) The Tribe shall have sole and exclusive right to regulate all hunting and fishing on all lands, including the bed and banks of the Truckee River and Pyramid Lake, within the boundaries of the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation.

(c) Nothing in this Act shall limit or diminish the federal government's trust responsibility to any Indian Tribe.

(d) The United States confirms and ratifies certain waivers by the Tribe of the right to object to the implementation of the water supply measures described in section 3 and 21 of the Preliminary Settlement Agreement.

(e) The Secretary, the Tribe, and the State of Nevada shall negotiate an agreement determining permanent rights to store water for the benefit of the Tribe and the Pyramid Lake fishery in Stampede and Prosser Reservoirs.

(f) Nothing in Title II of this Act, or in agreements made pursuant to it, may affect any recognized and perfected right of any other party or entity to use the water of the Truckee River or its tributaries, including, but not limited to, the rights of land owners within the Newlands project for delivery of the water of the Truckee River to Derby Dam and for diversion of such water at Derby Dam pursuant to the Orr Ditch Decree or any applicable regulations approved by a court of competent jurisdiction; provided further, the Orr Ditch Court and the Water Master, pursuant to the administrative provisions of the Orr Ditch Decree, including the Truckee River Agreement, incorporated and made part thereof, may ensure that all water rights of the Truckee River are not impaired or diminished by this Act or any agreements made pursuant to this Act, except with respect to the interstate allocation of water to California or the Tahoe Basin; provided further that nothing in Title II of this Act or any agreements made pursuant to it will abrogate the jurisdiction or required approvals of the state engineer.

SEC. 603. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The provisions of Titles II, V, and VI, and section 401 of Title IV of this Act shall not take effect until the agreements required under Title II are in effect, the funds authorized under Title V have been appropriated, the outstanding claims described in section 601(a) have been dismissed, the Orr Ditch Court and the Truckee River General Electric Court has approved any provisions in the Preliminary Settlement Agreement and the Operating Agreement described in section 201 which affect the Orr Ditch Decree, and the Secretary, the State of Nevada, the Tribe, the Sierra Pacific Power Company and the Cities of Reno and Sparks enter into an agreement certifying that all necessary preconditions for the settlement have been satisfied and provide for the implementation of the settlement.

PRELIMINARY SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT BETWEEN PYRAMID LAKE PAIUTE TRIBE OF INDIANS AND SIERRA PACIFIC POWER CO., MAY 23, 1989.

PRELIMINARY SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

This Agreement is entered into this 23rd day of May, 1989, between the Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe of Indians ("Tribe") and Sierra Pacific Power Company ("Sierra").

I. RECITALS

1. The cui-ui (Chasmistes cujus) is officially classified as an endangered species. It is the only pure species remaining in its genus, Chasmistes, and is found only in the Pyramid Lake/Lower Truckee River ecosystem in Nevada.

2. The Lahontan cutthroat trout (Salmo clarki henshawi) is officially classified as a threatened species. It is found in the Pyramid Lake/Truckee River ecosystem as well as other lakes, streams and rivers in the Great Basin.

3. The Tribe is organized under Section 16 of the Act of June 18, 1934 (25 U.S.C. § 476) and governs the Pyamid Lake Indian Reservation which includes Pyramid Lake and a large portion of the Lower Truckee River.

4. The Tribe desires to increase flows in the Lower Truckee River in the spring and early summer months to improve Spawning Flows in the Lower Truckee River for the endangered cui-ui and the threatened Lahontan cutthroat trout.

5. Sierra serves water to the Cities of Reno and Sparks and unincorporated portions of Washoe County and also provides electricity to northern Nevada and portions of east central, California.

6. In addition to its other power generating facilities, Sierra owns and operates four run of the river hydroelectric plants on the Truckee River above Reno. Sierra owns and utilizes water rights for these hydroelectric plants utilizing water which is released from or passed through Lake Tahoe and other Truckee River Reservoirs.

7. Sierra owns and utilizes substantial Truckee River water rights to provide water for municipal, industrial and domestic (M&I) purposes within its service area. Sierra also participates with the local governments of Reno, Sparks and Washoe County in an acquisition program approved by the Public Service Commission of Nevada to acquire agricultural water rights in the Truckee River Basin and to change them to M&I purposes.

8. The water rights acquired, owned and utilized by Sierra are sufficient to provide water for M&I use within its service areas in most years. Sierra needs additional storage, however, to insure an adequate supply of water under Drought Conditions.

9. The parties hereto and others are involved in negotiations and in supporting enactment of proposed congressional settlement legislation which, if finalized and enacted, will provide for:

(a) Allocation of the waters of the Lake Tahoe, Truckee River and Carson River Basins;

(b) The purchase of water for the wetlands in the Lahontan Valley and possibly other wetlands;

(c) The development and implementation of a mitigation and enhancement program for the cui-ui and Lahontan cutthroat trout;

(d) A fund for the economic development of the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation;

(e) The resolution of existing litigation and the avoidance of future litigation; and

(f) Authorization and agreement for the operation of the Truckee River Reservoirs, including Lake Tahoe.

10. In order for the negotiations and proposed settlement legislation to progress, it is necessary for the parties hereto to enter into this Preliminary Agreement concerning the utilization of water rights and the operation of the Truckee River Reservoirs to provide greater Spawning Flows in the Lower Truckee River and an adequate supply of water for Sierra's Service Area under Drought Conditions.

II. DEFINITIONS

As used in this Preliminary Agreement:

1. "Critical Drought Period" means a hydrologic period during which the water supplies available from the Truckee River are limited to the same or similar extent as the water supplies available from the Truckee River under a repetition of hydrologic conditions which existed from 1928 to 1935.

2. "Drought Conditions" means conditions under which Sierra's Normal Water Supplies are not sufficient to satisfy Sierra's normal water year demand.

3. "Drought Situation" means a situation under which it appears, based on the April 1 seasonal Truckee River runoff forecast and assuming median precipitation after April 1, either that there will not be sufficient unregulated natural runoff and pooled water in storage in the Truckee River Reservoirs to meet the Floriston Rates through the following October 31, or that the level of Lake Tahoe, excluding all Firm M&I, Non-Firm M&I and Fishery Credit Water, will be below 6223.5 feet Lake Tahoe Datum on or before the following N/vember 15.

4. "Emergency or Repair Conditions" means an unexpected circumstance when the demands of Sierra's water customers cannot be met from Sierra's Normal Water Supplies or a scheduled alteration or repair which prevents the use of some or all of Sierra's Normal Water Supplies to meet the demands of Sierra's water customers.

5. "Firm M&I Credit Water" means the water that is stored in Stampede Reservoir and can be utilized under the terms and conditions of this Agreement for the purpose of providing water under Drought Conditions or Emergency or Repair Conditions for M&I purposes within Sierra's Service Area and which shall not spill or be subject to evaporation losses unless it is the only remaining water in Stampede Reservoir.

6. "Fishery Credit Water" means the water that can be stored and utilized under the terms and conditions of this Agreement for the benefit of the Pyramid Lake Fishery.

7. "Floriston Rates" means the rate of flow of the Truckee River at the head of the diversion penstock at Floriston, California (but measured at the USGS Stream Gaging Station near Farad, California) consisting of an average flow of 500 cubic feet of water per second each day during the period commencing March 1 and ending September 30 of any year and an average flow of 400 cubic feet of water per second each day during the period commencing October 1 and ending the last day of the next following February of any year.

15. "Remaining Waters of the Truckee River" means the waters of the Truckee River system other than the following: (i) the waters of the Lake Tahoe Basin allocated to California and Nevada; (ii) the waters of the Truckee River and its tributaries allocated to California; and (iii) the waters of the Truckee River and its tributaries allocated to Nevada to which valid and perfected rights attach under Nevada law.

16. "Sierra's Normal Water Supplies" means the water sources and supplies Sierra has and would have to meet the M&I needs of its customers in the absence of this Agreement, including the water sources and supplies described in Section 2 of this Agreement and any supplies obtained or developed pursuant to Section 3 of this Agreement, but excluding all of the water sources and supplies described in Section 21 of this Agreement and 7,500 acre feet of water above the outlet facilities of Independence Lake.

17. "Sierra's Privately Owned Stored Water" means the stored water which Sierra now has or may hereafter acquire the right to use in Donner Lake and Independence Lake.

18. "Sierra's Service Area" means the retail and wholesale certificated boundaries as may be established from time to time by the Public Service Commission of Nevada as the territory in which Sierra is entitled to sell or to distribute water.

19. "Spawning Flows in the Lower Truckee River" means the water which provides suitable conditions for attracting, egg-taking, spawning and/or nursing of cui-ui and/or Lahontan cutthroat trout in the Lower Truckee River.

20. "Stampede Project Water" means the water that is currently captured and impounded in Stampede Reservoir and is released to support Spawning Flows in the Lower Truckee River.

21. "Truckee River Agreement" means the Agreement dated July 1, 1935, which was approved, adopted and incorporated in the Orr Ditch Decree.

22. "Truckee River General Electric Co. Decree" means the final Decree entered on June 4, 1915 in the case of United States v. Truckee River General Electric Co., No. 14861, in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California which was transferred on February 9, 1968 to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California and is now designated No. S-643.

23. "Truckee River Reservoirs" means the storage provided by the dam at the outlet of Lake Tahoe, Boca Reservoir. Prosser Creek Reservoir and Stampede Reservoir.

III. AGREEMENT

Section 1. Waiver of Single Purpose Hydroelectric Water. For purposes of this Agreement only, Sierra agrees to waive its rights to require releases or pass throughs of water from the Truckee River Reservoirs solely for the generation of hydroelectric power pursuant to the Truckee River General Electric Co. Decree and Claim Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 of the Orr Ditch Decree. The water to which Sierra's rights are waived pursuant to this Section shall become Fishery Credit Water subject to the limitations set forth in Section 27 of this Agreement and shall be held in storage in the Truckee River Reservoirs and released for the sole use and benefit of the Pyramid Lake Fishery.

Section 2. Water Rights Required for New Service Commitments. Sierra agrees that it will not issue new service commitments unless such commitments are accompanied by such water rights provided directly to Sierra or through a municipal entity as are necessary to meet the new water service requirement. Sierra shall require new service commitments which rely on surface water rights to provide water rights at the rate of not less than 1.72 acre feet of water rights for every acre foot of commitment until such time as Sierra has committed to the amount of water needed to meet a normal year demand of 80,000 acre feet within Sierra's Service Area. After the amount of water is provided to meet Sierra's normal year commitment of 80,000 acre feet and until such time as Sierra has committed to the amounts of water required to meet a normal water year demand of 119,000 acre feet within Sierra's Service Area, the water rights provided to meet new service commitments in reliance upon surface water rights may be reduced to not less than 1 acre foot of water rights for very acre foot of new service commitment; provided, however, that if Sierra is able to develop the water supply referred to in Section 3(b) of this Agreement, then the ratio of new service commitments in reliance on surface water rights shall be not less than 1.11 acre feet of water rights for every acre foot of new service commitment.

Section 3. Development of Additional M&I Water Supplies. Sierra agrees to use its best efforts to implement the following measures on a schedule to be agreed upon in the operating agreement referred to in Section 9(f) of this Agreement, to the extent legally, technically and economically feasible, to help meet the water supply demands of its customers as Sierra's total normal year water demand increases to a maximum normal year demand of 119,000 acre feet:

(a) Development of the capacity to pump 2,000 acre feet of water annually from the Sparks pit source under Drought Conditions or Emergency or Repair Conditions;

(b) The right to develop an additional 3,000 acre feet annually of groundwater from the Truckee Meadows groundwater basin (over and above the currently approved 12,616 acre feet of groundwater available from the Truckee Meadows groundwater basin); and

(c) Acquisition and utilization of the right of the Truckee-Carson Irrigation District to store and use water in Donner Lake.

The Tribe waives any and all rights or claims it may have to object to Sierra's implementation and use of the water supply measures described in this Section or Section 21. If, after this Agreement becomes effective, the Tribe actively opposes the implementation and use of the water supply measures described in either Section, Sierra retains the right to terminate the provisions of Section 1 of this Agreement and to fully exercise the water rights referred to in that Section. Prior to exercising its right to terminate, Sierra will give the Tribe sixty (60) days prior written notice to withdraw such opposition and to remove any impediments to implementation caused by such opposition. If the Tribe fails to so withdraw its opposition and to remove impediments caused by its opposition, then Sierra shall have the immediate right to terminate Section 1 of this Agreement and fully exercise the rights waived in Section 1 of this Agreement.

The measures described in Sections 3(a) and 3(c) shall not be included in, and shall be in addition to, the water rights Sierra obtains to meet new service commitments pursuant to Section 2 of this Agreement.

Section 4. Storage of Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water in Truckee River Reservoirs. Sierra shall have the right to establish Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water by utilizing the Truckee River Reservoirs to store or retain its Privately Owned Stored Water and the consumptive use portion of Former Agricultural Water Rights which are not utilized to supply the demands of its customers in any given year for later use under Drought Conditions or Emergency or Repair Conditions for M&I purposes. Such water may be accumulated in those Reservoirs or may be transferred between those Reservoirs through acre foot for acre foot exchanges. Sierra agrees to use the full extent of the consumptive use portion of its Former Agricultural Water Rights which are not utilized to supply the demands of its customers in any given year to establish Firm or Non-Firm M&I Credit Water pursuant to the terms and conditions of this Agreement.

Section 5. Use of Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water. Sierra may use Firm M&I Credit Water and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water to supply the demands of its customers under Drought Conditions to meet its normal water year demand, up to a maximum of 119,000 acre feet, less the sum of the quantities of water actually conserved through the implementation of the measures required by Section 29(e) of this Agreement and the additional water supplies described in Section 3 of this Agreement and implemented in accordance with the operating agreement described in Section 29(f) of this Agreement. Sierra also may use Firm M&I Credit Water and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water to meet the demands of its customers under Emergency or Repair Conditions.

Section 6. Calculation of Base Amounts of Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water. The base amount of Firm M&I Credit Water Sierra may store pursuant to Section 4 of this Agreement shall vary from 2,000 acre feet to 12,000 acre feet in relation to the amount of water needed to satisfy the normal water demand of Sierra's customers as shown on Exhibit "A". The base amount of Non-Firm M&I Credit Water Sierra may store pursuant to Section 4 of this Agreement shall vary from 4,000 acre feet to 20,000 acre feet in relation to the amount of water needed to satisfy the normal water year demand of Sierra's customers as shown on Exhibit "B" and as the amount of water depleted from the Truckee River, its tributaries and groundwater basins within California increases as shown on Exhibit "C". The amount of Non-Firm M&I Credit Water shown on Exhibit "B" shall be multiplied by the percentage factor shown on Exhibit "C" for the amount of water being depleted in a normal year from the Truckee River, its tributaries and groundwater basins within California at the time the calculation is made. The product so obtained shall be the base amount of Non-Firm M&I Credit Water which Sierra may store pursuant to Section 4 of this Agreement; provided, however, that the base amount of Non-Firm M&I Credit Water which Sierra may store shall not be less than 4,000 acre feet. Sierra may commence storing Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water pursuant to the provisions of this Agreement when this Agreement becomes effective.

Section 7. Status of M&I Credit Water. All of Sierra's M&I Credit Water stored in Stampede Reservoir at any given time up to the base amount of Firm M&I Credit Water determined in accordance with Section 6 of this Agreement shall be considered Firm M&I Credit Water and shall have all of the attributes of Firm M&I Credit Water. All of Sierra's remaining M&I Credit Water stored in Stampede Reservoir and all of its M&I Credit Water in other Truckee River Reservoirs shall be considered Non-Firm M&I Credit Water.

Section 8. Annual Adjustment of M&I Credit Water. The amounts of Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water in storage in the Truckee River Reservoirs shall be adjusted once annually not later than April 15 of each year based upon whether or not a Drought Situation exists utilizing the April 1 seasonal runoff forecast. Following that annual adjustment, during the ensuing 12 months and whether or not a Drought Situation exists, Sierra shall have the right to utilize the available space in the Truckee River Reservoirs to store its Privately Owned Stored Water and the consumptive use portion of Former Agricultural Water Rights which are not needed to supply the demands of its customers to establish additional amounts of M&I Credit Storage in excess of the base amounts of Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water set forth in Section 6 of this Agreement.

Section 9. Exchanges to Permit Firm M&I Credit Water to be Stored in Stampede Reservoir and to Avoid Unnecessary Spill or Displacement. The Tribe and Sierra agree to enter into exchanges and to agree to other measures to permit Firm M&I Credit Water to be stored in Stampede Reservoir up to the base amount determined in accordance with Section 6 and to insure, to the maximum extent possible, that Firm M&I Credit Water, Non-Firm M&I Credit Water, Fishery Credit Water and Stampede Project Water will be available at the appropriate times and will not be displaced or caused to spill.

Section 10. Storage Priorities—Non-Drought Situation. Whenever, based upon the April 1 seasonal runoff forecast, a Drought Situation does not exist, the Tribe agrees as follows: (a) that Sierra shall have the first right to store Firm M&I Credit Water in Stampede Reservoir from the following July 1 through December 31 up to the base amount determined in accordance with Section 6 of this Agreement; (b) that Sierra may displace Fishery Credit Water in Stampede Reservoir and may displace Stampede Project Water from July 1 through the following December 31 of each year to the extent necessary to achieve that base amount of Firm M&I Credit Water in storage; and (c) that Sierra may accumulate additional Non-Firm M&I Credit Water in Truckee River Reservoirs other than Stampede Reservoir to the extent Sierra's total Firm M&I Credit Water is less than the base amount of Firm M&I Credit Water determined pursuant to Section 6. Such additional Non-Firm M&I Credit Water may displace Fishery Credit Water from July 1 through the following December 31, shall spill or be reduced for precautionary drawdowns after Fishery Credit Water and shall share the net evaporation losses proportionately with any other water in all such reservoirs except Lake Tahoe.

Section 11. Conversion of M&I Credit Water to Fishery Credit Water—Non-Drought Situation. Whenever, based upon the April 1 seasonal runoff forecast, a Drought Situation does not exist, the amount of Non-Firm M&I Credit Water established in accordance with Section 8 of this Agreement in excess of the base amount determined in accordance with Section 6 of this Agreement shall become Fishery Credit Water. Sierra shall have the right to determine and identify the location of the excess Non-Firm M&I Credit Water stored in the Truckee River Reservoirs which shall become Fishery Credit Water.

Section 12. Credit Storage Rules—Non-Drought Situation. Whenever, based upon the April 1 seasonal runoff forecast, a Drought Situation does not exist, then for the ensuing 12 months, the following rules shall apply: (a) the Fishery Credit water and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water shall share the net evaporation losses proportionately with any other water in Truckee River Reservoirs other than Lake Tahoe; (b) Non-Firm M&I Credit Water shall be the first water to spill from Stampede Reservoir; and (c) except as provided in Section 10 of this Agreement, Non-Firm M&I Credit Water and Fishery Credit Water shall spill or be reduced for precautionary drawdowns proportionately from all other Truckee River Reservoirs.

Section 13. Displacement of Fishery Credit Water and Stampede Project Water—Drought Situation. Whenever, based upon the April 1 seasonal runoff forecast, a Drought Situation exists, the Tribe agrees as follows: (a) to allow Sierra to displace Fishery Credit Water in Stampede Reservoir or Stampede Project Water from April 15 to July 1 to the extent necessary to enable Sierra to store up to 6,000 acre feet of the consumptive use portion of Former Agricultural Water Rights; (b) to allow Sierra to displace Fishery Credit Water in Stampede Reservoir or Stampede Project Water from July 1 to the following April 1 to the extent necessary to enable Sierra to store the base amounts of Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water determined in accordance with Section 6 of this Agreement, except that for this purpose only the base amount of Non-Firm M&I Credit Water shall not be adjusted by the Exhibit "C" percentage reduction based upon the amount of water depleted from the Truckee River and its tributaries and ground-water basins in California; and (c) to allow Sierra to displace Fishery Credit Water in Truckee River Reservoirs other than Stampede Reservoir to the extent necessary to enable Sierra to increase the amounts of Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water to the maximum extent possible without regard to the limitations of Section 6 of this Agreement.

Section 14. Carryover of Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Storage—Drought Situation. Whenever, based upon the April 1 seasonal runoff forecast, a Drought Situation exists, Sierra shall have the right to retain and carry over until the following year all of its Firm M&I Credit Water up to the base amount determined in accordance with Section 6, and all of its Non-Firm M&I Credit Water including the excess Non-Firm M&I Credit Water established in accordance with Sections 8 and 13 of this Agreement. All such excess Non-Firm M&I Credit Water may be retained and carried over and may continue to be increased pursuant to Sections 8 and 13 of this Agreement until, based upon a subsequent April 1 seasonal runoff forecast, a Drought Situation no longer exists.

Section 15. Credit Storage Rules—Drought Situation. Whenever, based upon the April 1 seasonal runoff forecast, a Drought Situation exists, for the ensuing 12 months the Fishery Credit Water in all Truckee River Reservoirs in which it is stored shall be the first water to spill or be reduced for precautionary drawdowns. Non-Firm M&I Credit Water and Fishery Credit Water shall share the net evaporation losses proportionately from all Truckee River Reservoirs in which they are stored except Lake Tahoe.

Section 16. Use of Sierra's Privately Owned Stored Water. Sierra's Privately Owned Stored Water may be used to supply the demands of its customers in normal water years, under Drought Conditions and under Emergency or Repair Conditions. Sierra agrees to use all available Donner Lake water and all but 7,500 acre feet of its water above the outlet facilities of Independence Lake before using any Firm M&I or Non-Firm M&I Credit Water or the remaining 7,500 acre feet in Independence Lake to meet the needs of its customers under Drought Conditions or Emergency or Repair Conditions. Except as provided in Section 22 of this Agreement, all of Sierra's Privately Owned Stored Water that is not carried over or used to meet the demands of its customers in normal water years, under Drought Conditions or under Emergency or Repair Conditions shall be used if legally and physically possible to establish Firm or Non-Firm M&I Credit Water pursuant to the terms and conditions of this Agreement.

Section 17. Sierra to Control Privately Owned Stored Water. The quantities of Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water stored, held and used pursuant to this Agreement shall not include, and shall be in addition to, the quantities of Sierra's Privately Owned Stored Water in Donner Lake and Independence Lake at any given time. Sierra retains the sole right to control and manage Sierra's Privately Owned Stored Water in Donner Lake and Independence Lake subject to all applicable laws, conditions and regulations.

Section 18. Exchanges of Fishery Credit Water and Prosser Creek Fishery Water to Enable Storage of M&I Credit Water in Stampede Reservoir. The Tribe agrees to permit exchanges of its rights to store and use Fishery Credit Water and Prosser Creek Fishery Water for Sierra's rights to store and use Non-Firm M&I Credit Water so as to enable Sierra to store the maximum amount of its Firm M&I Credit Water and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water in Stampede Reservoir. When releases of Stampede Project Water would otherwise be made, the Tribe agrees to exchanges to enable Sierra to create Firm or Non-Firm M&I Credit Water in Stampede Reservoir.

Section 19. Additional Voluntary Exchanges of Credit Water. The Tribe and Sierra may agree to additional voluntary exchanges involving their respective rights and their Fishery, Firm M&I and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water as they may deem desirable and in furtherance of the objectives of this Agreement.

Section 20. Use of Fishery Credit Water. All of the Fishery Credit Water established pursuant to this Agreement shall be stored in Truckee River Reservoirs and shall be utilized to provide Spawning Flows in the Lower Truckee River.

Section 21. Additional Water—Worse Than Critical Drought Period. To meet the demands of its customers in the event of water supply conditions which are worse than those experienced during the Critical Drought Period, after exhausting Sierra's Normal Water Supplies, the 7,500 acre feet of water above the outlet facilities of Independence Lake to the extent permissible under then applicable law, and all Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water, Sierra shall have the right to obtain sufficient water to meet its normal year water demand, up to a maximum of 119,000 acre feet, less the sum of the quantities of water conserved through the implementation of Section 29(e) of this Agreement and the additional water supplies described in Section 3 of this Agreement, from the following sources in the following order:

(a) Pump up to 5,000 acre feet of water from below the outlet works of Independence Lake to the extent permitted after making all necessary applications for such use; provided that if such water is not made available at the time required to satisfy the demands of Sierra's customers, Sierra may utilize the water supplies available in Section 21(b) of this Agreement to the extent required;

(b) Utilize as necessary a maximum of 7,500 acre feet of Fishery Credit Water in Stampede Reservoir; and

(c) Pump water from Lake Tahoe in accordance with, and to the extent permissible under, then applicable law.

Section 22. Establishment of Fishery Credit Water for Worse Than Critical Drought Period. As soon as practicable after this Agreement becomes effective, the Tribe agrees to provide and hold in Stampede Reservoir the 7,500 acre feet of Fishery Credit Water referred to in Section 21(b) of this Agreement subject to the same terms and conditions as Firm M&I Credit Water utilizing the first Fishery Credit Water obtained pursuant to Section 11 of this Agreement. Once the 7,500 acre feet is in storage, it shall not be used for the benefit of the Pyramid Lake Fishery, and spill and evaporation losses and minimum instream flow requirements shall not be charged against it unless it is the only water in Stampede Reservoir. Sierra may, at its option, fill the 7,500 acre feet provided in Section 21(b) directly from Sierra's Privately Owned Stored Water. Any of the water referred to in Section 21(b) that is used by Sierra shall be replaced by the Tribe as soon as practicable.

Section 23. Credit Water To Have Attributes of Privately Owned Stored Water. All Fishery Credit Water and Firm and Non-Firm M&I Credit Water stored pursuant to this Agreement shall have all the attributes of privately owned stored water under the Truckee River agreement.

Section 24. Development of Additional M&I Water Supplies Above 119,000 Acre Feet of Demand. Sierra may obtain additional supplies of water to meet the demands of its customers above 119,000 acre feet per year, either after normal demand reaches 119,000 acre feet or prior thereto, through: (i) the acquisition of water rights in addition to those provided under Sections 2 and 3 of this Agreement; (ii) the utilization of water from hydrologic basins outside the Truckee River Basin; (iii) the development of Truckee River groundwater basins in Nevada beyond the 15,616 acre foot supply referenced in Section 3 of this Agreement to the extent that Sierra has added customers through expansion of the boundaries of its Service Area and acquired a water supply adequate to meet full demands of the new Service Area both in normal water years and during Drought Conditions; and (iv) the implementation of other measures. Any supplies developed pursuant to this Section shall not adversely affect the rights secured to the Tribe under this Agreement, any right of the Tribe to the Remaining Waters of the Truckee River, any rights secured to the Tribe under the settlement legislation which may be enacted by the Congress, or any other rights that the Tribe may claim. Such supplies must also comply with such state, local and federal permits and approvals as may be required under the then existing and applicable laws, rules and regulations. Provided, however, that the water supplies made available to Sierra pursuant to other Sections of this Agreement may only be used to the extent provided in Sections, 5, 16 and 21 of this Agreement.

Section 25. Use of Water Outside Truckee River Basin. Sierra may utilize outside of the Truckee River Basin any of its existing Truckee River water rights or any such rights that it may acquire in the future. For any use of water outside the Truckee River Basin, except the approximately 3,000 acre feet of water committed to the Stead, Silver Lake and Golden Valley areas prior to the date of this Agreement, additional water rights shall be acquired in order to insure that return flows to the Truckee River are no less than they would have been if the water had been used in the Truckee River Basin.

Section 26. Additional Measures to Carry Out Agreement. Sierra and the Tribe agree to do those things as may be reasonably necessary to carry out the terms and conditions of this Agreement.

Section 27. Existing Perfected Rights Unaffected. Nothing in this Agreement shall be construed to:

(a) Affect any recognized and perfected right of any other person or entity to use the waters of the Truckee River or its tributaries including, but not limited to, the rights of landowners within the Newlands Project for delivery of the waters of the Truckee River to Derby Dam and for diversion of such waters at Derby Dam pursuant to the Orr Ditch Decree or any applicable regulations;

(b) Affect the right of Sierra to acquire and use for M&I purposes in accordance with this Agreement any recognized and perfected rights to waters of the Truckee River or its tributaries held by any person or entity;

(c) Affect Sierra's right to generate power at its hydroelectric plants on the Truckee River with any water rights it has or may acquire other than the rights to require releases of water from the Truckee River Reservoirs solely for hydroelectric power generation which are waived pursuant to Section 1 of this Agreement;

(d) Affect the quantity of water that is retained or carried over in storage in, or released from, the Truckee River Reservoirs pursuant to the Orr Ditch Decree and the Truckee River Agreement to satisfy the non-hydroelectric water rights recognized in the Orr Ditch Decree except for the consumptive use portion of Former Agricultural Water Rights which may be stored pursuant to the provisions of this Agreement;

(e) Affect the operation of any Truckee River Reservoirs to satisfy any applicable dam safety or flood control requirements;

(f) Affect the implementation of the Tahoe-Prosser Exchange Agreement of June 15, 1959;

(g) Result in an abandonment or forfeiture of the water rights of any party hereto; or

(h) Evidence any intention of any party hereto to abandon or forfeit any water rights.

Section 28. Water Master May Require Releases of Credit Water to Protect Existing Perfected Rights. If, for any reason, implementation of this Agreement results in less water being available for diversion to any owners of recognized and perfected Truckee River water rights than the amount to which they are entitled, or in less Truckee River water being available at Derby Dam for diversion to the Newlands Reclamation Project than the amount of Truckee River water which the landowners within the Newlands Project are entitled to divert pursuant to the Orr Ditch Decree or any applicable regulations, the Water Master pursuant to the administrative provisions of the Orr Ditch Decree shall have the authority to make-up the full amount of any such deficit by requiring subsequent releases of the water stored in the Truckee River Reservoirs pursuant to this Agreement utilizing the water of the party benefiting from the deficit.

Section 29. Conditions for Agreement to be Effective and Operative. The provisions of this Agreement shall not take effect and this Agreement shall not be operative unless and until each of the following has occurred:

(a) The Congress of the United States has enacted, and the President of the United States has signed, Pyramid Lake and Truckee River settlement legislation whose terms and provisions are satisfactory to the Tribe and Sierra;

(b) The Legislature of Nevada has enacted, and the Governor of Nevada has signed, legislation which repeals or substantially modifies N.R.S. 704.230 to permit installation of water meters on all old and new residences within Sierra's Service Area, excluding existing unmetered apartments and condominium units or complexes which have all outdoor irrigation use metered, and to permit water rates based on the amount of water delivered to each customer;

(c) A plan for financing and installing water meters in Sierra's Service Area has received required governmental approvals and there are no foreseeable obstacles to its implementation;

(d) Sierra has proposed, and the Nevada Public Service Commission has approved, an inverted block water rate structure which provides financial incentives for the conservation of water by Sierra's residential customers;

(e) All required governmental approvals have been obtained for a mandatory water conservation plan designed to produce annual water savings of 10 percent or more during the ensuing year whenever it appears, based on the April 1 seasonal Truckee River runoff forecast, that a Drought Situation exists;

(f) An operating agreement has been executed at least by the United States, the Tribe and Sierra whose provisions include: (i) all of the necessary details required for the administration and implementation of this Agreement; and (ii) the consequences in the event that any provisions of this Agreement cannot be fulfilled for reasons that are beyond the control of the parties hereto such as, by way of example, final outcomes of administrative proceedings or litigation involving other parties which are not consistent with the terms or conditions of this Agreement;

(g) The United States becomes a party to this Agreement and accepts, approves and becomes bound by all of its terms and conditions to the same extent as the Tribe;

(h) All contracts and governmental approvals required to carry out the terms and provisions of the Agreement and the operating agreement, including, without limitation, contracts for the use of space in Truckee River Reservoirs for purposes of storing and exchanging water as provided in this Agreement have been executed;

(i) This Agreement and the operating agreement referred to in subsection (f) above have been ratified, confirmed and approved by the Court in United States v. Orr Water Ditch Co., Equity No. A-3, (D.Nev.), and by the Court in United States v. Truckee River General Electric Company, Civil No. 14861 (now S-643) (E.D. Cal.), and have been incorporated into and made a part of the final judgments in those cases and available appeals from and reviews of such actions by those Courts have been exhausted;

(j) Sierra and the United States have reached agreement on: (i) the compensation Sierra shall pay to the United States for the right to use the storage capacity in the Truckee River Reservoirs; (ii) arrangements to compensate Sierra for the reduction in the amount of hydroelectric power generated at its four run of the river hydroelectric plants on the Truckee River above Reno which will result from the implementation of this Agreement; and (iii) indemnification with respect to water damage resulting from the operation of the dam and controlling works at the outlet of Lake Tahoe; and

(k) All pending litigation or the portions of pending litigation involving the Tribe, Sierra and the United States have been resolved to their mutual satisfaction.

At an appropriate time, the Tribe and Sierra agree to execute a written document which shall either confirm or deny that the conditions set forth in this Section have been satisfied.

Section 30. Notices. All notices and other communications required or permitted to be given by this Agreement must be in writing and will be deemed given on the day when delivered in person or on the third business day after the day on which mailed from within the United States of America by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested, postage prepaid, addressed as follows:

If to the Tribe: Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribal Chairman, P.O. Box 256, Nixon, Nevada 89424.

If to Sierra: Philip G. Seges, Senior Vice President, Sierra Pacific Power Company, P.O. Box 10100, Reno, Nevado 89520.

or to such other place as either party may from time to time designate in a written notice to the other.

Section 31. Captions For Convenience Only. The captions of the Sections of this Agreement are for convenience only and shall not in any way effect the construction of the terms and conditions of this Agreement.

Section 32. Entire Agreement. This Agreement contains the entire agreement between the parties hereto and there are no promises, agreements, conditions, undertakings, warranties, or representations, oral or written, express or implied, between them other than as herein set forth. No change or modification of this Agreement or of any of the provisions hereof shall be valid or effective unless the same is in writing and signed by the parties hereto. No alleged or contended waiver of any of the provisions of this Agreement shall be valid or effective unless signed in writing by the party against who it is sought to be enforced.

In witness whereof, the parties have executed this Preliminary Agreement as of the day and year first above written.

Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe of Indians,
JOSEPH H. ELY,
Tribal Chairman.

By Mr. McCONNELL:

S. 1555. A bill to amend part D of title IV of the Social Security Act to extend permanently the Federal tax refund offset program used in child support enforcement; to the Committee on Finance.

CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT EXTENSION ACT

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, the fastest growing segment of poor America today is female-headed, single-parent households. These families struggle on a single paycheck, balancing health care costs, child care costs, food bills, energy bills, rent bills, and innumerable other obligations. There is neither time nor money to plan for the future, prepare for college, or pull away from the numbing grip of poverty.

The bill I am introducing today addresses a basic survival issue for these single-parent families. Sometimes it makes the difference between only two meals a day and three meals a day; sometimes it can pave the way for a needed medical procedure; and sometimes it determines whether a promising young child will go to college or not.

That issue is child support. It is a sad reflection of our "disposable society" that some parents simply discard their children after a family dissolves, and shirk their responsibility to provide for their children's needs. As a result, the single parent who is left to care for these children must bear twice the responsibility, and often is condemned to a life of poverty. In many cases, the future of discarded children is tragically dimmed by poor nutrition, little contact with the single working parent, and low educational horizons.

The 98th Congress sought to remedy this problem in Public Law 98-378, which allows single-parent families to intercept the Federal tax refund due to the parent who is delinquent in making child support payments. In 1981, Congress already had authorized the interception of Federal income tax refunds for AFDC families. Public Law 98-378 extended the tax refund intercept program to non-AFDC cases as well.

For some unexplained reason, however, a sunset provision was added to this law, terminating the intercept program for all non-AFDC cases after January 1, 1991. This termination conflicts with the express intent of the law which is to make the program available to all families whose child support payments have dried up because of a delinquent parent.

The tax intercept program has been of tremendous assistance to non-AFDC single-parent families in Kentucky. Collection of overdue child support payments for these families through Federal tax refunds increased by nearly 100 percent in 1987. Ending the non-AFDC portion of this program would have a devastating effect on child support collection efforts in my

State and other States. The impending termination date already is prompting some State offices to begin dismantling their programs, now that they have just gotten off the ground.

Mr. President, we cannot allow this to happen. It is vital that we extend this program to provide child support to all needy families. The tax intercept program is the single most effective method for ensuring compliance with child support obligations and obtaining redress against those who do not comply.

Immediate legislative action is required to save this family assistance program from extinction. The legislation I introduce today does not call for any additional Federal spending, does not create a new Federal bureaucracy, and does not impose new taxes. It is a simple but necessary provision to ensure that single-parent families will not have to struggle in poverty while the other parent evades all responsibility for the children.

In offering this measure, I would like to express my deep thanks to Dr. Harry Cowherd, secretary for human resources in the Kentucky State Cabinet. He has been very active in developing Kentucky's child support tax intercept program, and personally alerted me to the possible termination of the program if Congress does not act soon. His tireless efforts are to be commended, and the single-parent families of my State owe him their thanks.

I urge my colleagues to support this measure to preserve the full operation of the child support tax intercept program. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text on the bill appear in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1555

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Child Support Enforcement Extension Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. Section 464(a)(2)(B) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 664(a)(2)(B)) is amended by striking". and before January 1, 1991".●

By Mr. DECONCINI (for himself and Mr. MCCAIN):

S. 1556. A bill to designate the Salt-Gila aqueduct of the Central Arizona Project as the "Fannin-McFarland Aqueduct"; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

FANNING-MCFARLAND AQUEDUCT

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, today I join with my colleague and friend from Arizona, Senator MCCAIN, in introducing legislation to redesignate the Salt-Gila Aqueduct of the Central Arizona Project as the Fannin-McFarland Aqueduct. We are doing this to recognize the outstanding achievements of these statesmen and their heroic efforts to get Arizona's lifeline, the central Arizona project, on line.

For my colleagues in the Chamber who are not familiar with the Central Arizona Project, I would like to take a few minutes to explain the purposes of the project and its importance. The Central Arizona Project was authorized by Congress in 1968 to bring our State's Colorado River allocation to the rural and metropolitan communities of central and southern Arizona. The water supply in this desert region of the Southwest consists almost entirely of ground water. Because of growth and development in this area, the overdraft of ground water is nearing a critical stage. The CAP will enable Arizona to put its allotment of Colorado River water to beneficial use while at the same time reducing the overdrafting of our precious ground water supplies. The CAP is, in my opinion, the most important Federal project in Arizona.

Last year, Congress redesignated the first stretch of the project, the Granite Reef Aqueduct, as the Hayden-Rhodes Waterway. This was a fitting tribute to two men who served their State so ably in their respective congressional bodies. The legislation we are introducing today renames the next stretch of the project after Ernest W. McFarland and Paul Fannin, two of Arizona's outstanding leaders who played a key role in the realization of this dream.

Paul Fannin served as Governor of Arizona from 1958 to 1964. In 1964 he was elected to the U.S. Senate and served in this body until 1976. As Governor of Arizona, Paul Fannin directed State water agencies and was instrumental in shaping Arizona's water policy. He called for an information and education campaign on the CAP to help Arizonans realize the great importance of the project to Arizona's future. While in the U.S. Senate, he cosponsored and aggressively pressed for the adoption of the legislation that finally authorized the CAP.

Ernest McFarland also had a distinguished career in public service, serving Arizona as both Governor and U.S. Senator. He served in the Senate from 1941 to 1952. From 1951 to 1952 he served as the majority leader of this body. In 1947, Senator McFarland introduced the first bill calling for the authorization of the CAP. While in the Senate, he was known as the "Chief Strategist" for the CAP. In 1954 he was successfully elected as Governor and served in that position for one term where he continued his dilligent efforts on behalf of the CAP.

It is only appropriate that we in Arizona attempt to honor these men and their great contributions not only to our State, but to the Nation as well.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD, and I urge my colleagues on the Senate Energy and Natural Resource Committee to take timely action on this legislation.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1556

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) The Salt-Gila aqueduct of the Central Arizona project, constructed, operated, and maintained under section 301(a)(7)) of the Colorado River Basin Project Act (43 U.S.C. 1521(a)(7), hereafter shall be known and designated as the "Fannin-McFarland Aqueduct".

(b) Any reference in any law, regulation, document, record, map, or other paper of the United States to the aqueduct referred to in subsection (a) hereby is deemed to be a reference to the "Fannin-McFarland Aqueduct".●

By Mr. ROTH (for himself, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. SANFORD, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. GORTON, and Mr. COATS):

S. 1557. A bill to amend title 17, United States Code, to permit the unlicensed viewing of videos under certain conditions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

VIDEO VIEWING IN NURSING HOMES

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, on April 6, 1989, I introduced S. 716, a bill to permit the unlicensed viewing of video movies in nursing homes and other similar facilities. Since that time I have been in contact with other Members of this body and of the other body as well as with some motion picture distributors. As a result of this exchange, I am pleased to introduce a new bill today.

The legislation has been redrafted to clarify certain aspects which some, particularly those in the industry, thought unclear. However, the bill introduced today does not differ either in purpose or effect from S. 716. The new bill would permit the unlicensed viewing of videos in nursing homes and other similar institutions under certain conditions, just as would S. 716. The new bill simply states those conditions with greater precision.

The bill would cover video viewing in a "hospital, hospice, nursing home, retirement home, or other such group home" but only if the institution, whatever it is, meets a two-prong test. First, the institution must provide "long-term health or health-related care and services to individuals on a regular basis." Second, the institution must serve as a "temporary or permanent home" for such individuals.

Under this two-prong test, an acute-care hospital, the typical hospital providing emergency medicine, would not be covered inasmuch as its care is normally short-term, not long-term, and its patients do not live in the hospital either as a temporary or a permanent home. It is my intention that the time frame of "long-term" care and "temporary home" be 30 days or more in duration.

Thus the person who is admitted to a hospital for surgery and who stays there a week or so is not receiving long-term care and has not changed his home; the hospital does not become his or her home simply because of one or several overnight stays.

On the other hand, in my State of Delaware, there are hospitals that are, in fact, nursing homes. They provide long-term care and serve as the home, the only home, of its residents. Such a hospital would, indeed, be covered by this legislation.

There are other conditions that must be met under the bill. The institution may not levy a direct charge to view the video. And the performance may not be "further transmitted" to the public "by closed-circuit television or by any other means." These conditions track those set out for public television viewing in the copyright code (17 U.S. Code sec. 110(5)).

The purpose of the direct charge condition is to make sure that no profit is made from the performance of the copyrighted work by those institutions providing the entertainment to viewers. Under the public television viewing provision today, the tavern-owner may offer television viewing to patrons without obtaining a copyright license so long as he does not charge his patrons for viewing. That the owner charges for other items does not require him to obtain a copyright license.

The same distinction would apply under my bill to nursing homes showing videos to residents in common areas.

The retransmittal provision of my bill, like that found in the public television exemption, simply makes certain that no commercial aspect is involved. This is, after all, a "home viewing" bill. Very few homes have retransmittal equipment. This condition dove tails with the legislation's requirement that the television and the VCR be "of a kind commonly used in private homes."

The only difference between my retransmittal provision and that in the public television viewing exemption is that I have expressly stated that closed-circuit television retransmittal is inconsistent with unlicensed video viewing in the covered institutions. Thus, a hospital, for example, that retransmits videos over closed circuit television would not be included in the licensing exception created by my bill. However, since the television viewing provision and my bill do not embrace any form of retransmittal to the public, their legal significance is identical.

As I said on April 6, 1989, when I introduced S. 716, the purpose of my legislation is simple equity. It would erase a glitch in our copyright law that discriminates against people who reside in hospitals, hospices, nursing homes, retirement homes or other group homes who would like to watch a video movie. Today, people who reside in a typical family setting are granted video viewing rights. You and I do not need a copyright license to view a video movie. Not so those in nursing homes. Even though they reside in homes, they must obtain a license because nursing home residents do not constitute "a normal circle of a family and its social acquaintances"—the group to which the home-viewing exception of copyright law is confined.

This discrimination against those residing in nursing homes and other such group settings is rather sad. The healthy can live with their families. The wealthy can pay for private care. Both of these can thus enjoy videos without a license. But the unhealthy and unwealthy are, by their circumstances, confined to group care. That copyright law would require them to obtain a license does not make sense to me.

If this is viewed in some circles as a matter of principle, let us recall that the principle is already well-established. The home-viewing exception is already a fact of American life. A nursing home is a home. It is time that the law was brought in line with this Fact. The law must be changed.

I am pleased that the legislation I am introducing today has the enthusiastic support of the American Association of Activity Professionals, the American Association of Homes for the Aging, the American Health Care Association, and the National Citizens Coalition for Nursing Home Reform.

Finally, it gives me pleasure to state that, today, I am joined by Senators THURMOND, SANFORD, HATFIELD, STEVENS, GORTON, and COATS in introducing this legislation. And in the other body, Congressmen CARDIN and HOYER, are introducing identical legislation today.

With this kind of support, I look forward to prompt action in the Congress. My sincere thanks to all those who have joined in this effort.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1557

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 110 of title 17, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraph (10) as paragraph (11), and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (9) the following:

"(10) performance or display of a work by means of a video cassette recorder and a television set of a kind commonly used in private homes, if—

"(A) the performance or display occurs in a hospital, hospice, nursing home, retirement home, or other such group home;

"(B) such institution both provides long-term health or health-related care and servs ices to individuals on a regular basis and serves as a temporary or permanent home for such individuals;

"(C) no direct charge is made to see or hear such performance or display; and

"(D) the performance or display is not further transmitted by closed-circuit television or by any other means;".

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I rise in support of the bill of the Senator from Delaware, and to commend him for the work he has done to correct an unfairness in our copyright laws that works to the detriment of thousands of seniors in this country. This is a simple bill; it removes the requirement on those living in a nursing home or group-type setting to obtain a license before watching movies on a VCR.

This bill amends a section of copyright law that discriminates against people who are confined to settings such as hospitals, hospices, nursing homes, or anywhere that people do not live privately.

Copyright law states that if you live in a residential home or apartment, whether by yourself or with your family, it is not necessary to obtain a license to watch copyrighted performances on video tape. A person does not have to obtain a license if they constitute "a normal circle of a family and its social acquaintances." But if you are not able to reside with your family, if you cannot afford to pay a private nurse to take care of you during an illness, if you cannot afford private accommodations in a hospital, then you are directly affected by this act. Under current law, if you live in a group home, you must obtain a license to watch copyrighted performances on a VCR. This is outrageous.

I am proud to cosponsor this bill, which erases a glitch in our copyright law. In 1976 when Congress wrote the revised copyright code, it did not intend to discriminate against people who were in nursing homes and hospitals. Congress realized that these people were entertained in common areas and are not in a traditional family setting. Congress made an exception to licensing for watching television in common areas. The reason that Congress did not make exceptions for the video cassette recorders in the 1976 bill is because the VCR was not as prominent as it is today. It has only been in this decade that the VCR has reached its tremendous popularity.

The bill updates the television exception by including VCR's.

The bill specifically takes care of men and women who are in a medical-type setting. The VCR exception applies only to "a hospital, hospice, nursing home, or other group home providing health or health-related care and services to individuals on a regular basis."

The Motion Picture Licensing Corp. objects to this bill. They are trying to collect licensing fees from group homes for what they call "reasonable" fees. This charge would only apply to people in group settings and not to people in a private, family-type atmosphere. A "reasonable" fee in my opinion is zero. Shame on the Motion Picture Licensing Corp.

While the fee may seem reasonable to some, even a small fee per movie could add up to large sums each year. The industry suggests Medicare pick up these costs, but I don't believe that is appropriate. Senior citizens often live in group settings that is their only home. The fellow residents make up the only family that they have. They should not be discriminated against because they do not make up "a normal circle of a family and its social acquaintances." They deserve the right many of the rest of us have—to watch movies of our choice in our own "home." This bill gives them that right. I urge my colleagues to support it.

By Mr. HEINZ (for himself, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. GLENN):

S. 1558. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to require renal dialysis facilities and other providers of dialysis-related services, devices, and supplies to obtain informed, written consent from medicare patients with respect to the use of reprocessed dialysis devices and supplies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

END STAGE RENAL DISEASE PATIENT RIGHTS AND PAYMENT EQUITY ACT

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, the 100th Congress adjourned with at least one important piece of legislation still on the table. I rise today together with Senators PRYOR and GLENN to reintroduce a bill that will protect tens of thousands of Medicare kidney dialysis patients from what may be dangerous and unnecessary risks in the reuse of filters, blood tubing and other devices.

The provision of dialysis that is safe and effective is critical. Over 130,000 Americans require three, 4-hour dialysis treatments a week to cleanse the blood of toxins, salt, and water that accumulate. These life-sustaining treatments must continue for the remainder of these patients' lives unless they receive a kidney transplantation.

The Government's role in kidney dialysis is significant, with Medicare funding over 80 percent of all dialysis treatment at a cost of over 1.5 billion dollars. Medicare reimburses dialysis clinics on the assumption of one-time use of the critical filters and tubing. It is worth noting that this equipment is almost always clearly labeled "single use only." Yet more than 50 percent of clinics today reuse this disposable equipment—some as many as 40 times—sterilizing with formaldehyde.

While the verdict is still out on the ultimate safety of reusing dialysis equipment, the experts agree on the need for safeguards. Their and my concern, Mr. President, is that, in the absence of conclusive studies, we have no standards and thus no surety that reuse can be done safely. We don't know, for example, how many times these devices can be used before they crack, before harmful deposits form, or before blood clotting destroys the filter. We don't know the best chemical solution for effective sterilization. Formaldehyde, the most commonly used chemical in reprocessing can cause cancer, liver damage, and destruction of red blood cells.

An investigation and hearing conducted when I was Chairman of the Senate Committee on Aging raised serious red flags over reuse, including patient deaths attributed to bacteria in supposedly sterilized filters and bloodlines and patients forced to reuse who would prefer not to. It is unconscionable, Mr. President, that a Federal benefit intended to save lives, is turned into a macabre game with hidden risks and quiet coercion.

For these reasons, the legislation I am introducing today will require that all facilities participating in the Medicare End Stage Disease Program inform patients in writing of the potential risks and benefits of reuse, that patients be given the freedom to choose whether or not they want reuse, and that a Medicare dialysis clinic cannot refuse to treat a patient with new equipment if the patient decides against reuse.

This bill will neither increase costs nor paperwork to Medicare's ESRD program. The Federal Government already reimburses dialysis providers at the same rate, regardless of whether or not they reuse disposable dialysis devices. The new consent forms will be filed for review by the appropriated State survey agencies in the normal process of determining whether facilities meet the conditions of Medicare participation.

The legislation also does not seek to bring to a halt the reuse of disposable dialysis devices. Dialysis with reused disposable equipment may indeed be safe and effective dialysis under certain circumstances. However, until we have the research on which to base guidelines and procedures for safe and effective recycling, we need to protect patients through informed consent.

The legislation also recognizes concerns over the adequacy and equity of current payment methods used under Medicare's ESRD program that have been raised by the Congress, providers and ESRD patients. First, the bill prohibits the administration from proceeding with its plan to reduce payments in fiscal year 1990—before we have the results of a congressionally mandated IOM study of the impact of ESRD payments on the quality of patient care. Second, the bill requires that the Prospective Payment Review Commission study and recommend a payment rate for fiscal year 1991 that takes into account the IOM findings and any additional costs to providers of protecting the patient's right to elect for or against reuse.

Mr. President, the Medicare End Stage Renal Disease program has been tremendously succcessful for more than a decade in providing life sustaining treatment to a very vulnerable group of Americans. This legislation can help return the ESRD program to a program trusted by patients whose lives depend on it and fairly reimburse those who provide this essential care. I, therefore, urge my colleagues' support for this legislation which has the endorsement of the National Kidney Patients' Association.

Thank you, Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that the summary and text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1558

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "End Stage Renal Disease Patient Rights and Payment Equity Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. USE OF REPROCESSED DIALYSIS DEVICES AND SUPPLIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1881 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395rr) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) No provider or facility may provide or utilize reprocessed dialysis devices or supplies for the dialysis of an individual entitled to benefits under this title unless the provider or facility has obtained the informed, written consent of the individual in accordance with paragraph (2).

"(2)(A) A provider or facility that proposes to provide or utilize any reprocessed dialysis devices or supplies for the dialysis of an individual entitled to benefits under this title shall furnish the individual or a legal guardian with a written document—

"(i) informing the individual or guardian of—

"(I) the specific reprocessed dialysis devices and supplies the provider or facility proposes to provide or utilize,

"(II) the specific substances and materials to be utilized in reprocessing each such device or supply, and

"(III) the potential and known risks and benefits of utilizing each such device or supply (including, but not limited to, any increased risk of infection and any harmful long-term effects that the substances and materials utilized in reprocessing the device or supply may have);

"(ii) providing assurances to the individual or guardian that the provider or facility—

"(I) will not penalize the individual in any way for refusal to consent to the provision or utilization of reprocessed dialysis devices or supplies for the dialysis of the individual, and

"(II) will not refuse to provide or utilize dialysis devices and supplies that have not been reprocessed for the dialysis of the individual; and

"(iii) informing the individual or guardian of the grievance mechanisms available to him or her under this title.

"(B) The consent of an individual or legal guardian shall be evidenced by his or her signature on a copy of the document furnished to the individual pursuant to subparagraph (A). Such signature shall be in addition to any signature indicating that consent is given for the individual to enter dialysis.

"(C) An individual or legal guardian may terminate consent given in accordance with subparagraph (A) by notifying a provider or facility in writing that the consent is terminated. A termination of consent shall be effective on the date on which the provider or facility receives written notice of the termination.

"(3)(A) A provider or facility shall allow the Secretary (or a State agency designated by the Secretary) full access to all records of the provider or facility relating to the provision or utilization of reprocessed dialysis devices or supplies for the dialysis of individuals entitled to benefits under this title, including any written consent forms obtained pursuant to paragraph (2).

"(B) If the Secretary determines that a provider or facility has failed to comply with any of the requirements of this subsection, the Secretary may terminate or withhold certification of the provider or facility for purposes of payment for services, devices, or supplies furnished to individuals entitled to benefits under this title.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'reprocessed dialysis device or supply' shall include, but is not limited to, any hemodialyzer, blood line, transducer filter, and dialyzer cap that has been used in dialysis and processed for reuse in dialysis.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective with respect to dialysis services furnished on or after the date that is 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2. PAYMENT AND STUDY FOR END STAGE RENAL DISEASE SERVICES.

(a) MAINTENANCE OF CURRENT COMPOSITE PAYMENT RATE.—Effective with respect to dialysis services provided on or after October 1, 1989, and before October 1, 1990, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall establish the base rate for routine dialysis treatment in a free-standing facility and in a hospital based facility under section 1881(b)(7) of the Social Security Act at a level equal to the respective rate in effect as of September 30, 1989.

(b) STUDY OF PAYMENT RATES FOR SUCH SERVICES.—(1) The Prospective Payment Assessment Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission) shall conduct a study and submit such study along with recommendations to the Senate Committee on Finance and the House Committees on Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce no later than June 1, 1990, on the appropriate amount of payment levels for fiscal year 1991 for End Stage Renal Disease Services as provided under section 1881(b)(7) of the Social Security Act.

(2) Such study and recommendations shall—

(A) include and reference any available findings from the study conducted by the National Academy of Sciences as provided under section 4036(d) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987; and

(B) take into account—

(i) the costs of ensuring a patient's right to elect for or against re-use of dialysis equipment; and

(ii) the merits and feasibility of applying medical necessity and social needs criteria in determining the amount of payment for End Stage Renal Disease Services made under any payment method other than a method based on a single composite weighted formula.

SUMMARY OF THE END STAGE RENAL DISEASE (ESRD) PATIENT RIGHTS AND PAYMENT EQUITY ACT OF 1989

THE ISSUE

The Federal Government has the responsibility of assuring quality care to dialysis patients, since it is the primary payor (Medicare) for most dialysis treatment. There is a virulent debate regarding single use or reuse of dialysis devices and supplies. To date, there has been no clinical trials to determine the safety or harm of the reuse technique.

In the absence of this evidence, the Federal Government should assure that the patient has: (1) informed written consent explaining all potential and known risks and benefits of the reuse method, and (2) the opportunity to choose either single use or reuse without risk of loss of treatment. At the same time, current payment methods should be re-examined to ensure their adequacy with respect to ensuring patients this fundamental choice.

THE BILL

The bill requires renal dialysis facilities/providers to obtain informed, written consent from Medicare patients with respect to the use of reprocessed dialysis devices and supplies. It also prohibits any reductions in payments to providers under the composite rate in FY90 and requires that ProPAC examine and recommend an equitable payment approach and level for FY91—taking into consideration informed consent for reuse. The Health Care Financing Administration has proposed reducing these rates an additional $6.00 administratively in FY90—prior to the release of a Congressionally mandated IOM study on the impact of ESRD payment on quality of care (due 12/90).

Informed Written Consent: Patient or Guardian must be informed of: Specific reprocessed devices, to be used; Specific substances/materials to be used in the reprocessing; Any potential and known risks and benefits using reprocessed devices and supplies: Individual's ability to terminate consent by written notice; and Notification of grievance mechanisms.

Assurances to Patients: The individual will not be penalized in any way for refusing to use reprocessed devices (eg. loss of treatment).

Oversight: There will be full access by federal or state agencies to all records of renal dialysis facilities/providers relating to reprocessed devices including written consent forms.

Sanctions: Facilities/Providers who fail to comply may have their certification withheld or terminated for reimbursement.

FY90 Method I composite rate not be reduced below FY89 level.

ProPAC recommend FY91 Method I and Method II rates, taking into account IOM findings and patient choice on reuse.

Financial Impact: Budget neutral.●

By Mr. WARNER (for himself, Mr. BUMPERS, and Mr. ROBB):

S. 1559. A bill to expand the boundaries of the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battlefields Memorial National Military Park near Fredericksburg, VA; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EXPANSION OF FREDERICKSBURG AND SPOTSYLVANIA COUNTY BATTLEFIELDS MEMORIAL NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, today I, along with my colleagues Senators BUMPERS and ROBB, am introducing the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battlefields Memorial National Military Park Expansion Act of 1989. This bill consolidates and reasonably expands the boundaries of the existing Fredericksburg-Spotsylvania Park, which has jurisdiction over four battlefields which were pivotal to the course of the war between the States.

The Virginia Senators are particularly honored to have Senator BUMPERS join as an original cosponsor, because he has devoted considerable personal study to this period of American history. We are all privileged to introduce this legislation, because it is essential to ensure that an important part of our Nation's heritage will be preserved for future generations.

Mr. President, the present Fredericksburg-Spotsylvania County Battlefields Memorial National Military Park was established in 1927, with the acquisition of the actual fighting lines and earthworks of the above cited four key Civil War battles that occurred near Fredericksburg, VA, between 1862 and 1864. Now, suburban growth threatens the integrity of not only the fighting lines and earthworks, but of the battlefields themselves not now Federal park land. The time has come to create a boundary to protect all four important battlefields and to consolidate them into a single integrated park.

As Congress has provided for other national parks, this bill authorizes additional land acquisition, land exchanges, acquisition of alternative rights of access and acceptance of donated conservation easements. Specifically, to assist in expanding existing boundaries, the bill requires the purchase by the National Park Service of 762 acres of private land and 593 acres in scenic easements. We suggest that the consolidated park be named the "Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Battlefields."

Mr. President, the House of Representatives has already unanimously passed legislation identical to the bill we introduce today. That bill was introduced by my colleague Congressman FRENCH SLAUGHTER, who represents the Seventh Congressional District of Virginia, which contains the existing and proposed park land.

Mr. President, the Fredericksburg-Spotsylvania area was militarily significant during the Civil War because of its proximity to Richmond, the capital and industrial center of the Confederacy. Four important battles occurred on the way to Richmond: Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Wilderness, and Spotsylvania Court House.

The Confederate Army achieved substantial gains during both the battles of Fredericksburg, in December 1862, and Chancellorsville, in April 1863. The Confederate gain at Chancellorsville was also marred because of the loss of the famed Gen. Stonewall Jackson. During the battles of Wilderness and Spotsylvania Court House both in May 1864, General Grant succeeded in pushing Lee back closer to Richmond, despite significant losses. Although these two battles are viewed by historians as Confederate gains, they mark the beginning of a long campaign in which the Federal army under U.S. Grant ultimately gained its objectives.

Mr. President, the Park Service needs the authority to go forward with the acquisition of the additional land called for in this proposed legislation to guard against development threatening the historical integrity of this hallowed ground. I hope that my colleagues in the Senate will act on this legislation as expeditiously as possible.●

By Mr. BURNS (for himself, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. HATCH, Mr. FORD, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. DOLE, and Mr. NICKLES):

S. 1560. A bill to suspend the enforcement of certain regulations relating to underground storage tanks, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

SUSPENSION OF ENFORCEMENT OF CERTAIN REGULATIONS ON UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANKS

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation on behalf of myself, the two Senators from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS and Mr. MCCLURE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], that will address the problems faced by small gas station owners and others in complying with the Environmental Protection Agency's underground storage tank regulations.

These regulations, implemented in January, may force many of the small gas stations that dot rural Montana and other States to go out of business. The EPA has been mandated to clean up leaking underground storage tanks. This is a laudable goal, and I commend them for their effort. The approach, however, has been to implement the regulations in an across-the-board fashion, without concern for the size of the small business involved or its ability to meet the requirements of the law.

All gas stations will now be required to carry $1 million in insurance against the possibility of leaking storage tanks. The large companies, of course, can afford such coverage. The small owner, however, often cannot—even if such insurance was available. The unfortunate fact of the matter is that many insurance companies have suspended providing insurance for the time being. Insurance is also extremely costly. But EPA has no flexibility in the matter, it must require the insurance of all who have underground tanks.

The bottom line is this: Small gas station owners have been placed in an impossible position—they are required to carry insurance which is either not available at all or can be obtained only at prohibitive cost.

Without legislative action more than 26,500 small gas stations across America are likely to shut down, according to a survey by the Petroleum Marketers Association of America. Many of these stations will be in remote rural areas where their absence will only result in an increase of private tanks—thus spreading the risk of leaks and spills. The loss of stations will also create a hardship on those folks living in or traveling through rural areas.

The legislation I am introducing today will give those small gas station owners 12 months reprieve until EPA can certify that reasonably affordable insurance is available. In addition, this legislation reduces the mandatory minimum limit of $1,000,000 to an amount determined by EPA—but below $500,000. The $500,000 level would still cover 99 percent of all leaks in this country.

The legislation I am introducing will also eliminate the requirement that the insurance cover third party claims on top of clean up costs. Third party coverage merely assures litigants large court judgments—it has nothing to do with cleaning up the environment. This amendment alone will bring 28 State insurance programs into compliance.

Finally, the legislation will require EPA to examine the financial difficulties associated with monitoring, upgrading, and replacing existing tanks, and to report to Congress on ways to relieve those difficulties.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article by Mea Andrews of the Missoulian titled "New Fuel Storage Rules Put Pressure on Station Owners," be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW FUEL STORAGE RULES PUT PRESSURE ON STATION OWNERS

(By Mea Andrews)

The number of gas stations in Montana probably will dwindle in the next few years as owners of small-volume outlets decide to leave the business rather than comply with new federal standards for fuel storage tanks.

Station owners are getting help from the state with one requirement, however. On July 1, motorists started paying a 1-cent per gallon gasoline tax for a state insurance pool that will be used to clean up sites contaminated by fuel spills and leaks.

"We've got a lot of work ahead of us," said Jean Riley, an environmental engineer for the state's underground storage tank program. "There are a lot of business decisions being made right now."

The regulations approved by Congress are aimed at preventing fuel leaks that can contaminate underground water. Starting this year, standards for detecting leaks in tanks are due to be phased in over five years. Other regulations will go into effect in 1998 that protect tanks from corrosion and the soil from fuel spills.

Starting this year and continuing through October 1990 are deadlines for station owners to arrange at least $1 million in insurance to cover cleanup costs of spills and leaks—insurance policies that are not widely used by mom-and-pop size stations, and are high-cost, hard-to-get luxuries for others.

The state's new insurance pool will help, although station owners would be liable for up to $17,500 of the first $35,000 in bills for a cleanup project.

Most troublesome for many stations is the anti-corrosion requirement, which involves either replacing tanks with approved new models or lining old ones with special coatings. Average cost per station could be $20,000 to $45,000 or more, according to Montana equipment dealers and state officials.

"It is tough enough on the big operators," said Larry Fickler of Fickler Oil Co. north of Deer Lodge. "I just don't see how the low-volume stations are going to be able to do it."

Rural residents may find themselves driving farther to fill up their tanks, and small stations that discontinue pumping gas may find their auto repair operations in trouble, too.

Curt Coulter of Coulter Automotive worries about that. He runs the only service station in Charlo, but gasoline is just a small part of his business.

"We don't make that much on gasoline, but it brings a lot of people around so we can talk to them, look at their tires, belts and hoses," he said.

"The big decision I have to make is, if I put $16,000 to $20,000 in the ground for the tanks and pay another $2,500 for insurance, I just don't pump enough gas" to warrant staying in the gas business, he said.

Coulter said he would try to continue the repair garage. But the lack of gasoline would be an inconvenience for customers.

"They would have to drive to St. Ignatius or Ronan for gas," he said. "It hurts them, too."

Corrosion-resistant coatings can be bonded to some old tanks, but the tanks must be dug up, cut open and inspected. That may prompt many station owners to replace the steel units with fiberglass or other approved tanks, said Hal Tremper, vice president of Missoula's Tremper Distributing.

"We have a number of small stations that seem to be putting off a decision," Tremper said. "I just hope they understand that they do have to do something."

Montana's data base of underground storage tanks lists over 18,000 tanks in 9,000 different locations; more than 16,000 tanks are steel, said Riley.

The average age of the tanks is 16 years; about 2,000 of the tanks are over 25 years old, and some have been around for 75 years or longer.

The older the tank, the more likely that corrosion has started causing leaks.

"At most of the tanks we are seeing removed, there is at least some contamination at every site," Riley said. "Most of it is in the soil and a lot of it is fairly minimal—around fill pipes, where they've overfilled (the tank)."

Most spills occur when a fuel-delivery truck's hose is disconnected from the tank, and a few gallons of gasoline spills into the ground. Over time, the accumulation can create broader and deeper contaminated areas.

By December 1998, old tanks also must be fitted with devices that catch spills and prevent over-filling tanks.

Alarms that would signal nearly full tanks, automatic shut-off valves and bucket-like basins that catch fuel around a tank's fill pipe are some of the approved methods.

"We have heard about some people saying they can't afford all of this," Riley said.

"They are ones that seem to be working on a shoestring budget, anyway. But we still have a lot of people interested in getting into the business, too. We're still getting a lot of calls on that."

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I strongly endorse the bill introduced by my friend and colleague from Montana, Senator BURNS. His legislation addresses the difficulties imposed on small businesses, especially gasoline marketers, by the Environmental Protection Agency's current regulations governing underground storage tanks.

The difficulties facing underground tank owners are twofold. First, the technical standards required in 1984 under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act are not cheap. The cost of compliance over the last 3 years alone has been estimated at $37,000 per marketer. If projected expenditures this year are included, the petromarketing industry will have spent nearly a billion dollars on upgrading, replacing, and monitoring underground tanks by the end of 1989. And several times that amount will be spent by the time we reach the 1999 deadline for compliance.

Second, Congress required as part of the 1986 Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act an aggressive financial assurance requirement for tank owners. This act requires that leaks from underground tanks be covered by specified insurance options. Several of those options are not available to small independent petromarketers. And where commercial insurance is available, it is extremely expensive.

This two-tiered regulatory burden threatens the survival of many small gas stations and other tank owners. While EPA made an effort to minimize these costs, it is obvious that the requirements laid out in statute were not enacted with due consideration for small business. That is why I am committed to moving the legislation we have introduced today.

An ounce of prevention is truly worth a pound of cure. In our bill, we have concluded that if some aspect of the current regulatory burden must be lifted, it should be in the financial assurance requirements and not the technical standards. If our goal is to protect human health and the environment, dollars devoted to leak prevention will do far more good than financial assurance.

So the bill lifts some of the most costly provisions of the current financial assurance regulations, while instructing EPA to develop ideas and methods to make the monitoring upgrading and replacing of tanks more affordable. Even after the bill passes, insurance requirements will cover more than 99 percent of all leaks from underground tanks. I think this is a balanced and well-conceived bill, and I encourage my fellow Senators to add their names as cosponsors.

In this era of new environmental zeal, it is important that we not jeopardize the survival of the small, independent entrepreneur who forms the backbone of our Nation's economy. After all, without the entrepreneurial engine of new technology, little if any environmental progress would ever occur.

By Mr. BOND (for himself, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. DOLE, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. BOREN):

S. 1561. A bill to condition eligibility for participation in certain agricultural programs on the exporter not using commodities or products as the basis for a claim of a drawback under the Tariff Act of 1930, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

CONDITIONING ELIGIBILITY FOR PARTICIPATION IN CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senators HARKIN, LUGAR, BOSCHWITZ, MCCONNELL, DOLE, CONRAD, PRYOR, and BOREN, I am introducing legislation to correct a loophole which now undermines the intent of certain export programs administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture [USDA]. Although this problem was discovered only recently, I believe an expeditious legislative remedy is necessary.

Currently, the Tariff Act of 1930 allows the reimbursement of import duties—duty drawback—when products fungible—considered identical and interchangeable—with imported products are exported. For example, an importer of crude degummed soybean oil that uses the oil for domestic purposes can subsequently seek duty drawback if it exports, within 3 years, U.S.-origin soybean oil.

However, it has become apparent that companies have exploited duty drawback provisions by combining this duty drawback program with the benefits of USDA export programs. For example, a company recently imported South American-origin soybean oil, paying a 22.5-percent import duty. Subsequently, the company received guaranteed credit through the Commodity Credit Corporation's GSM-102 Export Program. Thus the company was eligible to receive duty drawback of the tariffs paid on the South American imports. In short, this allows companies to use a government export program as a means to facilitate imports of foreign origin commodities.

As it currently operates, duty drawbacks could be an incentive for exporters to import foreign agricultural commodities which are neither in short supply nor price competitive. These artificially induced imports offset subsequent export sales and thus there is no net reduction in U.S. supplies. I believe this practice violates the intent of the export programs administered by USDA.

The legislation I am introducing today closes this loophole. Specifically, the bill:

Requires exporters to certify that they will not seek duty drawback on vegetable oil or vegetable oil products, previously imported, on exports made under USDA programs.

Exempts exporters from the certification requirements in the event there was an existing export contract. In other words, contracts entered into prior to the effective date of this bill will be grandfathered.

Mr. President, although this loophole was originally identified by industry, USDA has worked diligently to analyze both administrative and legislative remedies. This bill was developed when it became clear that a legislative remedy was necessary.

I believe this legislation corrects an unintentional loophole by stipulating that export programs will only be used for the purpose for which they were designed. Also, I might add that the legitimate use of drawback outside USDA programs will not be impacted by this legislation. Finally, I am pleased to say that this bill has the strong support of the National Oilseed Processors Association, the National Sunflower Association, the National Cottonseed Products Association, the National Cotton Council, and the American Soybean Association.

I am hopeful this legislation will receive expeditious consideration by Congress and intend to work hard for its passage in this body.

I ask unanimous consent that a text of the bill, a letter of endorsement, and a section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONDITIONS FOR ELIGIBILITY IN CERTAIN PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.— Except as provided in subsection (b), as a condition of eligibility for participation in any export program under title I or title III of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1961 et seq.), as amended, or in any export credit, credit guarantee, bonus, or other export program administered by the Commodity Credit Corporation or carried out with funds made available pursuant to section 32 of Public Law 74-320, the exporter shall certify that none of the agricultural commodity or product exported under any such program will be used or has been used as the basis for a claim or a refund, as drawback, pursuant to subsection (j)(2) of section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (19 U.S.C. 1313(j)(2)), of any duty, tax, or fee imposed under Federal law on an imported commodity or product.

(b) VEGETABLE OIL.—As a condition of eligibility for participation in any of the programs described in subsection (a), an exporter of vegetable oil or a vegetable oil product shall verify that none of the vegetable oil or vegetable oil product exported under any such program will be used or has been used as the basis for a claim of a refund, as drawback, pursuant to section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (19 U.S.C. 1313), of any duty, tax, or fee imposed under Federal law on an imported commodity or product.

(c) APPLICABILITY.—The provisions of subsections (a) and (b) shall not be applicable to quantities of agricultural commodities and products with respect to which an exporter has entered into a contract, prior to the effective date of this section, for an export sale.

NATIONAL OILSEED PROCESSORS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, August 3, 1989.

Hon. PATRICK J. LEAHY,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We would like to register our strong support for legislation to prohibit duty drawback benefits on exports of vegetable oil under USDA export programs, such as GSM, P.L. 480 and the EEP.

Under current law, importers of foreign vegetable oil, for example, are able to export a quantity of U.S. origin vegetable oil under a USDA export program, and receive a refund of import duties (drawback) paid on a like amount of imported oil. This has the effect of allowing traders to cycle products of like kind through the U.S., essentially duty-free, with the added assistance of USDA export programs. This situation occurred recently with Argentine soybean oil.

While the product exported under the USDA program is of U.S. origin, a like quantity of imported product has been substituted in its place, thereby offsetting the positive effect of the export sale. When the combined use of duty drawback and export assisted sales occur, net U.S. stocks remain the same, while important USDA export program resources are depleted.

We understand Senator Bond intends to introduce, before the August recess, legislation to close this loophole by prohibiting duty drawback benefits on exports under USDA credit, credit guarantee, bonus or other export programs administered by the CCC, if the product exported remains in the "same condition" or a "like form" as that which was imported.

We would appreciate your support for this legislation, and hope you will consider serving as an original cosponsor. Please contact us if we can be of assistance in this regard. Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

The National Oilseed Processors Association, the National Sunflower Association, the National Cottonseed Products Association, the National Cotton Council, the American Soybean Association.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Subsection (a) of the proposed statutory provision would require an exporter applying for participation in one of specified U.S. Department of Agriculture export programs to certify, except as provided in subsection (b), that it will not use or has not used the quantity of an agricultural commodity or product exported under such program as the basis for a claim of a refund, as drawback, pursuant to subsection (j)(2) of section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (19 U.S.C. 1313(j)(2)), of any duty, tax or fee imposed under Federal law on an imported commodity or product. Subsection (j)(2) of section 313 applies only to same condition substitution drawback.

Subsection (b) would require an exporter of vegetable oil or a vegetable oil product to certify that it will not use or has not used a quantity of vegetable oil or a vegetable oil product exported under one of the programs specified in subsection (a) as the basis for a claim of any type of drawback under 19 U.S.C. 1313.

The provisions of subsections (a) and (b) would apply to any export program under title I or title III of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, as amended, or any export credit, credit guarantee, bonus, or other export program administered by the Credit Commodity Corporation or carried out with funds made available pursuant to section 32 of Public Law 320, 74th Cong. An exporter which failed to provide the required certification would be ineligible to participate in these export programs.

Subsection (c) would create an exception to the certification requirements in subsections (a) and (b) for certain agricultural commodities and products with respect to which there was an existing contract for an export sale. If the contract was entered into prior to the effective date of these provisions, the agricultural commodity or product covered by the contract would be "grandfathered."

Subsection (d) would make these provisions effective as soon as enacted.

S. 1562. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to expedite the payment of claims under such title by increasing the level of interest paid on late payments to providers under such title, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

INTEREST LEVEL ON LATE PAYMENT TO PROVIDERS

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I send to the desk legislation which will amend a title of the Social Security Act relating to payment claims under such title.

Mr. President, there are some Federal programs which only touch a few people. Medicare, however, is in many ways like the Postal Service or the Internal Revenue Service. It has a major and continuing impact on the lives of many Americans. The influence is particularly significant in States such as mine where there are large numbers of citizens utilizing Medicare services.

Late last year, my office started receiving an unusual number of phone calls, letters, and direct contacts from literally hundreds of suppliers, physicians, and beneficiaries concerned about delay in Medicare payments. In May of this year, I held a field hearing in Orlando to determine the reason for these delays. The hearing disclosed a number of bases for the delay in payments primarily relative to administrative factors. It did seem to me, however, Mr. President, in the course of the hearing that there was an area in which congressional action was necessary, and that had to do with the provision of a strong incentive on the Social Security Administration, its health care administration, and those entities which might, by contract, cause the adminstrators of this system to make payments to the suppliers of Medicare services on a timely basis.

There were problems with the current law. One related to the fact that many claims which were filed which were subsequently found to be legitimate valid claims were not eligible for interest payment on the delayed payment because they had initially been ajudged to have been deficient in some manner. A portion of the legislation that I am introducing would provide that if a claim is subsequently found to have been full, complete, and justified for payment that it will be treated as such for purposes of its eligibility for interest because of delayed payment.

The second provision that we are recommending, Mr. President, is to increase the interest rate which the Government will pay to suppliers who are delayed more than 24 days in receiving their reimbursement. Currently, the interest rate is set at the rate of Government borrowing. This proposes to set that rate at one-quarter of a percent above the Government borrowing rate so there will be a strong incentive to make payments on a timely basis.

The issue of timely payment is not only because it is important that the Government conduct its business with those who provide services to our people on a basis of dignity, respect, and accepted business practice, it is also important, Mr. President, within the Medicare Program because we are trying to encourage more of the Medicare providers to accept assignment. That is to be willing to accept a payment that is provided through Medicare as full and complete payment and not ask the Medicare beneficiary to make further contribution toward the suppliers' cost. This is particularly as it relates to physician fees.

If the Federal Government falls into a practice of delayed payment to those very same professional and product suppliers, we are going to undermine our ability to attract them into the Medicare system on an assignment basis. It we fail to do so, that will be to the great detriment of the very people who we hope to benefit by our Medicare system.

Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask for appropriate referral of the legislation which I believe will contribute toward achieving our goal of a Medicare system that will assist our older Americans in securing financing for the highest quality medical services possible.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1562

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. INTEREST LEVEL ON LATE PAYMENT TO PROVIDERS INCREASED.

(a) CLAIMS UNDER PART A.—Section 1816(c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395h(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking "interest shall be paid at" and inserting in lieu thereof "interest shall be paid at a rate which is ¼ percent higher than"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) Each agreement under this section shall provide that with respect to claims that are not treated as clean claims as described in paragraph (2)(B), but, which are found after review to be legitimate and complete, that beginning with the day that is 24 calendar days after the day that such claim is received from a hospital, skilled nursing facility, home health agency, hospice program, comprehensive outpatient rehabilitation facility, or rehabilitation agency that is not receiving payments on a periodic interim payment basis with respect to such services and ending on the date on which payment is made, interest shall be paid on such claim at the same rate as that specified that paragraph (2)(C).".

(b) CLAIMS UNDER PART B.—Section 1842(c) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(c)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2)(C) by striking "interest shall be paid at" and inserting in lieu thereof "interest shall be paid at a rate which is ¼ percent higher than"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) Each contract under this section which provides for the disbursement of funds, as described in subsection (a)(1)(B), shall provide that with respect to claims which are not treated as clean claims as described in paragraph (2)(B), but, which are found after review to be legitimate and complete, that beginning with the day that is 24 calendar days after the day that such claim is received and ending on the date on which payment is made, interest shall be paid on such claim at the same rate as that specified under paragraph (2)(C).".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply to claims received on or after August 1, 1989.

(2) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide for such timely amendments to agreements under section 1816 of the Social Security Act and contracts under section 1842 of such Act, and regulations, to such extent as may be necessary to implement the provisions of this Act on a timely basis.

By Mr. SANFORD (for himself, Mr. HELMS, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. NUNN, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. MACK, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. LOTT, Mr. SASSER, Mr. GORE, Mr. WARNER, and Mr. ROBB):

S. 1563. A bill granting the consent of Congress to amendments to the southeast interstate low-level radioactive waste management compact; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSENT OF CONGRESS TO SOUTHEAST INTERSTATE LOW-LEVEL RADIOACTIVE WASTE MANAGEMENT COMPACT

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, Senator HELMS and I are today introducing legislation that would confer congressional approval on amendments to the articles of the southeast low-level radioactive waste management compact. Senators THURMOND, HOLLINGS, NUNN, FOWLER, GRAHAM, MACK, HEFLIN, SHELBY, COCHRAN, LOTT, SASSER, GORE, WARNER, and ROBB have joined us as cosponsors of this legislation, representing the entire delegation of the Southeast compact States.

This measure is being introduced at the request of Gov. Jim Martin of North Carolina and the appropriate representatives of the other Southeast compact States. A companion bill has been introduced in the House by Congressman ALEX MCMILLAN of North Carolina.

The southeast compact, formed by the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, has amended its articles to provide certain protections for host States. The amendments provide that:

First, no facility shall be required to operate for more than 20 years or to accept more than 32,000,000 cubic feet of waste during its operating life; and

Second, no member State shall be allowed to withdraw from the compact, beginning 30 days after the next host State disposal facility has opened, unless all other member States and the Congress consent to the withdrawal.

These amendments will help ensure that no State bears a disproportionate burden with respect to disposal of the region's low-level waste, and that each State will meet its obligations under the articles of the compact. They have been approved by the Southeast Compact Commission, and ratified by each of the compact's member States. Under the terms of the low-level Radioactive Waste Policy Act of 1980, congressional approval is now required in order for the amendments to take effect.

This is a simple, noncontroversial measure, and I commend this legislation to my colleagues.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1563

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Southeast Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact Amendments Consent Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. CONSENT OF CONGRESS TO AMENDMENTS TO COMPACT.

Congress consents to the amendments to the Southeast Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management Compact made by party states to such Compact. Such amendments are substantially as follows:

At the end of article 5 add the following new section:

"(E) No party State shall be required to operate a regional facility for longer than a 20-year period, or to dispose of more than 32,000,000 cubic feet of low-level radioactive waste, whichever first occurs.".

Sections (G), (H), and (I) of article 7 are amended to read as follows:

"(G) Subject to the provisions of article 7, section (H), any party State may withdraw from the compact by enacting a law repealing the compact, provided that if a regional facility is located within such State, such regional facility shall remain available to the region for four years after the date the Commission receives verification in writing from the Governor of such party State of the rescission of the Compact. The Commission, upon receipt of the verification, shall as soon as practicable provide copies of such verification to the Governor, the Presidents of the Senates, and the Speakers of the Houses of Representatives of the party States as well as the chairmen of the appropriate committees of the Congress.

"(H) The right of a party State to withdraw pursuant to section (G), shall terminate thirty days following the commencement of operation of the second host State disposal facility. Thereafter a party State may withdraw only with the unanimous approval of the Commission and with the consent of Congress. For purposes of this section, the low-level radioactive waste disposal facility located in Barnwell County, South Carolina shall be considered the first host State disposal facility.

"(I) This compact may be terminated only by the affirmative action of the Congress or by rescission of all laws enacting the compact in each party State.".

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, today, I join 15 Senators in introducing legislation (S. 1563) on behalf of the southeastern interstate low-level radioactive waste management compact.

The southeast compact has eight member States: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia. North Carolina has been designated as the next host State for the compact, with waste acceptance scheduled to begin in 1992. The compact is currently located in South Carolina.

This legislation confers congressional approval upon amendments adopted by the compact and ratified through legislation by each of the compact's member States. The bill we are introducing amends the original compact provisions in two ways.

First, the bill provides that no low-level waste facility shall be required to operate for more than 20 years or to accept more than 32,000,000 cubic feet of waste during its operating life.

Second, no member State shall be allowed to withdraw from the compact, beginning 30 days after the North Carolina facility has opened, unless all other member States and the Congress consent to the withdrawal.

These amendments were enacted by the seven States of the compact to protect future host States by assuring that no member will have to bear an unfair waste management burden and that each member will take its proper turn as a host State.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. SIMON, Mr. BRADLEY, and Mr. LEAHY):

S. 1564. A bill to amend title 28, United States Code, to make additional exceptions to the immunity of the property of a foreign state from attachment or execution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

VICTIMS OF TERRORISM JUDICIAL REMEDY ACT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today, with Senators HARKIN, SIMON, BRADLEY, and LEAHY, I introduce a bill to amend the Foreign Sovereign Immunity Act of 1976. Its purpose is straightforward and simple: to allow the victims of State-sponsored terrorism to attach assets of foreign governments involved in acts of terrorism in the United States.

Similar legislation passed the House of Representatives last year but was not considered by the full Senate in the rush of last minute business. Congressman HOWARD BERMAN has introduced similar legislation in the House and I look forward to working with him to ensure that the legislation passes both Houses of Congress.

The 1976 act was designed to provide recourse for private citizens when foreign governments violate fundamental standards of acceptable behavior. However, the act failed to provide a remedy for those victims, even if they are able to prove the direct responsibility of a foreign government in a U.S. court. Current law requires the victims to prove a direct connection between the crime and the asset they seek to attach. As a result, victims and their families can only attach assets directly involved in a terrorist act—such as vehicles used to commit it—but not other assets of a terrorist government. Therefore, under current law, a foreign government may send agents to the United States, murder our citizens, and continue to conduct business as usual.

That situation is dead wrong, and this legislation will set it straight. It will permit victims of international acts of violence in the United States intended to, or actually resulting in bodily harm to make claims on the property, including the property of an agency, instrumentality, or political subdivision of the foreign state, that has been used, or is being used for a commercial activity in the United States.

The initial impetus for the legislation stems from an actual case of terrorism committed by the Chilean Government of Augusto Pinochet. In 1976, Chile sent agents to Washington to plant a bomb in the car of former Chilean Foreign Minister Orlando Letelier, who was an outspoken critic of General Pinochet. The bomb exploded in Sheridan Circle on Embassy Row and killed Letelier and an aide, Ronni Moffitt.

A Federal distict court later found the Government of Chile responsible for the murders. But when the families of the victims sought to carry out that judgment, they discovered that the assets of the Chilean Government were protected by the doctrine of sovereign immunity.

This legislation will allow the families of Orlando Letelier and Ronni Moffitt to receive their long overdue remedy and finally put their long and traumatic ordeal to rest. It will allow other victims of terrorist actions in the United States to seek meaningful remedies for their loss. And it will send a powerful signal to terrorists who violate the peace of this land: No terrorist can do business as usual in the United States.

The tragic events unfolding in Lebanon this week have heightened all our sensitivities to acts of terrorism. And the threat of terrorism within our borders is real and ongoing. In 1984, Henry Liu was assassinated in front of his home in California by agents of Taiwan. Earlier this year, the van driven by the wife of the captain of the Vincennes was bombed in San Diego. The Iranian death threat against Salman Rushdie continues in force.

This legislation will help those hurt by terrorist actions. It will also serve as a deterrent to governments considering acts of terrorism in this country. If governments know their assets in the United States may be seized, they may think twice about committing atrocities against our citizens.

The case most immediately affected by the enactment of this legislation is the Letelier-Moffitt case. I understand that there is some concern that the bill may hinder the process of democratization in Chile or derail the efforts to resolve the issue through international arbitration.

No one expects this legislation to be put into practical effect until after the December elections in Chile. If, as expected, a democratic government emerges, we all hope it will move swiftly to compensate the victims of the Pinochet regime and vitiate the need for application of this law to the Letelier-Moffitt case. Otherwise, this legislation will be available to provide relief for the families.

The legislation will also provide an appropriate incentive to the current Factfinding Commission to continue its efforts to resolve the issue through international arbitration. That treaty process is long and arduous, but it holds out the possibility of a solution. I support that process, and I hope it will be successful. But there is no reason for the Letelier and Moffit families to rely only on that possibility.

This legislation will send a clear, strong, and unequivocal message to all terrorists that we will not tolerate their murderous atrocities on our territory. I urge my colleagues to support it, and I look forward to its early enactment.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be reprinted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 2. EXCEPTION TO THE IMMUNITY FROM ATTACHMENT OR EXECUTION.

Section 1610(a) of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by amending paragraph (3) to read as follows:

"(3) in the case of a claim based upon intentional acts of violence in the United States intended to or actually resulting in bodily harm, the property, including the property of an agency, instrumentality, or political subdivison of the foreign state, has been used, or is being used for a commerical activity in the United States" or.

(2) by renumbering paragraphs (3), (4), (5), and (6) as (4), (5), (6), and (7) respectively.

S. 1565. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to encourage the continued exploration for and production of domestic oil and natural gas resources; to the Committee on Finance.

MARGINAL ENERGY PRODUCERS INCENTIVES ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to address a serious and growing threat to this Nation's energy security.

Price fluctuations in the energy industry, brought about by the manipulations of foreign suppliers, have devastated independent energy production in the United States. In 1988, crude oil production in the lower 48 States sank to its lowest levels in 30 years. Worse yet, over 1,800 wells were abandoned—more than three times the previous year's total. Once this production is lost, it will not be recovered.

The bill which I am introducing today removes a barrier—the alternative minimum tax—which prevents many independent producers from utilizing the incentives which Congress deliberately enacted for them. The AMT has a particularly severe impact on independent energy producers for two reasons: First, this is one of the most capital intensive industries; and second, declining prices, such as have occurred in recent years, both lower taxable income, and correspondingly lower the threshold for AMT liability.

This bill eliminates percentage depletion on marginal oil and gas wells as a preference item under the AMT. In addition, it repeals the so-called "transfer rule" which prevents independent producers from claiming percentage depletion on proven wells acquired from another producer. This change is necessary to encourage the purchase and extended utility of marginal properties, which would otherwise be abandoned by integrated companies.

Next, the bill removes the net income limitations—both per taxpayer and per property—which further limit the use of percentage depletion benefits during economic downturns. And finally, it eliminates the 1,000 barrel cap which removes the incentive for increased production by larger independent producers.

Mr. President, the President of the United States and many Members of this body agree on the need for additional incentives to maintain our domestic energy production and our energy security into the next decade. Now, it is necessary to act on that belief before more of these vital resources are lost.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1565

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Marginal Energy Producers Incentives Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. PERCENTAGE DEPLETION PERMITTED AFTER TRANSFER OF PROVEN PROPERTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (c) of 613A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to limitations on percentage depletion in the case of oil and gas wells) is amended by striking paragraphs (9) and (10) and by redesignating paragraphs (11), (12), and (13) as paragraphs (9), (10), and (11), respectively.

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (11) of section 613A(c) of such Code, as redesignated by subsection (a), is amended by striking subparagraphs (C) and (D).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to transfers after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. NET INCOME LIMITATION ON PERCENTAGE DEPLETION INCREASED FROM 50 PERCENT TO 100 PERCENT OF PROPERTY NET INCOME FOR OIL AND NATURAL GAS WELLS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Second sentence of subsection (a) of section 613 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to percentage depletion) is amended by inserting "(100 percent in the case of oil and natural gas properties)" after "50 percent".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. PERCENTAGE DEPLETION ON MARGINAL PRODUCTION OF INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 613A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to limitations on percentage depletion in the case of oil and gas wells) is amended by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f) and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) MARGINAL PRODUCTION OF INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of so much of an independent producer's production of domestic crude oil or natural gas which is marginal production—

"(A) the allowance for depletion shall be computed in accordance with section 613, and

"(B) for purposes of section 613(a), 15 percent shall be deemed to be the percentage specified under section 613(b).

"(2) MARGINAL PRODUCTION.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'marginal production' means—

"(i) domestic crude oil which is from a stripper oil well,

"(ii) domestic natural gas which is from a stripper gas well, or

"(iii) domestic crude oil which is heavy oil.

"(B) STRIPPER OIL WELL.—The term 'stripper oil well' means any well which produced an average of 15 or less barrels per production day during any 6-month period beginning after December 31, 1985.

"(C) STRIPPER GAS WELL.—The term 'stripper gas well' means any well which during any 3-month period beginning after December 31, 1985—

"(i) produced at its maximum efficient rate of flow (as determined in accordance with recognized conservation practices designed to maximize the ultimate recovery of natural gas), and

"(ii) produced an average of 90,000 cubic feet or less of natural gas per production day in such period.

"(D) HEAVY OIL.—The term 'heavy oil' means domestic crude oil produced from any property if such crude oil had a weighted average gravity of 20 degrees API or less (corrected to 60 degress Fahrenheit).

"(E) OIL AND GAS WELLS.—

"(i) OIL WELL.—The term 'oil well' means any well which produces at least 1 barrel of oil to each 100,000 cubic feet of natural gas.

"(ii) GAS WELL.—The term 'gas well' means any well producing natural gas not described in clause (i).

"(F) SPECIAL RULE.—

"(i) UTILIZATIONS AND POOLINGS.—In the case of utilization or poolings involving multiple wells, production shall be allocated to all utilized wells (including injection wells) on the basis of sound engineering principles.

"(ii) PRODUCTION IN EXCESS OF STRIPPER AMOUNTS.—If an oil or gas well is a stripper oil or gas well for any period, such well shall continue to be treated as such a well even if production exceeds the limits under subparagraph (B) or (C), except that this subsection shall only apply to production not in excess of such limit.

"(3) INDEPENDENCE PRODUCER.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'independent producer' means a taxpayer not described in paragraph (2) or (4) of subsection (d).

"(4) COORDINATION WITH SUBSECTION (C).—Oil and gas to which this subsection applies shall not be taken into account for purposes of subsection (c)."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF PERCENTAGE DEPLETION ATTRIBUTABLE TO MARGINAL PRODUCTION AS IN ITEM OF TAX PREFERENCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 57 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to items of tax preference) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) DEPLETION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—With respect to each property (as defined in section 614), the excess of the deduction allowable under section 611 for the taxable year over the adjusted basis of the property at the end of the taxable year (determined without regard to the depletion for the year).

"(B) MARGINAL PRODUCTION.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to the deduction allowable under section 611 with respect to any property to the extent it is attributable to marginal production of an independent producer to which section 613A(e) applies.

"(C) ALLOCATION OF BASIS.—If a property has marginal production and other production, the adjusted basis of such property shall be allocated among wells with marginal production and other wells on the basis of the estimated reserves attributable to such wells as of the close of the taxable year."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ:

S. 1566. A bill to require Federal vehicles in certain areas to use fuels composed of at least 3 percent oxygen by weight; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

USE OF CERTAIN FUELS BY FEDERAL VEHICLES

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, today I would like to introduce a bill which would mandate a 3-percent oxygen level by weight for fuels used in Federal cars and trucks. This bill would immediately apply to those Federal cars used in nonattainment zones throughout the country.

The use of alternative fuels has become an important option for alleviating the pollution problems in our major cities. By mandating the use of alternative fuels with at least a 3-percent oxygen level for our Federal fleets, we can take steps to decrease carbon monoxide emissions and help reduce the threat of global warming.

The new demand for alternative fuels would not only help solve pollution problems but would also create new markets for agricultural products. Because fuels such as ethanol are produced from products like corn and wheat, a new market would be opened for farmers, and all of rural America would benefit.

The Federal fleets in America are comprised of several hundred thousand cars and trucks. This would include close to 170,000 postal vehicles, 150,000 Department of Defense vehicles, and approximately 115,000 vehicles under the control of the General Services Administration. By mandating use of oxygenated fuels in these Federal cars, we will set an example for the rest of the economy to follow.

I plan to pursue this issue when the Senate considers the Clean Air Act. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1566

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FEDERAL VEHICLES.

(a) Effective 90 days following the date of the enactment of this Act, gasoline powered vehicles owned or leased by the United States and operated in an area designated under the Clean Air Act as a nonattainment area for carbon monoxide shall be supplied with fuel which is composed of at least 3 percent oxygen by weight.

(b)(1) Vehicles under subsection (a) shall be operated exclusively on such fuels except when operated—

(A) so as to make it impracticable to obtain such fuel; or

(B) in an area during any month in which such area is a nonattainment area for ozone under the Clean Air Act.

S. 1567. A bill to temporarily suspend the duty on Ornithine; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 1568. A bill to temporarily suspend the duty on Teicoplanin; to the Committee on Finance.

SUSPENSION OF DUTY ON CERTAIN CHEMICALS

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today two bills to temporarily suspend the duties on two antibiotic ingredients, Ornithine and Teicoplanin. These bills should prove noncontroversial since the two substances are not manufactured anywhere in the United States and must be imported for use by an American drug manufacturer. The current duty rate on both compounds is 3.7 percent; the legislation I am introducing would suspend the duties until December 31, 1992.

Ornithine is an active ingredient that will be used in the manufacture of a prescription antibiotic for the treatment of Pneumocystis Carinii Pneumonia, which is the immediate cause of death for many AIDS victims, and of trypanosomiasis gambiosi, also known as West African Sleeping Sickness. In fact, U.S. researchers are currently engaged in extensive research to find the link between the AIDS pneumonia and the sleeping sickness. FDA approval of this drug is anticipated in 1989.

Teicoplanin is an active ingredient that will be used in the manufacture of a prescription antibiotic to be sold under the trademark Targocid. This new product has not yet been approved by the FDA for sale in the United States. It is anticipated that the product will be approved and launched in the United States in 1993. Until that time Teicoplanin will be imported for purposes of clinical research.

I repeat that these chemicals are not manufactured anywhere in the United States. Hence the current duty adds an unjustified expense to an American company's cost of doing business. By suspending the duty rate, the U.S. manufacturer will be able to import these necessary ingredients and produce the final pharmaceutical product at a lower cost. I hope these two measures will be expeditiously approved by the Senate.●

S. 1569. A bill to establish the Grand Island National Recreation Area in the State of Michigan and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

ESTABLISHING THE GRAND ISLAND NATIONAL RECREATION AREA IN MICHIGAN

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation creating the Grand Island National Recreation Area. Just offshore from the Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore and the northern Michigan city of Munising, lies a 13,000-acre treasure of sheer sandstone cliffs, pristine white beaches, cascading waterfalls, and sea caves. The island is home to beavers, black bears, hawks, bald eagles and many other sensitive species. At the center of the island lies one of the world's largest beaver formed lakes. My bill will place the island under the management of the U.S. Forest Service.

The bill I am introducing today represents a carefully crafted compromise between all parties concerned about establishing this recreation area. Island residents, local government officials, environmentalists, the Forest Service and many others worked together to craft a bill that would protect the island while addressing the concerns of local residents. The cornerstone of this bill is the establishment of a local commission, guaranteeing continued community input to the management of this area. Involvement of local citizens, who care as deeply for this land as any group in this effort, has been key to fashioning this bill. I appreciate their support of this legislation. Careful and patient negotiation has produced a bill widely supported in northern Michigan and I commend everyone involved in the process.

Grand Island should be a place that all Americans can visit. In public hands, this area will become a destination for campers, hikers, hunters, fisherman and anyone who enjoys a beautiful island. I hope soon that everyone can visit this national treasure and look forward to the day when people from throughout the country will be able to enjoy Grand Island.

I am proud of Michigan's conservation heritage. The beauty of my State and the commitment of her people to protect that beauty is commendable. I am confident that this recreation area will attract visitors to northern Michigan and greatly enhance Michigan's splendor.

S. 1569 would establish a national recreation area on Grand Island in Lake Superior, MI. The bill would extend the boundaries of the Hiawatha National Forest to include the Grand Island National Recreation Area [NRA] and provide that moneys from the land and water conservation fund would be available for acquisition of lands within the new NRA.

The bill would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to administer the NRA in accordance with the laws and regulations of the National Forest System and certain special management requirements, including access for land owners and the public, snowmobile use, general prohibitions on timber harvesting, transportation from the mainland, docking and lodge facilities, and public health and safety. The bill would also generally prohibit any new mining or mineral development on lands within the NRA.

The bill would authorize and direct the Secretary to acquire lands, waters, structures, easements or other property interests, within the boundaries of the NRA or on the mainland to further the purposes of the bill or to provide necessary access. The bill also gives the Secretary a right of first refusal to purchase any privately owned lands, structures or interests therein within the NRA, under certain restrictions.

The bill would authorize the Secretary to designate zones and time periods within which no hunting, fishing, or trapping would be permitted and the bill would require the Secretary to consult with the State of Michigan regarding these designations.

The bill would require the Secretary to develop a comprehensive management plan [CMP] for the NRA within 30 months after acquiring title to at least 10,000 acres of land on Grand Island, and would establish a Grand Island Advisory Commission to advise the Secretary on the preparation of the CMP. The bill would require nonvoting membership on the commission of three employees of the Forest Service, including the Forest Supervisor of the Hiawatha National Forest.

The bill would authorize appropriations of $5 million for acquisition of land, interests in land, or structures within the NRA and on the mainland and an additional $5 million for development to carry out the other purposes of the bill.

PURPOSE AND NEED

The purpose of S. 1569 is to establish a national recreation area consisting of Grand Island, MI and surrounding lands, authorize and direct the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase lands within the national recreation area, and to incorporate the national recreation area into the Hiawatha National Forest to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture as part of the National Forest System.

Michigan's Grand Island is 13,500 acres in size and is the largest island off of Lake Superior's southern shore. It includes hills, dense woodlands, high sandstone cliffs, rapidly flowing streams and several lakes, including Echo Lake, which is a mile long and a half mile wide. Although there are some roads and summer residences on Grand Island, it is still essentially in a wild and natural state with considerable scenic beauty. Its cultural resources include ancient sites belonging to the Ojibway Indians and evidence of European visitors and inhabitants dating back to the mid 1600's.

Most of the island was recently owned by Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co. [CCI]. This organization has been trying to sell its holdings for several years. To protect the scenic, natural, and cultural resource of the island, the Trust for Public Lands [TPL] obtained an option to purchase these holdings in 1988. TPL exercised this option and acquired title to CCI's holdings on Grand Island on June 29, 1989. TPL purchased CCI's lands with the intention of reselling the land to the Federal Government when funds were made available, with the understanding that the island's resources would be protected in perpetuity.

TPL ordered an appraisal which placed the value of the acquired land on the island at $3.575 million. This appraisal was done according to Federal appraisal standards, is currently under review by the Forest Service, and is expected to receive approval by August 1, 1989. TPL plans to offer the property to the Forest Service for $3.5 million, funding for which has been included in recent appropriation legislation.

This bill is needed to take advantage of a unique opportunity to preserve the rich resources of the island. Without this legislation, the island would most likely fall into private sale and development and never again be available for acquisition. At present, the island is over 90 percent owned by a willing seller—TPL—who has purchased the land to help ensure its preservation. While the Forest Service already has the authority to acquire these lands, this legislation is needed to direct the establishment of a national recreation area and provide a strong legal basis for the planning, management, and public use of this area.

Mr. President, I ask that a section-by-section analysis be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1—Establishment of Grand Island National Recreation Area

Section 1 establishes the Grand Island National Recreation Area (NRA) and lists the purposes for its establishment. These purposes are to preserve and protect the outstanding resources and values of the island and to conserve, protect and enhance the scenery, recreation, fish and wildlife, vegetation, botany and historical and cultural resources. The island's resources and values include, but are not limited to, cliffs, caves, beaches, forested appearance, natural biological diversity and features of early settlement.

Sec. 2—Boundaries

Section 2 defines the area to be included in the NRA. This area includes all of Grand Island plus all associated rocks, pinnacles, islands and islets within one-quarter mile of the shore of Grand Island. Section 2 also extends the boundaries of the Hiawatha National Forest to include all of the lands within the NRA and defines these extended boundaries as in existence as of January 1, 1965, for the purposes of section 7 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 460*l*-9) [1]. Finally, section 2 designates all federally owned lands within the NRA as components of the National Forest System to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Section 3—Administration

Section 3(a) directs the Secretary, subject to valid existing rights, to administer the NRA in accordance with the laws, rules and regulations of the national forest system in furtherance of the purposes described in Section 1.

Section 3(b) directs the Secretary to administer the NRA according to the following special management requirements:

(1) Owners of private lands and homes within the NRA shall have access across National Forest System lands, subject to terms and conditions prescribed by the Secretary including those to protect threatened and endangered species and natural, cultural and scenic values.

(2) The Secretary shall provide for and maintain traditional public access, including vehicular roads for general recreational activities such as camping, hiking, hunting, fishing, and trapping in ways that are consistent with the purposes of the bill and the NRA management land required by section 7.

(3) The Secretary shall permit the use of snowmobiles on Federal lands in the national recreation area. Their use must be consistent with the provisions of the NRA management plan, in accordance with the rules and regulations of the National Forest System, and regulated to protect the resources of the NRA and minimize degradation of those resources.

(4) Timber management shall be utilized only as a tool to enhance public recreation, scenic quality, game and nongame wildlife species, and the protection and enhancement of threatened, endangered or sensitive species. Trees damaged or downed by fire,

[1] Section 7 provides in relevant part:

"Moneys appropriated from the fund for Federal purposes shall, unless otherwise allotted in the Appropriation Act making them available, be allotted by the President to the following purposes and subpurposes:

"(1) For the acquisition of land, waters, or interests in land or waters as follows:

"National Forest System.—In holdings within (a) wilderness areas of the National Forest System, and (b) other areas of national forests as the boundaries of those forests exist on the effective date of this Act [January 1, 1965], or purchase units approved by the National Forest Reservation Commission subsequent to the date of this Act, all of which other areas are primarily of value for outdoor recreation purposes: Provided, That lands outside of but adjacent to an existing national forest boundary, not to exceed three thousand acres in the case of any one forest which would comprise an integral part of a forest recreational management area may also be acquired with moneys appropriated from this fund: Provided further, That except for areas specifically authorized by Act of Congress, not more than 15 percentum of the acreage added to the National Forest System pursuant to this section shall be west of the 100th meridian . . ."

insects, disease or wind may be utilized, salvaged or removed as authorized by the Secretary to further the purposes of the NRA.

(5) Once the Secretary has acquired fee title to at least 10,000 acres of land on Grand Island, the Secretary shall provide reasonable water transportation for the public from the mainland to Grand Island. This transportation may be provided either through concession, permit, or other means, and a reasonable charge may be imposed. Such transportation shall be subject to reasonable regulation by the Secretary and shall not be required when the Secretary deems it to be unsafe because of factors such as weather and water conditions.

(6) The Secretary shall provide docking and lodge facilities consistent with provisions in the NRA management plan developed pursuant to section 7, through concession, permit, or other means.

(7) The Secretary shall take reasonable actions to provide for the health and safety of the public and to protect the NRA in the event of fire, insect infestation or disease.

(8) The Secretary shall, under the authority of the Act of March 4, 1915 (16 U.S.C. 497),[2] issue occupancy and use permits to the owners of private homes who own their homes on the date that the federal government acquires the lands on which their homes are located. These permits shall be issued for an initial period of 20 years and shall be renewed thereafter for successive 20-year periods so long as the permittee is in compliance with the purposes of the bill, the terms of the permit, and other applicable rules and regulations. Any such permit shall be issued in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations of the Secretary pertaining to the National Forest System, except that such permit shall be subject to the following special provisions:

(A) Such permit may only be issued to the owner of such home as of the date of Federal acquisition of the property, such owner's spouse, the children and grandchildren of such owner and spouse, and their direct lineal descendants (natural or adopted offspring).

(B) Only noncommercial recreation occupancy may be permitted.

(C) The Secretary shall collect fees on an annual basis based on the fair market value of the occupancy permitted.

(D) The expansion, remodeling, or reconstruction of such homes shall be subject to approval of and regulation by the Secretary. No expansion, remodeling, or reconstruction may increase the height of a structure or result in an increase of more than 25 percent of the sum of the exterior dimensions of a structure as it existed on the date of enactment of the bill. Any expansion, remodeling, or reconstruction shall be consistent with the criteria developed pursuant to section 7(b)(4) of the bill and shall be subject to such other terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe.

(E) Any such home may be purchased at the fair market value of the structure and improvements by the Secretary on a willing seller basis.

(F) The permit may be terminated at any time for failure to comply with its terms and conditions and applicable regulations without cost to the Federal Government in accordance with the permit.

(G) After termination of any such permit, if any improvements or property are not removed by their owner within one year of the termination, they shall become the property of the Federal Government.

(9) Solely for purposes of payments pursuant to section 6904 of title 31, United States Code,[3] lands on Grand Island acquired by the United States after the date of enactment of the bill shall be considered to have been acquired for addition to a National Forest Wilderness Area (national forest portion of the National Wilderness Preservation System).

Section 4—Acquisition

Section 4(a) authorizes and directs the Secretary to acquire lands, waters, structures or interests therein within the boundaries of the NRA by purchase, gift, exchange or otherwise. It further authorizes and directs the Secretary to acquire lands or structures on the mainland to the extent necessary for access to and administrative facilities for the NRA. The Secretary also is required to consider promptly and carefully any offers to sell land or structures within the NRA.

Section 4(b) states that owners of unimproved property within the NRA may construct residences that are recreational and that are consistent historically with other structures within the NRA as described by the NRA management plan. It further states that the Secretary will have the right of first refusal before any privately owned lands, interests in lands or structures within the NRA are conveyed. They first must be offered to the Secretary at not more than fair market value. The Secretary has 120 days to accept such an offer and, if accepted, 45 days after the end of the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which the offer was made to complete the acquisition. The subsection prohibits lands, interests in lands or structures from being sold or conveyed to another party for less than the price they were offered to the Secretary. Whenever they are reoffered for sale or conveyance they must first be reoffered to the Secretary. The subsection makes an exception to these sale and conveyance restrictions for changes in ownership within the immediate family of the owner, consisting of such owner's spouse, siblings, natural or adopted children and lineal descendants.

Section 5—Fish and game

Section 5(a) states that the bill will not affect the responsibilities of the State of Michigan regarding fish and wildlife. However, the Secretary is authorized to designate, in consultation with the State of Michigan, zones closed to hunting, fishing or trapping for public safety, administration, protection of nongame species and habitat or public use and enjoyment.

Section 5(b) requires the Secretary, in consultation with appropriate state officials, to notify area residents, as soon as practicable after each case in which the Secretary exercises the authority under subsection (a), as to the nature of the action taken, the locations of zones designated, and the periods established.

Section 5(c) requires the Secretary to consult with the State's fish and wildlife agency before putting into effect any regulations resulting from this section.

Section 6—Minerals

Section 6 withdraws the NRA from any mining activity except for valid existing rights and common materials such as sand, stone, and gravel needed for NRA roads and facilities.

Section 7—Management plan

Section 7(a) directs the Secretary to develop a comprehensive management plan (CMP) for the NRA within 30 months after acquiring fee title to at least 10,000 acres of land on Grand Island.

Section 7(b) directs that the provisions of the comprehensive management plan shall include, but not be limited to, issues of—

(1) public recreation;

(2) the feasibility of a concessionaire to construct and operate a lodge and educational facility limited to no more than 55 acres of land;

(3) timber harvest prescriptions;

(4) design criteria for facilities;

(5) transportation to the NRA from the mainland;

[2] This section provides: "The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, under such regulations as he may make and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem proper, (a) to permit the use and occupancy of suitable areas of land within the national forests, not exceeding eighty acres and for periods not exceeding thirty years, for the purpose of constructing or maintaining hotels, resorts, and any other structures or facilities necessary or desirable for recreation, public convenience, or safety; (b) to permit the use and occupancy of suitable areas of land within the national forests, not exceeding five acres and for periods not exceeding thirty years, for the purpose of constructing or maintaining summer homes and stores; (c) to permit the use and occupancy of suitable areas of land within the national forest, not exceeding eighty acres and for periods not exceeding thirty years, for the purpose of constructing or maintaining buildings, structures, facilities for industrial or commercial purposes whenever such use is related to or consistent with other uses on the national forests; (d) to permit any State or political subdivision thereof, or any public or nonprofit agency, to use and occupy suitable areas of land within the national forests not exceeding eighty acres and for periods not exceeding thirty years, for the purpose of constructing or maintaining any buildings, structures, or facilities necessary or desirable for education or for any public use or in connection with any public activity. The authority provided by this section shall be exercised in such manner as not to preclude the general public from full enjoyment of the natural, scenic, recreational, and other aspects of the national forests."

[3] This section provides in relevant part: "the Secretary of the Interior * * * shall make a payment for each fiscal year to a unit of general local government collecting and distributing real property taxes (including a unit in Alaska outside the boundaries of an organized borough in which is located an interest in land that—

"(1) the United States Government acquires for—

"(A) the National Park System; or

"(B) the National Forest Wilderness Areas; and

"(2) was subject to local real property taxes within the 5-year period before the interest is acquired.

"(b) The Secretary shall make payments only for the 5 fiscal years after the fiscal year in which the interest in land is acquired. Under guidelines the Secretary prescribes, the unit of general local government receiving the payment from the Secretary shall distribute payments proportionally to units and school districts that lost real property taxes because of the acquisition of the interest. A unit receiving a distribution may use a payment for any governmental purpose.

"(c) Each yearly payment by the Secretary under this section is equal to one percent of the fair market value of the interest in land on the date the Government acquires the interest. However, a payment may not be more than the amount of real property taxes levied on the property during the last fiscal year before the fiscal year in which the interest is acquired. A decision on fair market value under this section may not include an increase in the value of an interest because the land is rezoned when the rezoning causes the increase after the date of enactment of a law authorizing the acquisition of an interest under subsection (a) of this section.

"(d) The Secretary may prescribe regulations under which payments may be made to units of general local government when subsections (a) and (b) of this section will not carry out the purpose of subsections (a) and (b)."

(6) the feasibility of concessionaire docking facilities; and

(7) an inventory and assessment of roads.

Section 7(c) requires the Secretary to consult with the appropriate State and local government officials and provide for full public participation in preparing the plan.

Section 8—Grand Island Advisory Commission

Section 8(a) establishes the Grand Island Advisory Commission for the purpose of advising the Secretary on the preparation of the NRA management plan.

Section 8(b) directs the Secretary on how to appoint the 12 members of the Commission and how to fill vacancies. Three of the positions on the Commission would be held by employees of the Forest Service, including the Forest Supervisor of the Hiawatha National Forest, who would all serve in a non-voting capacity. The Committee believes that the Forest Supervisor would be especially qualified to advise the Secretary on the development of the comprehensive management plan for the NRA.

Section 8(c) establishes six members as a quorum for the Commission and allows the Commission to operate if a quorum is present even if some members have not been appointed.

Section 8(d) directs the Commission to elect a Chairman and to establish rules and procedures.

Section 8(e) directs the Secretary to consult with the Commission on a periodic and regular basis with respect to the management plan.

Section 8(f) requires members of the Commission who are not federal employees to serve without pay. It further stipulates that members who are full-time federal employees will receive no additional pay solely because of their Commission responsibilities.

Section 8(g) directs the Commission to recommend proposals for non-federal development on the 55 acres earmarked in Section 7 for a lodge and education facility. The Secretary must include in the NRA management plan a development proposal for such a facility; however, it is not required that this proposal be one of the proposals recommended by the Commission.

Section 8(h) terminates the Commission when the final NRA management plan is adopted.

Section 9—Authorization of appropriations

Section (9)(a) authorizes $5 million to be appropriated for the acquisition of land, interests in land or structures within the NRA and on the mainland as needed for access and administrative facilities.

Section 9(b) authorizes an additional $5 million to be appropriated for development to carry out the other purposes of the bill.

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION

I

On June 8, 1989, H.R. 1472 was sequentially referred to the Committee on Agriculture after consideration by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. The Subcommittee on Forests, Family Farms, and Energy of the Committee on Agriculture conducted a public hearing on H.R. 1472 on June 27, 1989. The Subcommittee received testimony from the sponsor of the bill, Representative Dale Kildee, and from representatives of the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture and the Trust for Public Land.

II

On June 27, 1989, following the public hearing, the Subcommittee on Forests, Family Farms, and Energy held an open business meeting to consider H.R. 1472.

Mr. Morrison offered an amendment, suggested by the Department of Agriculture, that would direct the Forest Supervisor of the Hiawatha National Forest to serve as one of three Forest Service employee members of the advisory commission, established to section 8 of the bill. The amendment also would require the 3 Forest Service employees to serve on the commission in a nonvoting capacity. The amendment was adopted by a unanimous voice vote.

Mr. Marlenee offered an amendment that would require the Secretary of Agriculture to consult with the State of Michigan regarding the designation by the Secretary of zones and time periods within which hunting, fishing or trapping would be prohibited. The amendment was adopted by a voice vote.

By a voice vote, in the presence of a quorum, H.R. 1472, as amended, was approved and ordered reported to the full Committee.

III

On Thursday, July 13, 1989, the full Committee on Agriculture held an open business meeting to consider H.R. 1472, a bill to establish the Grand Island National Recreation Area in the State of Michigan. Following discussion of the bill, H.R. 1472, as amended by the Subcommittee, was approved and ordered reported to the House by a voice vote in the presence of a quorum.

ADMINISTRATION POSITION

At the time of the filing of this report, the Committee had not received a report from the U.S. Department of Agriculture concerning H.R. 1472, as amended, to establish the Grand Island National Recreation Area in the State of Michigan, and for other purposes.

BUDGET ACT COMPLIANCE (SECTION 308 AND SECTION 403)

The provisions of clause 2(l)(3)(B) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives and section 308(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (relating to estimates of new budget authority, new spending authority, or new credit authority, or increased or decreased revenues of tax expenditures) are not considered applicable. The estimate and comparison required to be prepared by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office under clause 2(l)(3)(C) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives and section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 submitted to the Committee prior to the filing of this report are as follows:

OVERSIGHT STATEMENT

No summary of oversight findings and recommendations made by the Committee on Government Operations under clause 2(b)(2) of Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives was available to the Committee with reference to the subject matter specifically addressed by H.R. 1472, as amended.

No specific oversight activities other than the hearings detailed in this report were conducted by the Committee within the definition of clause 2(b)(1) of Rule X of the Rules of the House of Representatives.●

SOCIAL SECURITY LEGISLATION

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am introducing with a number of my colleagues a package of two bills which are designed to improve the management of the hearings and appeals process at the Social Security Administration [SSA]. These bills will protect the rights of claimants for Social Security benefits and ensure that their cases are strongly represented at fair, impartial, and speedy hearings.

The first bill streamlines the process for awarding fees to attorneys in Social Security cases. The second ensures the independence of administrative law judges [ALJ's] at SSA so that they remain free to make decisions on Social Security cases without political interference.

Both bills should be budget neutral and I hope they can be considered by the Finance Committee as it considers the 1989 budget reconciliation bill. The bill on attorney fees, in fact, may even save administrative funds for the Federal Government.

I would like to speak on each bill in turn.

ATTORNEY FEE REFORM

Mr. President, this bill is designed as a consensus approach to resolving an issue which has been engulfed by controversy over the past few years. In fact, after a somewhat heated dispute between attorneys and SSA in 1987, this bill represents a common ground with important improvements for all parties involved. Most importantly, this bill contains provisions to ensure Social Security claimants will be able to secure representation by attorneys in hearings before SSA, which is fundamental to a full and fair hearing.

From the standpoint of a disabled worker, severe mental or physical conditions can make a complex adjudicative process especially intimidating and confusing. Not surprisingly, disability claimants are increasingly turning to attorneys for assistance. Currently, about two-thirds of claimants appealing decisions to an ALJ are represented by attorneys.

Underlying the issue of attorney fees is the challenge of ensuring adequate safeguards against overcharges while providing fair compensation for services performed on behalf of the claimant. Disability attorneys and SSA agree that the current payment system is cumbersome, drawn out, and in need of reform. This bill is designed to balance safeguards against the need for fair compensation, while streamlining the process for awarding fees.

RECENT CONTROVERSY ON FEES

ALJ's have responsibility under current law for reviewing fees charged by attorneys in cases argued before them. On April 1, 1987, a new SSA policy temporarily denied ALJ's the authority to approve fee requests above $1,500. Previously, an ALJ could approve fees up to $3,000. The basis for this action, acording to SSA, was a report of the Inspector General [IG] which concluded that attorney fees were sometimes excessive and should be lowered to a set rate.

Following the start of the new policy, many DI attorneys protested that the new policy would deny them adequate compensation, and that payments would be further delayed and complicated as a result of an additional layer of bureaucracy. I joined them in arguing that disability claimants would be the ultimate losers because fewer and fewer attorneys would be willing to represent them.

Opposition to the new SSA policy rapidly intensified. I worked with others to find a legislative solution. The result was enactment of a provision in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 [OBRA] to rescind the new SSA directive and impose a moratorium until July 1989 on changes to the original payment policy pending the completion and consideration of studies by SSA and GAO. The moratorium is now over, Mr. President, and I believe Congress should evaluate these studies and establish a new framework for processing attorney fees.

STUDIES BY SSA AND GAO

The GAO report completed pursuant to OBRA 1987 found that generally fees for attorneys were not unreasonable. According to the report, 93 percent of the fee requests up to $3,000 were approved, as was 94 percent of the total amount requested. In most cases, only fee requests exceeding $3,000 were significantly reduced.

However, GAO found that the approval process on average took about 7 months and recommended to SSA a proposal to streamline the process, which SSA has yet to implement. Despite these delays, GAO found that claimants did not have difficulty finding an attorney to represent them. The GAO findings on access, however, are of limited utility since they do not look at different categories of cases where concerns have been raised about the lack of private representation, such as cases in which little or no back award can be expected from which to draw fees. Moreover, GAO's conclusion on access is based on a flawed IG study in which only claimants were interviewed, ignoring the potentially large population who did not appeal because of difficulty in securing representation.

SSA later completed a study, as required by OBRA 1987, which recommended near-total deregulation of the attorney fee process, with a two-party check to the attorney and claimant in each case, which would allow them to work out any arrangement they chose. SSA further proposed that fee disputes be given special scrutiny and that special rules of conduct for representatives appearing before SSA be delineated, in order to ensure that claimants were protected in the process of deregulation.

Mr. President, I believe the SSA study is a useful contribution to the debate over this issue, and I have striven to be faithful to its recommendations in crafting the bill I am introducing today. Their proposal recognizes the need to "relieve both the agency and attorneys of a growing administrative burden." I think my bill accomplishes this purpose, and is in keeping with the broad framework of the SSA proposal.

I believe, however, that the SSA proposal goes too far in the direction of deregulation, and does not fully balance the needs to protect claimants against the need for a fair and efficient fee process. I do not believe my colleagues in the Congress are prepared, nor am I, to go as far as SSA proposes. Yet I hope we are willing to travel down the same path.

My bill accomplishes the deregulation SSA envisages, but it sets boundaries as to fees that can be presumed to be reasonable and requires SSA to evaluate each fee that falls outside those boundaries. I would expect that 95 percent of all fees could be automatically approved under my proposal, eliminating a huge and unnecessary workload for attorneys and SSA. Indeed, SSA's report estimates expenditures of $6.9 million for fiscal year 1988 for processing attorney fees, or over 200 direct workyears. I hope much of this amount can be saved, and the work force redirected to addressing growing backlogs of cases which GAO recently identified as a major problem. A brief description of current law and my proposal follows.

CURRENT LAW ON FEES

Attorneys representing Social Security claimants may petition for a fee of up to 25 percent of the past-due benefits which a claimant is awarded, given a favorable decision. Under current procedures, the attorney must submit a detailed petition for this amount; the administrative law judge [ALJ] deciding the case reviews the petition, and, if the amount is under $3,000 may award the fee at that point, or adjust it. If the fee is over $3,000, the petition must be sent to the regional ALJ office for review.

In cases where the beneficiary's back award is subject to offset for repayment of SSI benefits or State assistance, SSA's current policy is to apply the offset before paying the attorney fee. In practice, this results in many cases where there are no funds left to pay the attorney. Similarly, in cases where no back benefits accrue because interim benefits were paid, or where no benefits accrue per se, such as rep payee disputes, Medicare eligibility, or disputes about overpayments, funds are often unavailable for appropriate fees.

SUMMARY OF ATTORNEY FEE PROPOSAL

Under the bill we are introducing today, the fee petition process is eliminated in most cases, and replaced with an automatic fee approval procedure. ALJ's and attorney's fee processing workload is thereby vastly reduced. Although no CBO estimates are yet available, savings are possible. The current law requirement that the Secretary determine a reasonable fee in each case is replaced by a rebuttable presumption that any contractual agreement entered into between an attorney or other representative and a client is approved automatically by SSA. Exceptions are that SSA will review agreements that either:

First, exceed 25 percent of past due benefits;

Second, apply to cases with fees exceeding $4,000; or Third, are protested in a complaint about the fee by the claimant, representative, the ALJ or other decisionmaker.

In these exceptional cases, attorneys will be required to submit a fee petition, and SSA ensures that fees are reasonable.

To ensure that all claimants can retain representation, the proposal provides for appropriate fees in cases where there is no back award. There is no back award, for example, in cases with continuing entitlement to interim benefits where payments have continued through the appeal process. The automatic fee approval process applies to agreements not exceeding 25 percent of the total of benefits paid through the period of appeal, known as interim benefits.

Where no benefits accrue per se, such as representative payee disputes, we must also ensure appropriate fees to guarantee adequate representation for petitioners. My bill applies the automatic payment system to fees in those cases which do not exceed three times the basic monthly benefit amount [PIA], or, if less, three times the monthly benefit amount. Further, attorney fees will be calculated and paid without applying offsets to the back award to ensure that funds are left over to pay attorneys so that they will take these cases.

PROBLEMS WITH SSA TWO-PARTY CHECK PROPOSAL

My bill retains the current law requirement that SSA issue separate checks for the claimant and for the attorney. Each party can negotiate his or her check without delay. Having issued two checks, SSA's fiduciary responsibilities are concluded.

By contrast, SSA has proposed that the current system be replaced by a single two-party check. Such a policy invites delay in at least two ways. First, the parties must each endorse the check, so that if one party is out of town or cannot be located, the other party cannot receive the payment which he or she is due. A second factor is the time needed for the two-party check to clear in the attorney's escrow account, so that two checks may be drawn by the attorney on that account.

Furthermore, a single two-party check process invites possible missappropriation of funds, giving an unscrupulous attorneys an opportunity to exploit their clients, many of whom are mentally impaired. It also necessitates an on-going supervisory role for the agency to see that funds have been correctly disbursed, and to intervene if problems arise. Such supervision would require a new bureaucracy to review affidavits from attorneys and from claimants concerning the allocation of funds. In the final analysis, it is simply proper that funds to which beneficiaries are entitled be sent directly to them, and that no intermediary be placed between them and their money.

INDEPENDENCE OF ALJ'S

Mr. President, I am also introducing a bill today to ensure the independence of the judicial appeals process within SSA, which has been a high priority of mine for many years. I believe we have witnessed an adjudicative nightmare over the last decade. This bill will ensure that this never happens again.

In the early 1980's, we witnessed an assault on thousand of truly disabled Americans who could not argue their case, and a threat by SSA on the independence of ALJ's who sought to correct such abuses. ALJ's were threatened at the very top with their positions and their careers.

The independence of the appeals process, in my opinion, is at the soul of the Social Security Program. Attempts have been made in the past decade to subvert it, but my bill will fully protect the integrity of the process. No longer should ALJ's be subjected to political pressure by bureaucrats who try to save program dollars at the expense of eligible beneficiaries. ALJ's must be free to make independent review and decisions on cases.

FORT SMITH, ARKANSAS HEARING

Mr. President, in 1982, I held a hearing in Fort Smith, AR, that I will never forget. I had a witness there who was a little lady that had been cut off and denied her benefits. She had been told by SSA that she could get a job as a secretary and as a typist. Well, she appeared before our hearing—we had 700 people there—and told us her gas, her water, her electricity had been cut off. She had no source of income. She was legally blind and had one arm, and they said, "you can be a secretary." This has happened thousands of times, and it has happened to people who did not know how to defend themselves. I hope we do not repeat it.

We saw in the early 1980's the rating by SSA bureaucrats of ALJ's, just like Senators are rated by the Chamber of Commerce or the AFL-CIO, the conservatives and liberals who rate us. As I learned from my good friend Judge David Hubbard from Fort Smith and others, they rated those ALJ's all over the country with a sheet tallying, "How many times did you hold for the administration? How many times did you hold for the claimant?" And they tallied up all these percentages, and those ALJ's that held for the claimant too many times were literally called on the carpet. Although SSA would deny this, I believe the careers of these ALJ's were basically put in jeopardy. They were told to get in line and start keeping these people off the rolls.

CURRENT ALJ STRUCTURE

ALJ's at SSA are currently assigned to the Office of Hearings and Appeals [OHA]. These judges hear and decide cases arising within the jurisdiction of the Department of Health and Human Services, including Medicare and Social Security. The judges are theoretically organized under a chief ALJ. The position is not a creation of either statute or regulation, making it an ineffective office. The actual authority resides in the Associate Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner to whom the Associate Commissioner reports.

NEED FOR REFORM

A series of congressional hearings in 1975, 1979, 1981, 1983, and 1988 on the appeals process at Social Security have documented that bureaucratic interference has sometimes threatened the due process rights of claimants. A problem with the current structure is that responsibility for the entire hearing process is placed upon individual ALJ's, but the managerial authority for the program is in the hands of nonlegally trained bureaucrats who have sometimes been insensitive to the due process rights of claimants.

In May 1981, the Inspector General of HHS questioned the wisdom of having the judges employed by the same agency whose cases they decide. The report highlighted this appearance of conflict in which one arm of SSA makes basic eligibility determinations while OHA of the same agency adjudicates the claim. Moreover, a Federal district court held that the SSA had an ulterior motive in the continuing Disability Review Program to reduce the payment of claims by ALJ's and that judges could have reasonably felt pressured to issue fewer allowance decisions, in the case of Association of Administrative Law Judges versus Heckler, in 1984.

MEDICARE APPEALS

The Health Care Financing Administration [HCFA] has made attempts in recent years to remove Medicare cases from the jurisdiction of Social Security ALJ's, who currently adjudicate claims for part A and part B of Medicare. The plans they have proposed would significantly diminish the competence and independence of the ALJ's and unduly compromise the fairness of the hearing process.

Currently, ALJ's reverse the decisions of the Medicare Program in nearly 70 percent of all appeals that reach a decision on the merits. With growing complaints about the quality of decisionmaking by Medicare fiscal intermediaries, more and more patients and providers are taking advantage of this opportunity for a fair review of Medicare claims.

HCFA has attempted to employ a new and inexperienced group of ALJ's whose primary responsibility would have been to handle Medicare appeals through telephone or field hearings at specified locations. This has been known as the "dial-a-judge" proposal. I worked with my colleagues to see that proposal defeated on the Senate floor. I do not want to see it attempted again.

The current network of SSA Offices of Hearings and Appeals across the country provides experienced judges within a reasonably close distance from claimants' residences. Face-to-face hearings are currently the rule, rather than the exception.

Historically, HCFA has responded to decisions favorable to beneficiaries in ALJ hearings with efforts to reduce or eliminate the impact of those decisions. For example, HCFA has engaged in a stepped up effort to have favorable ALJ decisions reopened and revised by the Appeals Council. Similarly, HCFA has attempted to develop instruction programs for ALJ's regarding Medicare coverage criteria.

There is no valid reason to create an entirely new corps of ALJ's to handle these cases. If ALJ's workload increases, it would be more efficient to absorb those appeals within the current system with increased staffing rather than to create a new and separate system. We must not allow HCFA to move in this direction until we have had opportunity to analyze its full ramifications. My bill therefore calls for a continuation of the current system until a study can be performed by HHS and GAO. Independence for ALJ's is crucial to fair decisions on Medicare appeals.

SUMMARY OF ALJ BILL

The bill is designed to promote decisional independence of ALJ's, and ensure proper management of the hearings and appeals process. This legislation proposes to replace the current arrangement of the OHA, administered by individuals accountable to political appointees, with the appointment of a chief ALJ under a special nonpartisan process to administer hearings and appeals. The proposal is intended to complement an initiative to make SSA an independent agency, but it is also a freestanding approach which is necessary even outside the context of an independent agency.

MAJOR PROVISIONS

Under my bill, a chief ALJ will be appointed to administer the hearings and appeals process, reporting directly to the Commissioner of Social Security. The chief ALJ would be appointed by the Secretary pursuant to recommendations made by a special nominations commission established for that purpose. The commission is composed of the president of the American Bar Association, the Federal Bar Association, and the chairman of the Administrative Conference of the United States, or their respective designees. The commission selects three recommendations; if the Commissioner chooses not to appoint from that list, he or she can request a new list. The nominee must have been an ALJ for at least 3 years preceeding his appointment. The chief ALJ serves for a fixed term of 5 years and may be removed only pursuant to a finding by the Commissioner of neglect of duty or malfeasance in office.

In addition, ALJ's serving at SSA also preside over appeals in Medicare cases, as is current practice. By July 1, 1992, HHS and GAO are required to report to Congress on that arrangement.

Although my bill keeps the office under SSA, it is accorded greater independence and stature within the agency. It increases confidence in the appeals system by placing the process under the operational control of a chief ALJ. It further separates the hearing process from the agency function by placing the office of the chief ALJ directly under the Secretary of HHS, who may delegate that authority to the Commissioner of Social Security.

CONCLUSION

Citizens seeking disability, old age and survivors benefits, supplemental security income and Medicare are entitled to fair, impartial hearings with administrative due process. This bill is designed to protect that right.

Mr. President, I urge all of my colleagues to join me as a cosponsor of these timely and important pieces of legislation. I also ask unanimous consent the full text of the two bills be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bills were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1570

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FEES FOR REPRESENTATION OF CLAIMANTS IN ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDINGS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 206(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 406(a)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(a)"; and

(2) by striking the fourth sentence and all that follows through the end of the subsection and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (3) and subject to subparagraph (B)—

"(i) whenever the Secretary, in any claim before the Secretary for benefits under this title, makes a determination favorable to the claimant and the claimant was represented by—

"(I) an attorney, or

"(II) any other representative recognized by the Secretary under the rules and regulations prescribed pursuant to paragraph (1), such attorney or representative shall be entitled to recover a fee to compensate such attorney or representative for services performed in connection with such claim in an amount agreed upon between the claimant and such attorney or representative, which is specified in a written agreement filed with the Secretary, and

"(ii) with respect to the fees of an attorney, if as a result of a determination described in clause (i), a claimant is found to be entitled to past-due benefits under this title, the Secretary shall, notwithstanding section 205(i), certify for payment out of such past-due benefits to such attorney in an amount equal to the amount specified in such written agreement.

"(B)(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), the Secretary shall determine the reasonableness of the fee of the attorney or representative specified in the filed written agreement between the claimant and such attorney or representative. If the Secretary makes a finding of unreasonableness with respect to such fee, the Secretary shall, by regulation, prescribe a fee.

"(ii) The Secretary shall approve the fee specified in a written agreement if such fee does not exceed the lesser of—

"(I) $4,000, or

"(II) an amount equal to—

"(aa) 25 percent of any past-due benefits, or

"(bb) 25 percent of any past-due benefits plus any interim benefits, as defined under section 223(h), or

"(cc) 25 percent of any interim benefits, or

"(dd) in the absence of past-due benefits or interim benefits, the lesser of 300 per cent of the basic monthly benefit amount or the monthly benefit amount.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, any benefit amount shall be determined without regard to sections 224 and 1127(a). The Secretary, in his discretion, may increase periodically the amount under subclause (I).

"(3)(A) Upon a written request to the Secretary by—

"(i) the claimant, or the administrative law judge or other decision maker to reduce the amount otherwise recoverable by the attorney or other representative under paragraph (2) based on allegations of the failure of the attorney or representative to adequately represent the claimant's interests, or

"(ii) the attorney or representative to increase the prescribed amount recoverable by such attorney or representative upon a finding of unreasonableness under paragraph (2)(B)(i), the Secretary shall provide for review of such amount after reasonable notice of such request and an opportunity to submit written information in favor of or in opposition to such request. Such review shall be conducted in accordance with procedures that the Secretary shall prescribe by regulation.

"(B) Upon completion of the review pursuant to this paragraph, the Secretary shall affirm, modify, or disallow the amount otherwise recoverable by the attorney or the representative under paragraph (2) and shall order repayment of all or part of such amount by such attorney or representative, if necessary. If such amount is disallowed, the Secretary shall certify for payment benefits to any claimant as provided in this title without regard to paragraph (2). Any such amount as so affirmed or modified shall be considered the amount recoverable by the attorney or other representative under paragraph (2).

"(4) Any person who shall, with the intent to defraud, in any manner willfully and knowingly deceive, mislead, or threaten any claimant or prospective claimant or beneficiary under this title by word, circular, letter or advertisement, or who shall knowingly charge or collect directly or indirectly any fee not authorized under this subsection, or make any agreement directly or indirectly to collect any fee in violation of the provisions for fee collection under this subsection, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall for each offense be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.".

(b) REPRESENTATION UNDER TITLE XVI OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.—Section 1631(d) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1383(d)) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The provisions of—

"(1) subsections (a), (d) and (e) of section 205,

"(2) section 206(a) (other than paragraph (3)(A)(ii)), and shall apply with respect to this part to the same extent as such provisions apply in the case of title II.".

"(3) section 207,

(c) PROTECTION OF FEES FOR ATTORNEYS AND REPRESENTATIVES FROM OFFSETTING WORKER'S COMPENSATION BENEFITS AND SSI BENEFITS.—

(1) Section 224(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 424a(a)) is amended by inserting before the last sentence the following new sentence: "A benefit under section 202 or 223 shall not be reduced pursuant to the preceding provisions of this paragraph to the extent that any amount of such benefit would not otherwise be available for payment in full of the amount recoverable from such benefit by an attorney or representative pursuant to section 206(a)(2)(B).".

(2) Section 1127(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1320a-6 (a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "A benefit under title II shall not be reduced pursuant to the preceding sentence to the extent that any amount of such benefit would not otherwise be available for payment in full of the amount recoverable from such benefit by an attorney or representative pursuant to section 206(a)(2)(B)".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect with respect to determinations favorable to the claimant made on or after January 1, 1990.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CHIEF ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE.

Title VII of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"CHIEF ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE

"SEC. 712. (a) ESTABLISHMENT OF AN OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGE.—(1) There is established within the Social Security Administration (hereinafter referred to as the "Administration") of the Department of Health and Human Services an Office of the Chief Administrative Law Judge (hereinafter referred to as the "Office"). The Office shall be headed by a Chief Administrative Law Judge. All functions in the Administration relating to hearings conducted in the Administration shall be under the operational control of the Chief Administrative Law Judge.

"(2) The Chief Administrative Law Judge described in paragraph (1) shall be appointed by the Secretary in accordance with the procedures under subsection (c), and shall oversee the activities of administrative law judges that conduct business in the Administration to ensure that such administrative law judges conduct hearings and any other administrative activities for the Administration in accordance with applicable laws and regulations.

"(3) To be eligible for appointment as Chief Administrative Law Judge, an individual shall have completed not less than 3 years of employment as an administrative law judge.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY JUDICIAL NOMINATION COMMISSION.—(1) Not more than 45 days after the date of the enactment of this section, the Secretary shall establish in the Administration a Social Security Judicial Nomination Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission"). The Commission shall be comprised of the following individuals, who shall be appointed by the Secretary:

"(A) the Chairman of the Administrative Conference of the United States, or an individual representing the interests of the Administrative Conference of the United States;

"(B) the President of the American Bar Association, or an individual representing the interests of the American Bar Association; and

"(C) the President of the Federal Bar Association, or an individual representing the interests of the Federal Bar Association.

"(2) Members of the Commission shall be appointed for a term of 3 years. A vacancy on the Commission shall be filled in the same manner as in which the initial appointment was made.

"(3) Members of the Commission who are not full-time Federal employees shall, while engaging in the business of the Commission (including travel time) shall be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Secretary, but not exceeding the rate specified at the time of such service under GS-18 of the General Schedule established under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

"(4) While away from their homes or regular places of business on the business of the Commission, such members may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in Government service.

"(5) To the extent allowed by law, the head of each department and agency of the United States Government shall, upon the request of the Secretary, provide information, assistance, and support to assist the functions of the Commission.

"(6) The provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.) shall not apply with respect to the Commission.

"(7) The Secretary shall supply such necessary office facilities, office supplies, support services, and related expenses as necessary to carry out the functions of the Commission.

"(c) PROCEDURES FOR APPOINTMENT.—(1) The Commission shall submit to the Secretary a list of 3 individuals who meet the requirements under subsection (a)(3) and whom the Commission determines to be qualified to serve as Chief Administrative Law Judge. Such list shall be submitted to the Secretary as follows:

"(A) For the initial appointment of the Chief Administrative Law Judge such list shall be submitted not more than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this section.

"(B) For an appointment to fill a vacancy that occurs before the completion of a term of the office of the Chief Administrative Law Judge, such list shall be submitted not more than 60 days after the Commission receives notice from the Secretary of such vacancy.

"(C) For an appointment upon the expiration of a term of office of the Chief Administrative Law Judge, such list shall be submitted not less than 60 days before the date of expiration of such term of office.

"(2) The Secretary may accept or reject a list submitted under paragraph (1). If the Secretary rejects such list, the Secretary shall request the Commission to submit, within a reasonable amount of time, a list of 3 additional individuals whom the Commission determines to be qualified to serve as Chief Administrative Law Judge and who meet the requirements under subsection (a)(3).

"(3) The Secretary shall appoint a Chief Administrative Law Judge from a list submitted by the Commission under this subsection.

"(4) For purposes of a reappointment of a Chief Administrative Law Judge by the Secretary, paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of this subsection shall not apply.

"(5) The Chief Administrative Law Judge shall report directly to the Secretary, and shall serve for a term of 5 years, or until the reappointment of such Judge, or the appointment of a qualified successor.

"(6) Except as provided in paragraph (7), such Chief Administrative Law Judge shall not be removed from office by the Secretary before the completion of the term of the appointment.

"(7) The Chief Administrative Law Judge may be removed from office by the Secretary before completing the term of appointment if—

"(A) the Secretary makes a finding, with respect to the Chief Administrative Law Judge, of neglect of duty or malfeasance in conducting the duties of the office; and

"(B) the Secretary transmits such finding to the Speaker of the House and to the President pro tempore of the Senate.".

SEC. 2. ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGES CONDUCTING ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIVITIES IN THE SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services shall make all appointments of administrative law judges that conduct hearings or other administrative activities in the Social Security Administration. Such appointments shall be made in accordance with section 3105 of title 5, United States Code. An administrative law judge who conducts a hearing in the Social Security Administration shall make a decision on the record after an opportunity for a hearing.

SEC. 3. HEARINGS RELATED TO HOSPITAL INSURANCE PROGRAM AND SUPPLEMENTARY MEDICAL INSURANCE PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, with respect to the applicability of section 205 of the Social Security Act to provisions of title XI and XVIII of such Act, hearings relating to Part A or Part B of title XVIII of such Act shall be conducted by administrative law judges serving in the Social Security Administration (as the delegates of the Secretary of Health and Human Services for such purpose) under the procedures applied by the Secretary under such section.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than July 1, 1992, the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Comptroller General of the United States shall each report to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives with recommendations concerning the participation of administrative law judges serving in the Social Security Administration in the hearings described in subsection (a).●

By Mr. KOHL:

S. 1572. A bill to improve budgetary information by requiring that the unified budget presented by the President contain an operating budget and a capital budget, distinguished between general funds, trust funds, and enterprise funds, and for other purposes; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL BUDGET STRUCTURE ACT

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Federal Budget Structure Act of 1989 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1572

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Federal Budget Structure Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. STATEMENT OF FINDING AND PURPOSE.

(a) STATEMENT OF FINDING.—The Congress finds that the existing budget obscures the distinctions between capital activities and operating activities, and between general funds, trust funds, and enterprise funds, so as to hinder identifying the resources needed to meet the Government's needs.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act that the unified budget present a capital budget and an operating budget, and distinguish between general funds, trust funds, and enterprise funds, in order to provide better and more relevant information on the revenues, expenses, and financing requirements of Government programs and activities.

SEC. 3. CAPITAL AND OPERATING BUDGETS.

Title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 1105 the following new section:

"§ 1105a. Capital and operating budgets

"(a)(1) The budget of the United States submitted by the President under section 1105 of this title shall be a unified budget composed of an operating budget and a capital budget.

"(2) Operating and capital budgets shall be presented separately for unified funds, general funds, trust funds, and enterprise funds.

"(b)(1) Actual, estimated, and proposed amounts shall be presented for unified funds, general funds, trust funds, and enterprise funds, and, at a minimum, shall contain—

"(A) for the operating budget the following: (i) operating revenues, (ii) operating expenses, (iii) operating surplus/deficit before interfund transfers, (iv) interfund transfers, and (v) operating surplus/deficit;

"(B) for the capital budget the following: (i) capital revenues, (ii) capital investments, (iii) capital financing requirements before interfund transfers, (iv) interfund transfers, and (v) capital financing requirements; and

"(C) unified budget financing requirements.

"(2) The capital budget shall represent only the major activities, projects, and programs which support the acquisition, construction, alteration, and rehabilitation of capital assets. All other activities, projects, and programs shall be represented in the operating budget.

"(c) In addition to the unified budget submitted by the President as required by subsections (a) and (b) of this section, the President shall present information in the form required by subsection (b)(1) for accounts, agencies, and functions, to the extent applicable.

"(d) In this section—

"(1) 'unified budget' means a budget in which revenues and expenses for general funds, trust funds, and enterprise funds are consolidated to display totals for the Federal Government as a whole;

"(2) 'trust funds' means—

"(A) the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund,

"(B) the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund,

"(C) the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund,

"(D) the Military Retirement Fund,

"(E) the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund,

"(F) the Unemployment Trust Fund,

"(G) the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, and

"(H) such other funds or accounts of the Government that the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, in consultation with the Comptroller General, determines should be classified as trust funds in order to fulfill the purpose of this section;

"(3) 'enterprise funds' means—

"(A) the Postal Service,

"(B) the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation Fund,

"(C) the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Fund,

"(D) the Federal Housing Administration,

"(E) the Tennessee Valley Authority Fund,

"(F) the Bonneville Power Administration Fund,

"(G) the Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Loan Fund,

"(H) the Export-Import Bank of the United States,

"(I) the Southeastern Power Administration,

"(J) the Southwestern Power Administration,

"(K) the Western Area Power Administration,

"(L) the Alaska Power Administration,

"(M) the Overseas Private Investment Corporation,

"(N) the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation,

"(O) the Rural Telephone Bank,

"(P) the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, and

"(Q) such other funds or accounts of the Government that the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, in consultation with the Comptroller General, determines should be classified as enterprise funds in order to fulfill the purpose of this section;

"(4) 'general funds' includes all accounts of the Government that are not trust funds or enterprise funds;

"(5) 'unified funds' means general funds, trust funds, and enterprise funds and represents the unified budget;

"(6) 'capital assets' means physical assets and financial assets, but does not include consumable inventories;

"(7) 'physical assets' means tangible assets—

"(A) the ownership of which is or will be in the public domain;

"(B) that produce services or benefits, including for national defense and security, for more than 2 years;

"(C) that have an initial cost equal to or more than $100,000; and

"(D) including—

"(i) roadways and bridges;

"(ii) airports and airway facilities;

"(iii) mass transportation systems;

"(iv) waste water treatment and related facilities;

"(v) water resource projects;

"(vi) medical facilities;

"(vii) resource recovery facilities;

"(viii) public structures;

"(ix) space and communication facilities;

"(x) defense facilities;

"(xi) major weapons platforms; and

"(xii) strategic petroleum reserves and mineral stockpiles;

"(8) 'financial assets' means interests of the Federal Government in, and claims of the Federal Government against, foreign governments, States and their political subdivisions, corporations, associations, and individuals and their resources which are represented by a legal instrument (such as bonds, debentures, notes, and other securities), less any credit subsidy costs attributable to such financial assets;

"(9) 'credit subsidy costs' means the losses incurred by the Federal Government as a result of its direct and guaranteed loans, including such costs as interest and default;

"(10) 'consumable inventories' means tangible assets of the Federal Government, including stockpiles, supplies, and inventories, which typically are consumed within 2 years or which have an initial price less than $100,000;

"(11) 'operating revenues' means all receipts of the Federal Government, other than those identified in paragraph (17), including profits and interest earned on financial assets;

"(12) 'operating expenses' means all expenses of the Federal Government, other than those identified in paragraph (18), including interest payments on debts, asset consumption charge, and credit subsidy costs;

"(13) 'the operating surplus/deficit before interfund transfers' means the difference between operating revenues and operating expenses before interfund transfers;

"(14) 'interfund transfers' means the flow of revenues between general and enterprise funds and trust funds accounts that are expenses from the account making the payments and revenues to the account receiving the payments;

"(15) 'operating surplus/deficit' means the operating surplus/deficit before interfund transfers plus or minus interfund transfers;

"(16) 'asset consumption charge' means the systematic and rational allocation of the cost—historical, replacement, or current value—of a physical asset (having a useful life of more than 2 years) financed by the appropriation accounts for which the capital budget required by this section applies;

"(17) 'capital revenues' means receipts of the Federal Government derived from the repayment of principal invested in financial assets, and taxes, collections, and receipts dedicated by statute, for the acquisition, construction, and rehabilitation of capital assets which relate to the activities, functions, and programs represented by the capital budget;

"(18) 'capital investments' means expenditures of the Federal Government, including those under grants, contracts, and leases, which are for the acquisition, construction, and rehabilitation of capital assets;

"(19) 'capital financing requirements before interfund transfers' means the difference between capital revenues and capital investments before interfund transfers;

"(20) 'capital financing requirements' means financing requirements before interfund transfers plus or minus interfund transfers; and

"(21) 'unified budget financing requirements' means the total of the operating surplus/deficit and the capital financing requirements.".

SEC. 4. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

Section 1112 of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (c)(1) by inserting "criteria, principles, and standards for determining the contents of the operating and capital budgets required under section 1105a of this title, and" after "including"; and

(2) by adding the following subsection at the end thereof:

"(g) The Comptroller General shall review and report to the Congress on the implementation of section 1105a of this title as the Comptroller General deems necessary. A review by the Comptroller General may include determining whether—

"(1) the actual, estimated, and proposed appropriations, receipts, and investments presented in the capital budget represent activities, functions, and programs which support the acquisition, construction, alteration, and rehabilitation of capital assets; and

"(2) the classifications made by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget under section 1105a(d)(2)(H) of this title further the purposes of section 1105a.".

SEC. 5. REPORT BY THE BUDGET COMMITTEE.

Not later than October 20, 1989, the Committee on the Budget shall submit to the Senate proposed legislation which shall establish additional deficit targets under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 beginning in fiscal year 1992 which would require the eventual elimination of deficits in the general and enterprise funds as set forth in the amendments made by this Act.

By Mr. WILSON (for himself, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. CRANSTON):

S. 1573. A bill to amend the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 to reimburse States for the costs of legalization outreach activities for temporary resident aliens regarding procedures for their adjustment of status to permanent residence; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RELATING TO COST REIMBURSEMENT TO STATES FOR LEGALIZATION OUTREACH ACTIVITIES

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to amend the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 [IRCA] so that States can dedicate a small portion of their Federal impact assistance funds [SLIAG] for limited outreach activities under the Amnesty Program. I am proud to have Senators CRANSTON and ADAMS join with me as original cosponsors.

As many of our colleagues recall, Mr. President, over 3 million undocumented aliens applied for lawful temporary residence under the landmark immigration reform legislation that was signed into law in November 1986. And I can attest to the magnitude of the Amnesty Program's massive undertaking. California is home to nearly 1.6 million newly legalized aliens, which represents almost 60 percent of the total population nationwide granted initial residence.

Yet many are unaware that the Amnesty Program entails two phases. Under phase 1, eligible individuals received temporary resident status. But the job is far from over because these same individuals must now avail themselves of the phase 2 process within a specified time limit in order to adjust to permanent resident status. Newly legalized aliens are required to convert their status from temporary to lawful permanent resident status between November 1988 and November 1990 depending on the day they applied for temporary legal residency.

We cannot understate the unique and critical role the amnesty debate played in forging the final compromise agreement on IRCA. But unless action is taken to adequately inform the eligible legalized aliens of the law's requirements under phase 2, many individuals who did receive temporary resident status will fail to comply with its requirements, causing them to lose the very benefit the Congress intended for this law.

To further indicate the need for increased outreach, I think California's situation deserves our close attention: Of the 1.6 million eligible legalized aliens in California, only 400,000 have stepped forward under phase 2. Nationwide figures are no more encouraging.

Simply put, the legislation I offer today would allow States to use a very small portion of their State legalization impact assistance grants [SLIAG] for IRCA-coordinated outreach activities. This way, the fullest number of eligible aliens will take action to adjust their immigrant status.

Otherwise, Mr. President, individuals who do not file a timely phase 2 application would see their status revert back to that of an illegal alien, and I don't feel there are many here who do not recognize the seriousness of that unfortunate consequence.

Under current law, States cannot advise newly legalized persons about general phase 2 requirements or about the need to submit a new application. IRCA does not permit the use of SLIAG funds for outreach activities that go beyond informing eligible legalized aliens of how and when to obtain educational services and why and how to identify themselves to service providers.

Gov. George Deukmejian and other officials from my State inform me that California's outreach campaign will have a limited impact because SLIAG funds cannot be used to inform eligible legalized aliens of program requirements. If current law continues without the minor adjustments this bill would provide, California and the other States with large numbers of eligible legalized aliens will again be confronted with the very same conditions IRCA sought to address. Similarly, a recent report issued by the American Public Welfare Association [APWA] calls for increased outreach authority.

A coordinated outreach campaign involving the INS, State agencies, local governments, and community-based organizations would be the most effective means to properly inform eligible applicants. And the sooner States can use SLIAG funds for a full scope of outreach activities, the sooner newly legalized persons will apply for lawful permanent residency, which is the promise offered by IRCA's legalization provisions.

Just as the immigration reform bills in the U.S. Senate are characterized by intense, compassionate, and sometimes confusing debate, for this is not a simple matter, it is equally clear that the very population intended to benefit from the amnesty provisions received mixed signals from the INS during the program's initial phase.

Our action is critical, Mr. President, and States are crying out for relief. After all, State and local governments are those most affected by this new population of residents. SLIAG was established to help States and local governments cope with this new population. Allowing a small portion of these funds to be used in the manner set out under this legislation is appropriate and loyal to the Amnesty Program's goals. It is simple, and it does nothing whatsoever to undermine the very delicate balance forged by IRCA. It is limited in its scope and approach, and it does not call for any new Federal spending as it would be funded out of an existing appropriation.

We should act to help States implement a coordinated outreach policy to ensure the fullest success the Congress intended for the Amnesty Program. For this very reason, I urge my colleagues to give this bill their careful attention and their support.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter relating to this subject be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
Sacramento, CA.

Hon. PETE WILSON,
U.S. Senator, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR PETE: This is to indicate my support for federal legislation you have introduced to enhance state outreach activities for Phase 2 of the legalization program.

As you know, California has made a great effort to ensure that as many persons as possible applied for the legislation benefits granted under the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 (IRCA). But the job is far from over. These newly legalized persons must submit an additional application for lawful permanent residency within a specified time limit, or they will become illegal aliens once again.

California has already embarked on an outreach campaign for Phase 2 of the legalization program. But, as you are well aware, California's outreach campaign will have limited impact because we cannot use SLIAG funds for the broad range of information that should be disseminated to the target population. We cannot tell newly legalized persons about the general requirements for Phase 2 of the legalization program, even about the requirement that they must submit a new application to INS to obtain lawful permanent residency status. We cannot caution the newly legalized that their use of cash assistance programs could jeopardize their application for lawful permanent residency, or tell them where to seek help in completing their Phase 2 applications. Currently, we can only tell them where and how to enroll in English-as-a-Second Language and civics classes, and why it is important they identify themselves as newly legalized persons to service providers.

Your bill will allow states to provide the Phase 2 outreach messages that cannot be done under current law. My Administration is available to help you to secure its enactment.

Most cordially,

GEORGE DEUKMEJIAN.●

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. HATFIELD, and Mr. LEAHY):

S. 1574. A bill to prohibit covert assistance to influence the Nicaraguan elections; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PROHIBITION ON COVERT ASSISTANCE TO INFLUENCE NICARAGUAN ELECTIONS

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am proud to introduce, along with the Senators from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY] and Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD], a bill that will help ensure a free, fair and open election in Nicaragua in February 1990.

This legislation, if enacted, will ban the Central Intelligence Agency and all other agencies of the United States Government involved in intelligence activities from engaging in covert activities for the purpose of influencing the 1990 Presidential, legislative, and local elections in Nicaragua.

In April, the Congress, in cooperation with the Bush administration, approved the so-called bipartisan accord which provided $67 million in "humanitarian" aid to the Contras. That legislation was intended to lay aside the contentious debate on military aid to the Contras, by substituting for it nonlethal or maintenance aid, and in turn, allow a window for the Presidential campaign and elections in Nicaragua to occur without interference from Contra military operations.

I opposed that package because I believed it was time for the United States to finally put to rest the Contra Program: it has failed to promote democracy in Nicaragua; its policy justification has never been made clear to either the Congress or the American people; and it has drained more than a third a billion dollars of United States taxpayers' dollars and helped undermine United States international prestige over the past decade.

However, a number of my colleagues in both the House and Senate supported that package, despite their reservations with the Contras Program, in return for an honest commitment by President Bush and Secretary James Baker to take the 1990 Nicaraguan elections seriously and to play a constructive role in that process.

The best way to ensure that the United States will indeed play a constructive role—and in turn, carry out the objectives of the bipartisan accord—would be to prevent that agency of our Government which has been so instrumental in organizing and shaping the Contra Program—the Cental Intelligence Agency—from being involved in any manner in internal politics in Nicaragua during the 1990 campaign elections.

The recent history of CIA involvement in Nicaragua is replete with actions that the United States and the American people should be ashamed. In 1980, the Agency subcontracted with the same Argentine generals responsible for the disappearance of 10,000 of their countrymen a decade earlier to train and equip a small band of Somoza's National Guardsmen.

In 1984, the Agency coordinated and financed the mining of Nicaraguan harbors—in violation of international law.

That same year, the Agency prepared a manual instructing the Contras in how to assassinate Nicaraguan civic and political leaders—in violation of President Reagan's 1981 Executive order.

The CIA has been just as active in undermining democratic tendencies within the resistance as it has in destabilizing Nicaragua. For 9 years, the Agency and its operatives have sided with the most repressive and corrupt elements of the Contras, preferring Adolfo Calero and ex-Somocista Enrique Bermudez over the real democrats of the resistance like Arturo Cruz and Alfredo Cesar. Even today, the Agency is resisting efforts by newcomer Assistant Secretary Bernard Aronson to oust Bermudez and his cohorts.

The story is the same with the Miskitos. Over the years, the Agency has undermined and subverted one of the few charismatic and popular leaders of the Miskito opposition, Brooklyn Rivera, preferring instead those Indian commanders whom it can control and manipulate.

The CIA's record of involvement in the internal political processes of Latin American countries is equally disturbing.

In 1954, the CIA plotted the overthrow of Guatemala's democratically elected president, Jacobo Arbenz, ushering in more than three decades of brutal military dictatorships.

From 1970 to 1973, the CIA helped coordinate a campaign to destabilize Salvador Allende, Chile's democratically elected president. Allende's fall was followed by more than 16 years of brutal authoritarian rule by General Augusto Pinochet.

Furthermore, the Agency already has a proven track record in Nicaraguan elections. During the 1984 presidential elections, the CIA—working at loggerheads with the State Department—played a destabilizing role which has been amply documented.

The CIA along with hardliners in the Reagan administration worked with elements in the Nicaraguan opposition to discourage Arturo Cruz from running in those elections.

Listen to Carlos Andres Perez, the current president of Venezuela.

In 1984, Perez worked with the Sandinistas and the opposition to try to enable Cruz to run as the opposition's presidential candidate. Perez is quoted as saying, "the CIA had given instructions, had put pressures, against Cruz's candidacy and therefore it was not accepted."

Perez went on to say regarding the CIA: "They just did not want someone with the prestige of Cruz to enter the elections because it would validate them. They wanted to demonstrate there was no freedom of elections in Nicaragua."

In large part due to CIA interference, Cruz refused to register as a candidate, the November 1984 elections were discredited in the eyes of many in Washington, and a historic opportunity to shift the battle for democracy in Nicaragua from the battlefield to the ballot box was lost.

The last word on this episode belongs to Arturo Cruz, who in a later interview is quoted as saying: "In hindsight, we should have gone, with or without conditions."

To insure that the experience of 1984 is not repeated next year, we should prevent the CIA, which helped undermine efforts to insure that Cruz would run 5 years ago, from getting involved in the 1990 Nicaraguan presidential race.

This view is shared by many members of the Nicaraguan opposition, some of whom suffered government repression and most whom will be involved in next February's race.

Listen to the warning of Nicaraguan opposition leaders.

Alfredo Cesar, member of the Resistance Directorate, returned to Nicaragua in June after 7 years in exile. Upon his return to Managua, Cesar emphatically stated:

> The worst thing the U.S. Government can do is to try to help in a hidden way. That would be the worst of all, worse than not helping at all.

Nicaragua's major opposition daily La Prensa, which runs into frequent battles with government censors and has been closed several times in the past decade, called suggestions of possible covert aid to the Nicaraguan opposition a potentially fatal blow to their electoral hopes. Wrote La Prensa:

> What more could Daniel Ortega want than to cry out to the world that the CIA is helping the opposition and that the democratic opposition is a kind of civilian contra that has sold itself to imperialism?

Jaime Chamorro, editor of La Prensa, echoed the warnings of his newspaper in a July 5 interview with National Public Radio:

> We're seeing that the Government is anxious, you know, to find out some kind of CIA involvement to destroy the credibility of the opposition. But if they're (the United States Government) going to send money, it should be open. The law of Nicaragua permits all donations from the exterior, but open donations.

Just this morning, 20 Nicaraguan parties, representing most of the political opposition, joined the Sandinistas in signing a "Political Accord of the National Dialogue." That accord, the result of 2 days of intense negotiations, concluded, and I quote from an unofficial translation,

The political parties call on the governments with interests in the Central American region to abstain from carrying out covert activities in the electoral process of Nicaragua.

Shouldn't the Nicaraguan opposition, which our Government sees as the last hope for democracy in that country, have a say over what kind of aid it receives from the United States?

Over the past year, I have consistently advocated the position that the United States should be involved in upcoming Nicaraguan elections, but it should be constructive and open. In 1988, I played a small role in assisting the forces of democracy during the Chilean plebiscite by adding $1 million for the National Endowment for Democracy's activities in Chile.

With the technical assistance and training provided by the endowment, Chile's democratic opposition mounted a highly sophisticated campaign. The plebiscite was generally free and fair, according to most international observers, and democracy prevailed. The final test of the process begun on October 5, 1988 will occur this December, when Chileans will select their president for the first time in 19 years.

The Bush administration and Secretary Baker's State Department should heed the lessons of Chile.

In 1973, the Central Intelligence Agency helped bring General Augusto Pinochet to power. Chile, the Americas' second oldest democracy, suffered more than 15 years of authoritarian and repressive rule as a result of CIA intervention.

In 1988, the National Endowment for Democracy, in an open and democratic fashion, contributed to Pinochet's early retirement, which will begin in March 1990.

In the past several months, I have attempted to extract a commitment from administration officials that the Central Intelligence Agency would abstain from involvement with the opposition during the Nicaraguan elections.

In an April 12 hearing of the Senate Foreign Operations Subcommittee, I sought assurances from then Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Michael Kozak that the CIA would not be involved in the Nicaraguan elections.

Mr. Kozak refused to provide any assurances.

I asked Secretary Baker in written questions as a followup to the April 12 hearing.

Mr. Baker likewise refused.

And on June 23, during another Senate Foreign Operations hearing, the recently confirmed Assistant Secretary Bernard Aronson consistently refused to answer my questions regarding the future role of the CIA in the Nicaraguan elections. Mr. Aronson even refused to answer a question I posed to him as to whether he agreed with a recent La Prensa editorial which called suggestions of a CIA electoral role a potentially fatal blow to their electoral hopes.

Mr. President, the CIA—in Nicaragua and elsewhere—has a sordid record of involvement in elections in other countries. Permitting the Agency to "help" the democratic process in the upcoming elections in Nicaragua is akin to using a hired gun to run a political campaign.

The choice for the United States in Nicaragua should be clear.

But if the Bush administration refuses to learn from history, then Congress must take the initiative and impose rationality on United States policy toward Nicaragua which has sorely lacked such qualities over the past 8 years.

For this reason, I am introducing today, along with Senators HATFIELD and LEAHY, a bill to ban the Central Intelligence Agency from participating in covert activities related to the 1990 elections in Nicaragua. I urge my colleagues to join us as cosponsors, and ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation along with several articles related to the Nicaraguan elections be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1574

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. . PROHIBITION ON COVERT ASSISTANCE TO INFLUENCE THE NICARAGUAN ELECTIONS.

(a) PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR CERTAIN COVERT ACTIONS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, funds available to the Central Intelligence Agency, the Department of Defense, any other agency or entity of the United States Government involved in intelligence activities, or the National Security Council or its staff may not be obligated or expended for covert actions for the purpose of influencing, directly or indirectly, the electoral campaign leading up to, or the results of, the 1990 presidential, legislative, or local elections in Nicaragua.

(b) DEFINITION.—

(1) As used in subsection (a), the term, "covert action" means an activity or activities conducted by any department, agency, or other element of the United States Government to influence political, economic, or military conditions abroad so that the role of the United States Government is not intended to be apparent or acknowledged publicly, but does not include—

(A) activities the primary purpose of which is to acquire intelligence, traditional counterintelligence activities, traditional activities to improve or maintain the operational security of United States Government programs, or administrative activities;

(B) traditional diplomatic or military activities to support such activities;

(C) traditional law enforcement activities conducted by United States Government law enforcement agencies or routine support to such activities; or

(D) activities to provide routine support to the overt activities (other than activities described in clause (A), (B), or (C)) of other United States Government agencies abroad.

(2) For purposes of this Act, a request by any department, agency, or other element of the United States Government to a foreign government or a private citizen to conduct a covert action on behalf of the United States shall be deemed to be a covert action.

[From National Public Radio, July 5, 1989, Richard Gonzalez reporting]

ALL THINGS CONSIDERED

The partisan debate over U.S. policy in Nicaragua seriously strained relations between Congress and the Reagan administration during the better part of this decade. So, when President Bush made it clear he wasn't looking for a military solution in Nicaragua, there were many anti-contra congressman who took some comfort in these words:

"We do not claim the right to order the politics of Nicaragua. That is for the Nicaraguan people to decide. The Esquipulas Accord requires a free, open, political process, in which all groups can participate. The playing field must be level."

Some U.S. officials say that a level playing field means ensuring that the Nicaraguan civilian opposition stand a fair chance of winning the upcoming presidential elections. They're considering secret financial contributions or political advice to opposition parties, and perhaps a secret role for the C.I.A. Administration officials deny they have settled on a plan. But there are some congressman who are threatening to block any secret U.S. involvement in the Nicaraguan elections, saying that such activity would compromise the integrity of the vote. Pennsylvania Democrat Peter Kostmayer is among those who say C.I.A. covert activities are incompatible with a free and democratic election in Nicaragua:

"What would the C.I.A. be doing? What kind of activities would they be engaged in? What kind of secret activities would the Central Intelligence Agency be involved in in democratic elections in Nicaragua? What is it they would be doing? I'm at a loss to understand why the Administration would make such a proposal and why any Member of Congress would support such a proposal.

Kostmayer says he does not oppose overt aid to the Nicaraguan opposition, which has already received hundreds of thousands of dollars from American sources, the most notably from the National Endowment for Democracy, a private non-profit corporation which receives money from Congress. Last year the Nicaraguan government prohibited the opposition from receiving any foreign aid. The ban has since been dropped, and Congress is expected to approve about $3.5 million in aid to opposition parties, business groups, independent labor unions and human rights groups. U.S. officials say the Sandinistas could again ban aid to the opposition, which, they say, underlines the need for covert capability. The Administration also wants to avoid the precedent of imposing a country-specific ban on the C.I.A. Illinois Republican Henry Hyde is a supporter of covert operations:

"I don't think we should single out one country in the world where legislation should forbid or encourage or anything about covert activities. Because if we're going to do it with one country, we can do it with other countries. Technically, I think it's an unconstitutional encroachment on the president's authority to conduct foreign policy."

But Democrats say there is a precedent for restricting the president's authority in a specific country. Congress did that once before when it passed the Boland amendment, which prohibited covert assistance to the Nicaraguan contra rebels. Cong. James Moody, a Wisconsin Democrat, recalls that the Reagan administration tried to work around the Boland amendment:

"It was flouted. It was ignored and broken. But it's not a new precedent to have a specific ban on presidential authority with regard to a specific country."

The C.I.A. has a long history of involvement in foreign elections. In the past decade it has played a role in El Salvador and, most recently, in Panama. It was also involved in Nicaragua's last elections. In 1984, the C.I.A. secretly encouraged opposition parties to boycott the vote as a way of denying Daniel Ortega the legitimacy he sought through the ballot. One former contra leader, Arturo Cruz, now says he regrets withdrawing from that race and later going on the C.I.A.'s payroll.

The Nicaraguan opposition is also opposed to covert C.I.A. involvement. Jaime Chamorro is the editor of the opposition daily, La Prensa. The paper recently editorialized against such aid to its cause, saying it might give the Sandinistas an election issue they can exploit:

[Voice of Jaime Chamorro] "We're seeing that the Government is anxious, you know, to find out some kind of C.I.A. involvement to destroy the credibility of the opposition. But if they're going to send money, it should be open. The law of Nicaragua permits all donations from the exterior, but open donations."

Nevertheless, supporters of covert operations say the possibility of C.I.A. action may be enough to keep the Sandinistas off balance, and in a defensive posture—"to keep them guessing," one U.S. official put it. They add that since there is already congressional oversight of the C.I.A., there shouldn't be any public debate of the issue. Illinois Republican Henry Hyde:

"We can be criticized for interfering in the internal affairs of another country and we are whether we do or whether we don't. But the fact is the Soviet Union and the East Bloc countries are very active in trying to rig elections, and the efforts made by this country to have free and fair elections are entirely appropriate. But covert ought to remain covert."

The House Intelligence Committee is expected to take up this issue when it returns from the holiday recess. Sources close to the committee say the congressmen are looking for some kind of indication from the House leadership as to whether they should force a public debate on the C.I.A.'s possible role in Nicaragua.

COVERT U.S. AID FOR ELECTION WORSE THAN NONE, SAYS EX-CONTRA LEADER

(By Adrian Croft)

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA.—Covert U.S. aid to the opposition in next year's Nicaraguan elections would be worse than no aid at all, former contra leader Alfredo Cesar said yesterday.

He said the issue of foreign aid to participants in next February's elections should be debated openly. Cesar, a former director of the U.S. backed contras, returned to Nicaragua this month after seven years in exile.

"The worst thing the U.S. government can do is to try to help in a hidden way. That would be the worst of all, worse than not helping at all," Cesar said at a news conference.

Nicaragua's pro-government press has accused the opposition of selling out to Washington, and Sandinista leader Bayardo Arce has said that some aid would be illegal.

Michael Kozak, acting Assistant Secretary of State for InterAmerican Affairs, recently intensified controversy in Washington over covert U.S. involvement in Nicaragua's elections by refusing to rule out intevention by the CIA.

A furious debate is raging in the Nicaraguan press about plans by the U.S. National Endowment for Democracy to give $3 million to help Nicaraguan opposition groups organize their election campaign. The endowment is openly funded by the U.S. government, and its funds are appropriated by Congress.

Cesar, who has been appointed secretary-general of the opposition Social Democratic Party, asked what difference there was between U.S. aid for the opposition in Soviet aid for the ruling Sandinistas.

"I would suggest that for every ruble the Soviet Communist Party gives to the Sandinista party, that the [U.S.] Republican and Democratic Parties openly give the same to democratic parties," he said.

Cesar said he believed that the United States should gradually lift a trade embargo it imposed on Nicaragua in 1985. He said a ban on Nicaraguan imports from the United States should be lifted to allow necessities such as food and medicine to reach the people.

The last thing to be lifted should be a ban on Nicaraguan exports to the United States because most foreign-exchange earnings were managed by the government, and there was no guarantee that the earnings would reach the people, he said.

Cesar also described as positive President Daniel Ortega's request this week to Catholic Cardinal Miguel Obando Y Bravo to mediate between Nicaragua and the United States.

But he said it was a waste of time to seek normal relations with the United States without first holding a national dialogue to reconcile national differences. The White House said Tuesday that it was not interested in holding direct talks with Ortega.

ANTI-SANDINISTAS WARY ON U.S. AID

(By Mark A. Uhlig)

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA, June 20—Stung by word that the Bush Administration is considering efforts to influence the elections here, Nicaraguan opposition leaders have spoken out against such aid, calling suggestions that it is on the way a potentially fatal blow to their electoral hopes.

"What more could Daniel Ortega want than to cry out to the world that the C.I.A. is helping the opposition and that the democratic opposition is a kind of civilian contra that has sold itself to imperialism?" said the opposition newspaper La Prensa.

The Government of Daniel Ortega Saavedra, the Nicaraguan President, has devoted much space in the official press to detailed coverage of payments reportedly received by opposition candidates and parties. The Government has used the issue to mock the opposition's claim that the elections will not just decide among candidates, but serve as a national referendum on the Sandinistas. The election is scheduled next February.

"The more they insist on fomenting the activities of political mercenaries," said the offical Sandinista newspaper, Barricada, referring to American leaders, "the clearer it will be to Nicaraguans that the elections will be a referendum on Yankee policy."

Some of the outcry was prompted by an article on June 11 in The New York Times describing efforts by the Bush Administration to reserve the right to conduct clandestine operations here despite Congressional opposition.

NO DECISION REPORTED

In describing the American debate, the article in The Times reported that the Administration "says that it has not decided to undertake any new covert operations in Nicaragua." But the report was taken by the Government as a virtual declaration of political war by the Bush Administration.

For years, the Government has said the political opposition here has been the creation of American policy makers or, as official news organizations said in recent days, "a fraud" financed by millions of dollars in covert aid from the C.I.A.

The charge of C.I.A. involvement also took on serious political implications here in late September when Jim Wright, then Speaker of the House, said the C.I.A. had promoted demonstrations by the Nicaraguan opposition in an effort to provoke the Government.

But opposition leaders have denied such allegations, noting that the mere suggestion of ties with the C.I.A. can mean long prison terms for anti-Sandinista politicians. Those assertions have been supported by senior non-American diplomats, who say they do not believe that the opposition has been receiving significant amounts of clandestine aid for its election efforts.

HOW LITTLE U.S. IS DOING

"If anything is noticeable at this stage, it is not how much the United States is doing, but how little," said a diplomat based in Managua.

In the past, American money has been sent openly to La Prensa and to a variety of other anti-Sandinista groups. But late last year, the National Assembly banned all foreign financing of political parties and campaigns in Nicaragua, and made it a treasonous offense for members of the civic opposition, like trade unions and church organizations, to accept donations from American institutions like the National Endowment for Democracy.

That ban was partly lifted under new election laws approved by the National Assembly in April as part of Nicaragua's obligations under a regional peace accord. Under the new laws, half of all money received must be donated to finance the Supreme Electoral Council, an official panel responsible for managing the voting process.

BUSH PRESSING CONGRESS TO PERMIT CIA ROLE IN NICARAGUA ELECTION

(By Robert Pear)

WASHINGTON, June 10.—In a policy conflict with the Democratic-controlled Congress, the Bush Administration is trying to preserve its power to conduct secret intelligence operations aimed at influencing the Nicaraguan elections next February.

"We want to keep the Sandinistas guessing," said a top State Department official.

The Administration says it has not decided to undertake any new covert operations in Nicaragua, but is considering proposals for such activities as part of a review of how the United States could best support the democratic process and the "democratic opposition" in Nicaragua.

For example, Administration officials said, they might want to provide secret contributions or political guidance to opposition leaders if the Sandinistas tried to rig the elections. The Administration is vigorously opposing Congressional efforts to prohibit the Central Intelligence Agency from trying to influence the elections.

OBJECT TO PROHIBITION

"We would object to any prohibition that limits our policy options and room for maneuver," a State Department official said. "In addition, a ban on covert aid would be an enroachment on Presidential power."

Under Federal law, the President is required to inform the House and Senate intelligence committees of "any significant anticipated intelligence activity," but does not have to get their approval. The committees may try to persuade the Administration to revise or cancel an operation. In addition, Congress may withhold money from a project or may pass legislation explicitly prohibiting it.

Administration officials said they feared that Congress would tie their hands by outlawing covert activities in the election campaign, then criticize the Administration for not doing enough to help defeat the Sandinistas.

Many in Congress contend that any United States aid to the Nicaraguan opposition should be publicly debated and disclosed in this country. There is bipartisan support in Congress for efforts to aid the opposition openly through the National Endowment for Democracy, a private nonprofit corporation that receives almost all its money from the Federal Government. The Endowment provides money to the Solidarity trade union in Poland and other democratic movements.

BILL ON C.I.A. PROGRAMS

Over the years, the C.I.A. has exerted influence and pressure in many foreign elections, including in Chile in the early 1970's, in El Salvador and Nicaragua in 1984 and in Panama last month.

The House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence is writing a bill to authorize C.I.A. programs in the coming year. Several members of Congress have sent letters to the committee chairman, Representative Anthony C. Beilenson, saying the bill should prohibit C.I.A. efforts to influence the Nicaraguan elections.

In one such letter, Representative Jim Moody, Democrat of Wisconsin, said, "A large-scale C.I.A. campaign would not remain covert for long and, once disclosed, would compromise the integrity of the electoral process."

The letter was signed by Mr. Moody and two other Democratic Representatives, Bruce A. Morrison of Connecticut and Peter H. Kostmayer of Pennsylvania. They said they would raise the issue on the floor of the House if the committee bill did not prohibit "C.I.A. covert activities to influence the elections in Nicaragua."

DEMOCRATS ENDORSE BAN

In another letter to Mr. Beilenson, Democratic members of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Latin America endorsed a ban, saying, "The United States should do nothing that would interfere with or undermine the prospects for free and fair elections in Nicaragua."

Supporters of such a ban say it would help opposition groups by immunizing them against Government charges that they were tools of the United States. They say American aid is more effective and less risky when it is publicly acknowledged.

"If the U.S. were to provide aid to political parties, I believe it should be done openly," said Representative Matthew F. McHugh, Democrat of upstate New York, the chairman of the subcommittee on legislation of the Intelligence Committee.

Likewise, Carl Gershman, president of the National Endowment for Democracy, said, "The work of promoting democracy is best done the way we do it—openly."

ARGUMENTS AGAINST BAN

At a recent Congressional hearing, Michael G. Kozak, the Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, was asked four times for an assurance that the C.I.A. would not be involved in the Nicaraguan elections. He declined to give such an assurance.

A public hearing is "just not the appropriate forum to be talking about whether the agency is involved in anything or not involved in anything," Mr. Kozak told Senator Tom Harkin, Democrat of Iowa.

Administration officials make these arguments against a ban on C.I.A. operations in Nicaragua:

It would improperly infringe on the President's authority.

It would set a precedent for restricting activities of the C.I.A. in other countries and other elections.

The Sandinistas might block other forms of American aid to anti-Sandinista groups. If Congress had already forbidden secret operations, the United States would not have any effective way to help the opposition.

The whole issue is too sensitive to be debated publicly in Congress.

USES FOR THE MONEY

Congress has already appropriated $2 million to the endowment to promote democracy in Nicaragua. Mr. Gershman said the money could be used to assist opposition parties, independent labor unions, business groups, the press, civic organizations and human rights groups.

The Senate this week passed a bill that would provide $3 million in additional funds for the endowment to spend in Nicaragua. The House has not voted on that provision, but is likely to accept it.

DEMOCRACY OR REVENGE?

(By Mary McGrory)

Some people thought the Bush administration was giving in far too gracefully on Nicaragua. Now they think they know why.

What the administration couldn't win on the battlefield with proxy warriors, they hope to recoup at the ballot box with the CIA.

The State Department won't say the CIA will be skulking around down there disrupting the election in February. But it doesn't say it won't, either. It's like those ships with nuclear weapons. The captain won't say for certain either way, and the supposition is that the nukes are on board.

CIA participation would, of course, taint the election totally and nullify the results. Would it be discovered? Of course. It would also show that the administration is more interested in revenge than democracy.

The fact that all of Central America, and in fact, the world, expects the United States to intervene in the long-delayed elections, does not mitigate the harm it would do. But the idea that we must influence or really shape the outcome is deeply imbedded in the Washington psyche, although the country has said often enough that it doesn't care what Nicaragua does at home as long as it doesn't bother the neighbors.

On both sides of Capitol Hill, money—$2 million by the House, $3 million by the Senate—has been voted for the National Endowment for Democracy, a publicly funded political organization that gave a hand to the opposition in the recent Chile referendum on military president Augusto Pinochet. They sent pollsters and ad men to Santiago to give the people who want to turn him out some expertise. The story had a happy ending. They voted "No" to the bully.

The only trouble with overt political interference is that it might encourage the likes of Lee Atwater and Roger Ailes and other Republican hit men to take their particularly toxic brand of politics to a people who would be getting their first taste of it. Smearing Sandinistas would not lift the level of the exercise.

And it is well to reflect how Pinochet, the bloodiest tyrant in the hemisphere, got to power in the first place. In 1970 Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger decided that Chileans were behaving unacceptably by electing Salvador Allende, a Marxist, to the presidency. The CIA was dispatched to "destabilize" the country. It succeeded all too well. Strikes and sabotage occurred. Allende died in a military coup led by Pinochet in 1973.

The years since have been a nightmare of repression—kidnappings, torture and "disappeareds"—for the Chilean people, who were the most democratic in Latin America until we butted in.

It is also well to remember that the agency is widely suspected of playing a destructive part in the previous Nicaraguan election of 1984. Contra leader Arturo Cruz abruptly quit as a candidate for office, robbing Daniel Ortega's election of its legitimacy and ensuring four more years of violence.

Despite this unhappy history, George Bush seems ready to send his favorite agency, which he once and briefly headed, back into Nicaragua to muddy the waters.

At least at an April meeting of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which has been brought to light by Robert Pear of The New York Times, an official of the State Department, Michael Kozak, refused repeatedly to affirm or deny that "the Company" is about to do a number on the Nicaraguan elections.

Sen. Tom Harkin (D-Iowa) asked Kozak if he could "give me assurances we will remain as neutral as we did in the Salvadoran elections."

The answer is no.

Harkin is planning to introduce a law that would prohibit CIA intervention, apparently hoping that obedience to a Harkin amendment would be more than what was accorded the famous Boland Amendment, which forbade the sale of arms to the contras and was merrily violated by the Reaganites.

If the administration is serious about introducing democracy to Nicaragua, it should dispatch the League of Women Voters to Managua, not the CIA, which is the least democratic of our institutions. They understand how the system works. They are old hands at arranging debates. They take no nonsense from anyone. No dirty tricks, no character assassination, would be allowed. They are meticulously neutral.

But it seems we are determined to blight the elections as we have blighted the lives of the Nicaraguans for the past eight years. Congress wants to send overt aid, which will taint them; and the president seems to want to send covert aid, which will make them a farce. Either way, we take away the rights of the Nicaraguan people for a free election. We'd rather get even, it seems.

THE CIA IN NICARAGUA: NO THANKS

If the Bush administration is serious about nurturing democracy in Central America, it should immediately disavow any intention to meddle covertly in Nicaragua's February elections.

In congressional hearings this month, a State Department official acknowledged that the administration is considering proposals to allow the Central Intelligence Agency secretly to aid Nicaraguan opposition parties arrayed against the Sandinista regime.

It boggles the mind to think that, at this late date in the United States' fumbling efforts to overthrow the Sandinistas, American policymakers are giving serious thought to CIA involvement in Nicaraguan politics. Just when the U.S. seems to be finding its way out of the Central American morass brought on by over-reliance on covert operations, can it honestly wish to perpetuate methods that have proved a dismal failure?

The Nicaraguan opposition itself is aghast as the prospect of a CIA "helping hand." As the opposition newspaper La Prensa observes, CIA involvement would tarnish "the democratic opposition [as] a kind of civilian contra that has sold itself to imperialism."

Not that we entertain any fanciful notions that the elections scheduled for Feb. 25 will be wholly free and fair. The Sandinistas dominate the electoral commission that will interpret the election rules, and no doubt obstacles will be thrown up to impede opposition access to the media, registration of opposition voters, and so on. We resignedly expect to see Daniel Ortega and Company still firmly in power on Feb. 26.

Still, clumsy U.S. attempts to oust the Sandinistas would do more harm than good.

Impatient U.S. policymakers have too little faith in the process of democratization. Recent events in countries from the Philippines to Latin America to Eastern Europe show that even a little democracy can be a dangerous thing for dictators. The exercise, though in a limited degree, of democratic rights creates a dynamism that can be suppressed but can't forever be bottled up.

The outcome of the Nicaraguan elections may be foreordained. Yet the Sandinistas—by a combination of domestic problems and international pressure—have been forced to play with a fire that, under the watchful eye of the world, could well burn their fingers. The elections will be a chance for opposition groups in Nicaragua to widen political openings, gain recognition and legitimacy, train candidates, form coalitions, and educate voters. However, distant the harvest, these are the seeds of democracy.

Even some contra leaders see the elections as an opportunity to strengthen the democratic process. One prominent contra, Alfred César Agguirre, has returned to Nicaragua to participate, and others are expected to follow.

It would be folly for the U.S. to poison the seeds of democracy in Nicaragua by heavy-handed actions. Any U.S. aid to further the democratic process there should be fully open and aboveboard, as through the National Endowment for Democracy. The Langley spooks should stay away.

RESIST THE TEMPTATION TO RIG NICARAGUAN VOTE

(By William M. LeoGrande)

Like two punched-out prizefighters staggering in a clinch, the Democratic Congress and the Republican Administration embraced last week, agreeing to end their eight-year fight over aid to the Contras. As much out of exhaustion as conviction, they decided to call it a draw.

Unable to persuade Congress to resume military aid, the White House had to give up former President Ronald Reagan's quest for a Contra victory. But as part of the bipartisan bargain, congressional Democrats agreed to continue non-military aid to the Contras, thereby keeping them together, "body and soul" as Reagan used to say, in case the Nicaraguan elections next February go awry.

The Bush Administration has by no means abandoned its hope of ousting the Sandinistas; it will now simply shift its efforts from the battlefield to the electoral arena. U.S. officials are advising Contra leaders to return to Nicaragua and "think political."

The last time Nicaragua held elections, in 1984, the outcome was not in doubt. Virtually everyone, including U.S. officials and opposition leaders, conceded that the Sandinistas would win a fair contest. At Washington's behest, most of the opposition boycotted the election so that the Sandinistas would gain no stature from it.

Five years later, life in Nicaragua is much harder. The mantle of legitimacy that the Sandinistas won by ousting Anastasio Somoza has been tarnished by the collapse of the economy. Nearly a decade of wary, combined with incessant conflict between a socialist-minded government and a capitalist private sector, has driven Nicaragua's standard of living below prerevolutionary levels.

Economic privation has badly eroded the Sandinistas' popular support. An independent public opinion poll taken last year by the Catholic University in Managua found that only 42% of respondents approved of Daniel Ortega's performance as president and only 28% identified with the Sandinista party. If the internal opposition could unify behind a single candidate and put forward a credible political program, it would stand an excellent chance of winning next February.

But thus far the opposition has proven utterly unable to take advantage of the public's disaffection with the Sandinistas. Only 9% of respondents identify with the opposition; the vast majority (63%) said they identified with no one. The opposition remains splintered in more than a dozen mini-parties. The return of various Contra leaders from exile will probably aggravate these divisions. The Contras, after all, bickered constantly, uniting only under orders from Washington.

Will the United States, so accustomed to directing every facet of the armed opposition, stand idly by while the civic opposition squanders an opportunity to drive the Sandinista from office by the ballot? Not likely. The Bush Administration will be sorely tempted to save the opposition from its own liabilities with large-scale covert assistance. In Nicaragua's depressed economy, a few million would weigh heavily in the electoral balance.

Covert involvement in foreign elections is a well-established technique in the CIA's repertoire. Moreover, covert aid has been flowing to Nicaragua's civil opposition for over a decade. Jimmy Carter initiated the program and Reagan expanded it until the recipients of CIA largess included the press, private sector, opposition political parties, trade unions and the Catholic Church. Expanding this aid as the election approaches will not seem like a radical new departure in policy. Nor is it likely to provoke much complaint from congressional Democrats, who, despite their opposition, to paramilitary aid for the Contras, never raised serious objections to aiding the civic opposition.

Yet a major CIA campaign to influence the Nicaraguan election has several major drawbacks. When it is disclosed, as it inevitably will be, the recipients of CIA aid will be branded as disloyal agents of a foreign power. No candidate's campaign could benefit from such a stigma.

Moreover, if the opposition appears to have a real chance of winning. Sandinista hard-liners will argue for halting the election process rather than risking defeat. If they can make a convincing case that the election is being distorted by U.S. interference, they are likely to prevail. That would destroy hopes for democracy in Nicaragua, demolish the Central American peace accords and probably lead to a resumption of the Contra war.

I we believe that the merit of free elections is to let people decide their own fate, covert foreign interference negates their raison d'etre. The Bush Administration justified its neutrality in the recent election in El Salvador by arguing that the integrity of the democratic process was more important than who won, even if the winner was not Washington's preferred candidate. That is a good maxim to abide by in Nicaragua as well.

UPDATING THE BOLAND AMENDMENT

Members of Congress who think clearly about democracy and who appreciate the cost to opposition parties overseas when they become fronts for policy makers in Washington will see the necessity of Rep. J. Joseph Moakley's proposed amendment to the 1990 Intelligence Authorization Bill.

The Moakley amendment seeks to ensure that the Bush administration will not use money from any source to interfere secretly in Nicaragua to spoil, tip or discredit the elections scheduled for February 1990. That prohibition, which is scheduled for House Intelligence Committee review next week, is the updated equivalent of the 1984 Boland Amendment, which called for an end to military intervention in Nicaragua.

The policy shift reflected in the Bush administration's compromise with Congress in April was superficial. The administration quit trying to get Congress to approve military contra aid. That shifted the focus to controlling the Nicaraguan elections through meddling, marketing and money. These tactics, though less bloody, are no more congruent with democracy, national sovereignty and lawful conduct between nations than the predominantly military phase of low-intensity war.

US law prohibits foreign countries from interfering in US elections. Any hint of an effort to affect US elections—even an aboveboard effort—is hugely controversial. Since Americans feel this way about their own elections, it might be asked by what right does the US government intervene anywhere else, whether in Britain, Israel . . . or Nicaragua.

Although there has never been a country-specific prohibition on meddling in elections, this one is warranted. Tipping the Nicaraguan elections is the best-case goal of administration policy. The fallback objective is to discredit the vote so that if the Nicaraguan government holds a fair election and wins, the results can be tarred.

Bending over to create reasonable conditions for the opposition, the Sandinistas modified the election laws to permit aboveboard contributions to the opposition so long as half the money goes to the Supreme Electoral Council for use in conducting the elections.

There is no honest basis for covert political assistance. US contributions must be above-board so that both American citizens and those of any foreign country understand what is going on. Otherwise, the "democracy" the contributions ostensibly support is a fraud.

[From the Los Angeles Times, June 9, 1989]

HANDS OFF

Several members of Congress who remember vividly the irrational zeal with which the Reagan Administration tried to oust Nicaragua's Sandinista regime are pushing for a law to prohibit covert U.S. involvement in that country's elections next year. While President Bush has dealt with Nicaragua more calmly and reasonably than Reagan did, such a law is a good idea.

The United States has grown so accustomed to calling most of the shots for the Nicaraguan opposition, especially the Contras, that some U.S. officials may well be tempted to do the same during the electoral campaign leading up to the February voting. The former Contra paymasters in the Central Intelligence Agency, for example, are pressuring Contra leaders living in Miami to return to Nicaragua before the voting and meeting some resistance from those who prefer comfortable exile in Miami. It is possible that the CIA may want to intervene in the election if divisions among opposition parties make an easy Sandanista victory likely. There are more than 20 political parties campaigning against the Sandinistas, ranging from the far right to far left of the ruling party. Fourteen of those parties have pledged to work together in a united opposition bloc, but so far there is only scant evidence they will work together effectively.

Covert U.S. aid has been flowing to anti-Sandinista groups, quite apart from the Contras, for several years. Some reportedly has gone to labor unions, private business groups, the Roman Catholic Church and the opposition press. At first glance, continuing or expanding such aid may not seem a radical change in policy. But it will be doubly risky during a closely monitored election.

If the covert aid becomes public, as it probably would be given the history of such efforts, recipients of the aid would be discredited in the eyes of other Nicaraguans and branded by the Sandinistas as disloyal agents of the Colossus of the North. Worse, if the oposition were on the verge of victory when such aid was discovered, it would provide a perfect excuse for Sandinistas hardliners to halt the election process rather than risk defeat.

And some defeats for the Sandinistas are likely in the voting. Nicaragua's people are weary of the violence and turmoil they have endured since the Somoza dictatorship was overthrown 10 years ago, and they are particularly disillusioned with the mess the revolutionary government has made of their nation's economy. Many will express their frustration at the polls. But if the opposition is unable to get its act together well enough to take full advantage of this opportunity, it would be the height of arrogance for U.S. officials to think covert aid could somehow tip the balance against the government.

Existing U.S. law already provides for aid to be given openly to the electoral process in Nicaragua, and Congress has allocated $5 million for that purpose. If there is a need for any more aid, let it also be given publicly. But when Congress votes on the 1990 Intelligence Authorizations Bill in the next few weeks, it should amend it to bar the CIA and all other U.S. government agencies from spending money on covert election activities in Nicaragua.

NICARAGUAN TURNING POINT: HOW THE 1984 VOTE WAS SABOTAGED

(By Roy Gutman)

Nicaragua's elections of November 4, 1984, were a turning point not only in the post-Somoza history of Nicaragua but also in U.S policy. Of the many missed opportunities to achieve at least some of the stated U.S. goals in Nicaragua, perhaps none compared with this. Policy divisions in Washington all but assured an inconclusive contest.

"One of the biggest mistakes of all, maybe the biggest mistake, was the handling of the election," said a high-level U.S. diplomatic source. "The idea of the C.I.A. and White House staff was to avoid participation in the elections. The debate was over whether to go halfway or not." The State Department's planning for the elections, meanwhile, had gone into high gear following Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega's announcement on February 21, 1984, of the voting date.

In late March of that year, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State L. Craig Johnstone met Arturo Cruz Sr., the former Nicaraguan Ambassador to Washington, to discuss the elections. Over lunch at Germaine's, a Vietnamese restaurant in upper Georgetown, Johnstone asked Cruz if he would be interested in running for the presidency. "We had to be sure there would be a candidate," Johnstone said. "He was the one leader we thought they might be able to allow into an electoral process."

However, while the State Department supported Cruz's candidacy in hopes it would foster a deal in which the contras would "go away," members of the hard right—William Casey and Jeane Kirkpatrick at the Cabinet level, Oliver North and Constantine Menges on the National Security Council staff—believed the use of force was the only way to bring about democracy in Nicaragua and that the Sandinistas also had to go away, either through overthrow or removal. They supported Cruz in the expectation that he would not participate in the elections, thereby discrediting the vote. They regarded a U.S. negotiated deal with the Sandinistas as a sell-out.

For the U.S. hard-liners, the actual political situation in Nicaragua was irrelevant. They argued by syllogism. Communists never allow fair elections; the Sandinistas are Communists; for the opposition to participate in elections would legitimize Communist rule.

Although the conservatives kept a low profile, they were able to exercise substantial influence over events. Even Cruz was receiving Central Intelligence Agency funds by this time. "The other guys were able to run it by their complete penetration of the opposition," said a senior diplomat. "None of these people is independent any more."

The hard-liners worked to convince the internal Nicaraguan opposition to insist on election rules so comprehensive the Sandinistas would never accept them. Johnstone viewed these demands as "killers." President Reagan, as usual, did not choose between competing strategies or impose discipline on his subordinates but allowed the different power centers to pursue policy according to their interpretation of the goals.

In addition to the obstacles in his path at home, Johnstone faced a number of challenges in Managua. A major hitch was the divisiveness of the internal opposition, a central feature of Nicaraguan political culture that predated Sandinista rule. In an effort to gain cohesion, in 1982 the opposition formed an umbrella group, the Coordinadora Democrática, which tried to forge unity through making decisions by consensus. The group consisted of four political parties, two trade unions and representatives of six business organizations. The Coordinadora generated rhetoric and wish lists, but its cumbersome decision-making method lent itself to the tyranny of the minority of conservative businessmen, and it proved incapable of crafting a workable election strategy.

By early July, the Coordinadora had yet to choose a candidate. Under prodding by a visiting West German parliamentary delegation, a sort of rump Coordinadora consisting of two political figures, representing each end of the spectrum, got together and made the decision. They were Enrique Bolaños, a wealthy cotton grower and head of the Superior Council of Private Enterprise (COESP), and Azucena Ferrey, one of the more dynamic women in Nicaraguan politics, who headed the Social Christian Party. The selection process took place "in the darkness of a tunnel," Bolaños said. they wrote down five names: Arturo Cruz; Adolfo Calero; Ismael Reyes, head of the Nicaraguan Red Cross; Alfonso Robelo; and Eduardo Rivas Gasteazora, deputy leader of the Coordinadora. "I said, 'Number one is O.K. with COSEP,'" Bolanos recalled. "'Number two has his finger on the trigger, no good. Number four is the same as number two. Number five is very sick.' So numbers one and three were O.K. with us, in that order."

Ferrey flew to Washington and asked Cruz to run. It was July 11, and the Sandinistas had set a deadline of July 25 for the registration of candidates. Bolaños and Ferrey agreed that if Cruz was willing, he should be the candidate of the entire Coordinadora. He agreed.

Besides diverging from democratic practice, the procedure for choosing the Coordinadora candidate deprived the anointed candidate of a political base; by virtue of the timing, he had no way of creating one on returning to Nicaragua. Cruz was everyone's candidate and no one's candidate. Ferrey wanted him to run under any circumstance. Bolaños's view was close to that of conservatives in Washington—he could not foresee circumstances in which Cruz should run.

Cruz's main constituency was in Washington, and Washington was split. Johnstone clearly hoped Cruz could find his way clear to register. White House officials said they supported the goal, but their sincerity was quickly called into question. Constantine Menges at the N.S.C. played a double game. According to Cruz, Menges encouraged him to enter the contest. Behind the scenes, Menges was busy drafting rhetoric for Reagan that suggested the election would be a farce before Cruz had even tested the waters. In back-to-back speeches in mid-July, Reagan blasted Nicaragua as "a totalitarian jungle" and belittled the election as a "Soviet-style sham." The words had an immediate impact on the ground.

"Reagan's rhetoric produces the triumphalism of the hard-liners. It means you abandon strategy," said Bill Baez, a close associate of Cruz, who, as head of the leading organization of Nicaraguan cooperatives, was one of the representatives of COSEP in the Coordinadora. Cruz concurred. " As long as the recalcitrant opposition has a reading of things that the United States eventually will invade Nicaragua and kick the Sandinistas out and say, 'Here, now, we will pick a king,' we will not be able to articulate our own policy and really address the issues we have to as Nicaraguans."

Even before setting foot on Nicaraguan soil, Cruz had reason to be ambivalent. With U.S. counsel divided, he was on his own. On the eve of his departure, Cruz gave a long interview to Fred Francis, an NBC television reporter, in which he assessed his chances. As the crew packed up, Cruz approached Francis. "You know I'm really not going to run. You know that." Francis threw out the interview.

Meanwhile, in Washington, the struggle had intensified between Johnstone on the one side and Menges, North and Casey on the other. Johnstone had been working with staff to prepare a new list of demands without the maximalist "killers," while his adversaries worked to avert a moderating impact. North's role by this time extended well into the policy process. At one Restricted Interagency Group meeting, Johnstone sought approval for a concept to test Sandinista promises for a pluralistic political system. North was trying to block it. "At least Constantine believes in democracy," Johnstone snapped. "You don't."

Johnstone won agreement in Washington on a modified set of conditions for participation in the elections, which Cruz essentially adopted as his own. They were: freedom of the press; freedom of assembly; access to voter registration lists and election returns; international observation of the elections; security of voting places; freedom to campaign on military bases; and postponement of the elections to allow at least ninety days of campaigning. The demand for a national dialogue between the Sandinistas and the contras was dropped.

But the scale-back of demands only galvanized opponents in Washington and Managua. Calero withdrew his committment to back Cruz, and some U.S. officials urged the interal opposition to ignore the stated policy that Cruz should run if he obtained fair conditions. One such message came from the U.S. Ambassador to Costa Rica, Curtin Winsor Jr., a conservative businessman who was a political appointee and an outspoken proponent of overthrowing the Sandinistas. (Winsor once compared their rule to "an infected piece of meat" that attracts "insects.")

Winsor had known Bill Baez through business contacts for many years. At breakfast in San Jose on August 29, Winsor told Baez he had received word that the White House did not want the opposition to participate. "I think you should be aware of the problems and situation," Baez quoted Winsor as having said. "There is a division in the government. Some people in the State Department are saying you should participate. I represent the views of the White House. My opinion is that it is not appropriate to go."

Johnstone learned of the Baez-Winsor conversation from embassy reporting and flew to San Jose for a dinner with the Ambassador. "I don't know who you're getting your instructions from, but it is no known organ of government," he told Winsor. Once again, Menges was at work. He was certain that the Sandinistas would not hold a fair election and had said as much to Winsor. A further obstacle on the ground was C.I.A. operatives in Central America. "I know the C.I.A. was all against it. They were transmitting this loudly and clearly," said a source familiar with the thinking of Alfonso Robelo, the opposition leader who at the time was in San Jose. Cruz's son, Arturo Jr., who was frequently in the Costa Rican capital, concurred. "The State Department behaved in a very civilized way. But the sergeants of 'the Company' were behaving differently in the field. They were talking to their clients and saying 'Cruz is going to sell you out.' " And a Congressional source stated that Bolanos had at least two meetings with the C.I.A. station chief in San Jose at about this time.

The C.I.A. signals fortified the hard-liners in the Coordinadora in Managua, but also led to a profound misunderstanding. Those in Managua agreed with their counterparts in Washington on the intermediate goal of discrediting the elections but not on who should be the beneficiaries. The hard-liners in Managua hoped to destroy the legitimacy of the elections on the assumption that they themselves would profit. Those in Washington did it in hopes that the contras and the external military solution would benefit.

The crunch came in Rio de Janeiro on September 30, when Bayardo Arce, in charge of political affairs for the Sandinista Party, met with Cruz in the hotel suite of Carlos Andrés Pérez, a senior Socialist International official and former President of Venezuela.

These were the first real negotiations between the Sandinistas and the opposition since the election had been announced. It was the last best chance to resolve the Nicaragua dispute through political means. It was the decisive moment for U.S. policy. Johnstone said that, of all the efforts to reach a peaceful settlement, "that one came the closest."

The importance of the talks is undisputed. Exactly what went wrong in Rio is very much disputed. Nearly two years later, even Pérez, who chaired the talks, said he had not figured it out.

One reason is that both sides were engaged in gamesmanship. For Cruz, having registered so late in the election process, it was essential to gain a delay in the vote to avoid being accused by his associates of a sell-out. For the hardliners in the Coordinadora, who wanted to discredit the process, it was essential to block Cruz from reaching a deal. The Sandinistas wanted to avoid a delay but also to avoid blame for the collapse of the mediation.

Pérez urged Arce to accept condtions within which Cruz could participate. He began with the nine demands that the Coordinadora had presented to the Sandinistas, separating out statements that would be regarded as ultimatums. The meeting lasted three and a half hours.

Arce and Cruz met again the following morning, Monday, October 1, this time in the presence of Hans-Jürgen Wischnewski, a close associate of Socialist International president Willy Brandt and several West German Social Democrats. Cruz was accompanied by vice-president candidate Adán Fletes and Coordinadora president Luís Rivas Leiva. Hanging over the talks was the latest deadline for registration, running out at midnight.

In one hour, the negotiations made remarkable progress. The Coordinadora presented its demands. In return for satisfaction, they promised to participate in the election if the date was postponed to February 24, 1985. Arce readily agreed to all the guarantees.

Cruz and his two colleagues asked for a break to confer with Managua. At the other end, opposition leaders gathered around a speaker phone in the offices of the Social Christian Party. Bolaños kept a low profile; the spokesman was Daniel Bonilla, an industrialist associate of Bolaños and perhaps the hardest of the hard-liners. And he was deeply skeptical. Bonilla was an ideologue. "Communists don't convene an election unless they have all the means to win it," he said in an interview more than a year later. "We don't believe in the elections. We would have lost. And there is nothing worse in politics than losing. That is not the worst thing . . . It is that we would have made the Sandinistas win with our presence. My God, do you know what that means?"

After lunch the three negotiators denounced Arce's concessions as demagogy, demanded additional access to the official news media as condition and required that the Sandinistas immediately agree to February 24 or some other postponement of election day. Then Arce dropped a bombshell. If the Coordinadora registered before midnight, the contest would be delayed until January 13, 1985, provided there was an effective cease-fire with the contras. Arce insisted that the Coordinadora declare a cease-fire by October 10 and that contra forces led by Adolfo Carlero and Edén Pastora withdraw from Nicaragua by October 25. On the other hand, if the Sandinistas did not live up to their part of the bargain, the opposition could withdraw its registration any time up to October 25. The atmosphere in the room was suddenly electrified.

Cruz called Managua again. "My advice to you is you go and register," Cruz told his associates. "Do it, register, because we have all the necessary safeguards not to be trapped. Do something really meaningful, and we will really grow in stature."

"Arturo," Bonilla intoned, "whatever is going to be done is going to be done here. That is what the Coordinadora wants." Bonilla objected that the Coordinadora could not represent both the armed and the civic resistance. "I cannot have one single man representing the whole, because that would get the civic in bed with the military."

In Washington, Johnstone closely monitored the progress. He was in frequent touch with Baez, who was in Washington. Johnstone asked to be kept informed but felt Cruz should proceed. He also was in touch with Socialist International officials. "The United States government asked the S.I. to do its utmost to help the Coordinadora reach a deal," said a close associate of Brandt.

Working along with Johnstone was a senior C.I.A. official, Johnstone said each called contacts in the opposition and the Nicaraguan Democratic Force (F.D.N.) contras to keep them from backing away in the midst of the negotiations. The F.D.N. "were extremely concerned about not being undercut by third-force representation in elections that would legitimize the Sandinista regime," Johnstone said. He asserts that the C.I.A. supported his plan, "I was working out of the same room as the C.I.A. guy and unless some other part of the Agency was trying to undermine him, we were giving the same advice: Take part if you can get fair terms."

Despite the cold reception, Cruz thought he saw a way to bridge the differences. "This is the most exhilarating day in my whole life," he said that night. But the deadline passed without action.

A dejected looking Pérez received Wischnewski the next morning and pronounced the negotiations a failure. Actually, he had another card up his sleeve. Without telling his S.I. colleagues, Pérez had asked Arce to prepare a typed summary of the points of agreement, including the election postponement on condition of a cease-fire. Unannounced, as aide to Arce appeared with the document.

Pérez gave a copy to Cruz, who promised to return with a response at 4 P.M. Cruz checked with Managua, where he received more discouragement. Bonilla reiterated that the decision must be made in Managua.

Now Cruz dropped his own bombshell. Appearing at the appointed time, he went through Arce's paper point by point, wrote changes of wording, then agreed to it. He conditioned his signature upon a "vote of confidence" by the Coordinadora in Managua. If they did not back him, he would withdraw as their candidate. Arce reacted angrily. "In the beginning, they said a big fat no," Pérez said of Arce. "They said it was a joke to discredit the electoral process by doing this."

"I represent the Sandinista Front, and although only five comandantes are now in Nicaragua, I have committed myself here and now," Arce said. "But I have received no comparable pledge from Arturo Cruz; otherwise, the Coordinadora could have registered before the deadline. Either you sign now," he insisted, "or I don't sign".

Pérez stressed the significance of Cruz's personal commitment to return to Managua and put his name on the ballot, and for a brief moment Arce seemed to relent.

It was about 5 P.M. "For twenty minutes we had an agreement," said Thorvald Stoltenberg (now Norway's Minister of Foreign Affairs), who had joined the talks for the S.I. The two sides shook hands. "They were very, very pleased. We were starting to drink cognac." Stoltenberg suggested they type out the contents of the accord. Cruz dictated the final wording to Pérez. "Luis Rivas Leiva, as president of the Coordinadora, accompanied by Adán Fletes and Arturo Cruz, also agrees, both parties ad referendum to their respective organizations." Stoltenberg took a call from Dagbladet, a Norwegian newspaper, and broke the story to the press. An hour later, he had to phone the newspaper back and say the negotiations had fallen through.

Arce suddenly stood up, shook hands with the West German S.I. participants and bolted without further explanation. Cruz thought the signal had been given in New York City by Daniel Ortega. In an interview that morning in The Washington Post, Ortega had declared that the election would take place on schedule. "We were flexible on the date until a few days ago," he said. "The elections are going to take place on November 4. At this point we cannot continue to play with the date."

"Extending the campaign was never a position for us," said Sergio Ramírez, the campaign manager and candidate for vice president of the ruling party. "We always considered that it would be damaging for us because people would not be confident about our own elections if we did." Arce had made the offer in the knowledge it was unacceptable. Moreover, according to Ramírez, "Cruz never had authority over [contra military commander Enrique] Bermúdez and Calero . . . and the Coordinadora didn't have that authority."

Cruz said he had known that the Sandinistas were bluffing. "We had to be forthcoming and call their bluff, or to reach a real agreement if it was possible."

Arce went before a press conference. "Yesterday at midnight they lost their last chance to register. There is no longer any question. The elections will be held in Nicaragua on November 4."

Pérez said that information he received subsequent to the Rio meeting gave the impression that "the C.I.A. had given instructions, had put pressures [on representatives of the Coordinadora] against Cruz's candidacy, and therefore it wasn't accepted. They just didn't want someone with the prestige of Cruz to enter the elections, because it would validate them. They wanted to demonstrate there was no freedom of elections in Nicaragua." Pérez felt the "game" of the Coordinadora had been "simply to take away legitimacy."

On October 11, more than a week after the breakup in Rio, the Coordinadora changed its mind and backed the election accord. Stoltenberg of the S.I. flew to Managua, followed by Brandt, to ask for a postponement of the vote. But the Sandinistas refused. "The case was lost in Rio," Stoltenberg said.

Pérez said he never expected that the Sandinistas would let go of power, but thought the elections might have put Nicaragua on a course similar to Mexico: with left-of-center, semidemocratic, broadly based one-party rule. It was "not a solution to the problem, but it certainly was an opening." Cruz agreed, and his will be the judgment that lasts. "In hindsight," said Cruz, "we should have gone, with or without conditions."●

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join in introducing this legislation to prohibit the CIA or any other agency of the U.S. Government from secretly trying to interfere with the election campaign in Nicaragua.

This is a sensitive subject, but I believe it is too serious an issue for the Congress to ignore.

I don't need to review the history of United States interference in the domestic affairs of Nicaragua. After so many years of bungled attempts by the U.S. Government to dictate events in that tiny, impoverished country of 3 million people, it is time for us to let the Nicaraguans attempt to resolve their own differences without more interference from us.

This legislation should be supported by every Member of this body. What does our country stand for if not the open and free expression of democracy, unimpeded by secret meddling from outside?

Buying elections is completely repugnant to our best democratic traditions. Nothing in this bill prevents the United States or any other entity from engaging in activities that are public and within the law. In fact, the Congress recently approved a grant of $1.5 million to the National Endowment for Democracy, to support the democratic process in Nicaragua. Those funds will be used to help political education and preparations for the election, but not to finance political parties. This is done openly and for all to see.

Anyone who stops to think about the implications of the alternative will support this bill. It would be hard to think of anything that would play more directly into the Sandinistas' hands than for it to be revealed that the United States interfered covertly in the Nicaraguan election. Most Central Americans respect the democracy our country stands for, but if there is one thing they hate and resent, it is the CIA's heavyhanded meddling in their affairs. How would we feel if we discovered that the Soviets or the Libyans or some other country was secretly bankrolling a political party in our Presidential election? We would react with outrage and we would be right. A sure way to guarantee a Sandinista victory in February is for President Ortega to be able to say the CIA is supporting the opposition, and to be backed up by an investigative press.

I urge all Senators to join us in preventing any plan the administration might propose for covert involvement in the Nicaraguan election.●

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 1575. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide for a voluntary system of spending limits and partial public financing of Senate general election campaigns, to limit contributions by multicandidate political committees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SENATE ELECTION REFORM ACT

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which addresses some of the problems of our current campaign finance system. The events of the past several months have heightened the already unfavorable public perception of Congress an an institution. Campaign expenditures and their dramatic rise have contributed to this negative image.

In 1976, the average amount spent on a successful Senate race was $609,100. In 1988, successful Senators spent an average of $3.7 million on their campaigns, an increase of more than 500 percent. In 1986, the South Dakota senatorial candidates spend almost $7 million in a State with a population of barely over 700,000, which breaks down to over $13 per voting age person. The botton line is that too much money is being spent on elections, and too much time is being spent by the candidates raising that money.

The problem of excessive spending continues to worsen. We have been debating campaign reform bills for several years and making no headway. Our system has been virually unaltered for over a decade and half. There are serious flaws in the present campaing finance system; the time for meaningless rhetoric has passed, and the time for real reform is now. The public is quickly losing confidence in their elected representatives. We must act quickly to restore our credibility in the eyes of the American people.

I am an original cosponsor of S. 137, the Boren-Mitchell campaign finance reform bill, a proposal for election reform that attacks many of the problems in the system. That bill contains many promising proposals, and I have used it as a blueprint for my bill. All of us who believe strongly in the principle of campaign finance reform and spending limits owe a debt of gratitude to Senator BOREN for the leadership of this issue. I believe I have made significant additions and improvements to S. 137. I have attempted to both expand and tighten provisions in S. 137 in the bill I am introducing today.

It is clear that the key of reforming our electoral process is placing limits on the amount candidates can spend. Currently Members must spend so much of their time raising money for multimillion-dollar campaigns that they have insufficient time to be effective legislators. Spending limits are necessary to put an end to the race to see who can raise the most money. It is useless to talk of campaign finance reform if spending limits are not included—there is no reform without spending limits.

The Supreme Court ruling in Buckley versus Valeo prohibits mandatory spending limits unless tied to a voluntary package of incentives. In order to stay within these parameters, in my bill candidates who agree to comply with the spending limits are eligible for benefits not available to candidates who spend above the limits. My bill is patterned after the spending limits in the Boren-Mitchell bill, which are based on a formula using a State's voting age population [VAP] with a floor of $950,000 for the smallest States and a ceiling of $5.5 million for the largest. While the Boren-Mitchell bill sets primary spending at 67 percent of general election limits, I further cut the primary sending limit from 67 percent of the general election amount to 50 percent of the general election limit.

The following is an example of how this system would work. In my State of Arizona the voting age population is 2.514 million. Under my bill an Arizona Senate candidate would have a general election limit of $1.154 million, and a primary election limit of $577,000. This would result in a cycle limit of $1,731 million.

In addition to the amount of money that must be raised, the amount of time Members must spend campaigning is seriously infringing on their ability to effectively represent their constituencies. Additionally, I frankly believe that the American public is tired of nonstop elections. My bill would limit participating candidates from engaging in certain campaign activities to a period beginning 6 months before the primary election. Activities that would be prohibited until 6 months before the primary election are media advertising, direct mail, and phone banks unless there is a direct association with fundraising or obtaining volunteers.

The role of Political Action Committees [PAC] has been at the center of the campaign finance reform debate. I strongly believe that PAC's are a legitimate part of our democratic system—they allow individual small contributors to join together to create a stronger voice for themselves. However, PAC's have come to play a disproportionate role in the campaign finance arena. In 1988, 33.8 percent of House and Senate candidates' receipts came from PAC's, up from 15.7 percent in 1974. While PAC's themselves are not inherently bad, we must take precautions to ensure that they do not overshadow the influence of average citizens in the electoral process.

Under my bill, all candidates would be subject to an overall limit on PAC contributions equal to 10 percent of the cycle limit. Again using Arizona as an example, with a total cycle limit of $1.731 million, a candidate would be able to receive PAC contributions of up to $173,100. House Members would have an aggregate limit of $100,000. This limit is applicable regardless of whether the candidate chooses to participate in the voluntary spending package. My bill would also limit individual PAC contributions to $2,500 per election, or $5,000 per cycle, rather than the current $5,000 election and $10,000 cycle limit.

It has been argued that incumbents have an unfair advantage over challengers. One of those advantages is clearly the congressional franking privilege and the incumbents' exploitation of it. The number of mass mailings swells dramatically in election years. Current law allows incumbents to continue to use the frank for mass mailings of more than 500 pieces up to 60 days before an election. Furthermore, town meeting notices and opinion surveys are not counted as mass mail and may continue to be sent out under the frank until the time of the election. In order to ensure that the frank is not misused, my bill would prohibit its use for mass mailings of over 250 pieces for a period beginning 6 months before the primary through the general election. My definition of mass mail would include newsletters, town meeting notices, and opinion surveys.

My bill would also eliminate member PAC's. Member PAC's have proliferated in the last several years to the point where they are clearly out of control. These PAC's create a negative public perception and contribute to a growing sense that Congress is run by money. The public perception is that member PAC's exert undue influence on Members and basically help Members buy their leadership posts.

Essentially, member PAC's defy the original purpose of PAC's—for small individual contributors to band together to create a stronger voice for themselves. Because the majority of financing for member PAC's comes from other regular PAC's, the original contributors have no control over where their money is spent.

Member PAC's are also used as a means of skirting the $5,000 contribution limit. Currently, PAC's may contribute $5,000 to a candidate's personal campaign as well as another $5,000 to that candidate's PAC. Oftentimes money accumulated in a member PAC is used to further a candidate's quest for the Presidency. In addition to banning Member PAC's, my bill would prohibit the transfer of funds from a candidate's campaign fund to another candidate's campaign fund for Federal, State, or local office.

It is clear that changes need to be made in many areas of the system. The costs of running for office are increasing at an alarming rate. I sincerely hope we will consider legislation that seeks to eliminate some of the existing problems of our campaign finance system. We have no time to waste—we must act now. I vow to continue my fight for reform—to begin to restore public confidence in our Nation's electoral process.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1575

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Senate Election Reform Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") is amended by adding at the end the following new title:

"TITLE V—SPENDING LIMITS AND PUBLIC FINANCING FOR SENATE GENERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 501. For purposes of this title—

"(1) unless otherwise provided in this title the definitions set forth in section 301 of this Act apply to this title;

"(2) the term 'authorized committee' means, with respect to any candidate for election to the office of United States Senator, any political committee which is authorized in writing by such candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures on behalf of such candidate to further the election of such candidate;

"(3) the term 'candidate' means an individual who is seeking nomination for election, or election to the office of United States Senator and such individual shall be deemed to seek nomination for election, or election, if such individual meets the requirements of subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 301(2);

"(4) the term 'election cycle' means—

"(A) in the case of a candidate or the authorized committee of a candidate, the term beginning on the day after the date of the last previous general election for such office or seat which such candidate seeks and ending on the date of the next election; or

"(B) for all other persons, the term beginning on the first day following the date of the last general election and ending on the date of the next election;

"(5) the term 'eligible candidate' means a candidate who is eligible under section 502 to receive benefits under this title;

"(6) the term 'general election' means any election which will directly result in the election of a person to the office of United States Senator, but does not include an open primary election;

"(7) the term 'general election period' means the period beginning on the day after the date of the primary or runoff election, whichever is later, and ending on the date of such general election or the date on which the candidate withdraws from the campaign or otherwise ceases actively to seek election, whichever occurs first;

"(8) the term 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister or half-sister of the candidate, and the spouse of any such person, and any child, stepchild, parent, grandparent, brother, half-brother, sister or half-sister of the candidate's spouse and the spouse of any such person.

"(9) the term 'major party' has the meaning given such term in section 9002(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act, provided that a candidate in a general election held by a State to elect a Senator subsequent to an open primary in which all the candidates for the office participated and which resulted in the candidate and at least one other candidate qualifying for the ballot in the general election, shall be treated as a candidate of a major party for purposes of this title;

"(10) the term 'primary election' means any election which may result in the selection of a candidate for the ballot of the general election;

"(11) the term 'primary election period' means the period beginning on the day following the date of the last Senate election for the same Senate office and ending on the date of the first primary election for such office following such last Senate election for such office, or the date on which the candidate withdraws from the election or otherwise ceases actively to seek election, whichever occurs first;

"(12) the term 'runoff election' means the election held after a primary election, and prescribed by applicable State law as the means for deciding which candidate(s) should be certified as nominee(s) for the Federal office sought;

"(13) the term 'runoff election period' means the period beginning on the day following the date of the last primary election for such office and ending on the date of the runoff election for such office;

"(14) the term 'Senate Fund' means the Senate Election Campaign Fund maintained pursuant to section 506 by the Secretary of the Treasury in the Presidential Campaign Fund established by section 9006(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; and

"(15) the term 'voting age population' means the resident population, 18 years of age or older, as certified pursuant to section 315(e).

"ELIGIBILITY TO RECEIVE BENEFITS

"SEC. 502. (a) To be eligible to receive benefits under this title, in addition to the requirements of subsection (d), a candidate shall, within 7 days after qualifying for the general election ballot under the law of the State involved or, if such candidate is a candidate in a State which has a primary election to qualify for such ballot after September 1, within 7 days after the date such candidate wins in such primary, whichever occurs first—

"(1) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that during the period beginning on January 1 of the calendar year preceding the year of the general election involved, or in the case of a special election for the office of United States Senator, during the period beginning on the day on which the vacancy occurs in that office, and ending on the day of such certification, such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate have received contributions in an amount at least equal to 10 cents multiplied by the voting age population of such State or $150,000, whichever is greater, up to an amount that does not exceed $650,000;

"(2) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that all contributions received for purposes of paragraph (1) have come from individuals and that no contribution from such individual, when added to all contributions to or for the benefit of such candidate from such individual, was taken into account to the extent such amount exceeds $250;

"(3) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate have not expended for the primary election, more than the amount equal to 50 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b), or more than $2,750,000, whichever amount is less;

"(4) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate have not expended for any runoff election, more than an amount equal to 20 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b);

"(5) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that 75 per centum of the aggregate amount of contributions received for purposes of paragraph (1) have come from individuals residing in such candidate's State;

"(6) certify to the Commission under penalty of perjury that at least one other candidate has qualified for the same general election ballot under the law of the State involved;

"(7) agree in writing that such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate—

"(A) have not made and will not make expenditures which exceed the limitations established in section 503, except as otherwise provided in this title;

"(B) will not accept any contributions in violation of section 315;

"(C) will not accept any contribution for the general election involved except to the extent that such contribution is necessary to defray expenditures for such election that in the aggregate do not exceed the amount of the limitation on expenditures established in section 503(b), unless otherwise provided in this Act;

"(D) will deposit all payments received under this section in an account insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation from which funds may be withdrawn by check or similar means of payment to third parties;

"(E) will furnish campaign records, evidence of contributions and other appropriate information to the Commission;

"(F) will cooperate in the case of any audit and examination by the Commission under section 507; and

"(G) will not make any expenditures until after the date 6 months before the date of the primary election involved, or use such payments for expenses incurred prior to such date for media advertising, direct mail and phone banks unless such expenses for mail or phones are directly related to raising funds or recruiting volunteers for such election;

"(8) agree in writing that the candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate will not use a broadcast station, pursuant to section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934, for a political advertisement or broadcast communication on a television broadcast station until the date 6 months before the date of the primary election in which such candidate is involved; and

"(9) notify the Commission of their intention to make use of the benefits provided for in section 504.

"(b) For the purposes of subsection (a)(1) and paragraph (2)(B) of section 504(a), in determining the amount of contributions received by a candidate and the candidate's authorized committees—

"(1) no contribution other than a gift of money made by a written instrument which identifies the person making the contribution shall be taken into account;

"(2) no contribution made through an intermediary or conduit referred to in section 315(a)(8) shall be taken into account;

"(3) no contribution received from any person other than an individual shall be taken into account, and no contribution received from an individual shall be taken into account to the extent such contribution exceeds $250 when added to the total amount of all other contributions made by such individual to or for the benefit of such candidate beginning on the applicable date specified in paragraph (4) of this subsection; and

"(4) no contribution received prior to January 1 of the calendar year preceding the year in which the general election involved or received after the date on which the general election involved is held shall be taken into account, and in the case of a special election, no contribution received prior to the date on which the vacancy occurs in that office or received after the date on which the general election involved is held shall be taken into account.

"(c) The threshold amounts in subsection (a)(1) shall be increased at the beginning of each calendar year based on the increase in the price index as determined under section 315(c), except that for purposes of determining such increase, the term 'base period', as used in such section shall mean the calendar year of the first election after the date of enactment of the Senate Election Reform Act of 1989.

"(d) In addition to the requirements of subsection (a), to be eligible to receive benefits under this title a candidate, on the day such candidate files as a candidate for the primary election, shall file with the Commission a declaration of whether or not—

"(1) such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate intend to make expenditures, for the primary election, more than an amount equal to 50 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b), or more than $2,750,000, whichever amount is less;

"(2) such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate intend to make expenditures, for any runoff election, more than an amount equal to 20 percent of the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b); and

"(3) such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate intend to make expenditures, for the general election, more than an amount equal to the general election spending limit applicable to such candidate pursuant to section 503(b).

"LIMITATIONS ON EXPENDITURES

"SEC. 503. (a) No candidate who is entitled to a benefit in a general election under this title shall make expenditures from the personal funds of such candidate, or the funds of any member of the immediate family of such candidate, or incur personal loans in connection with such candidate's campaign for the Senate, aggregating in excess of $100,000, during the election cycle.

"(b)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, no candidate who is entitled to a benefit for use in a general election under this title shall make expenditures for such general election which in the aggregate exceed $400,000, plus—

"(A) in States having a voting age population of 4 million or less, 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population; or

"(B) in States having a voting age population over 4 million, 30 cents multiplied by 4 million, plus 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million; except that the amount of the limitation under this subsection, in the case of any candidate, shall not be less than $950,000, nor more than $5,500,000.

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), in any State with no more than one transmitter for a commercial Very High Frequency (VHF) television station licensed to operate in that State, no candidate in such State who receives a benefit for use in a general election under this title shall make expenditures for such general election which in the aggregate exceed the higher of—

"(A) $950,000; or

"(B) $400,000 plus 45 cents multiplied by the voting age population of 4 million or less, plus 40 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million, up to an amount not exceeding $5,500,000.

"(c) The limitations on expenditures in subsections (b), (d), and (e) shall be subject to the provisions of subsections (b) and (c) of section 504.

"(d) No candidate who is otherwise eligible to receive benefits for a general election under this title may receive any such benefits if such candidate spends for the primary election, more than the amount equal to 50 percent of the limitation on expenditures for the general election as determined under subsection (b), or more than $2,750,000, whichever amount is less.

"(e) No candidate who is otherwise eligible to receive benefits for a general election under this title may receive any such benefits if such candidate spends for a runoff election, if any, more than an amount which in the aggregate exceeds 20 percent of the maximum amount of the limitation applicable to such candidate as determined under subsection (b).

"(f)(1) For purposes of this section, the amounts set forth in subsections (b), (d), and (e) of this section shall be increased at the beginning of each calendar year based on the increase in the price index as determined under section 315(c), except that for purposes of determining such increase, the term 'base period', as used in section 315(c), means the calendar year of the first election after the date of enactment of the Senatorial Election Campaign Act of 1989.

"(2) The limitation set forth in subsection (b) shall not apply to expenditures by a candidate or a candidate's authorized committees from a compliance fund established to defray the costs of legal and accounting services provided solely to insure compliance with this Act; provided however that—

"(A) such fund contains only contributions (including contributions received in excess of any amount necessary to defray qualified campaign expenditures pursuant to section 313) received in accordance with the limitations, prohibitions, and reporting requirements of this Act;

"(B) the aggregate total amount of contributions to, and expenditures from, such fund do not exceed 10 percent of the limitation on expenditures for the general election as determined under subsection (b); and

"(C) no transfers may be made from such fund to any other accounts of the candidate's authorized committees, except that the fund may receive transfers from such other accounts at any time.

In the event that, subsequent to any general election, a candidate determines that the costs of necessary and continuing legal and accounting services require contributions to and expenditures from the fund in excess of the limitations of this paragraph, the candidate may petition the Commission for a waiver of such limitations up to any additional amounts as the Commission may authorize in connection with such waiver. Any waiver, or denial of a waiver, by the Commission under this paragraph shall be subject to judicial review under section 508. Any money remaining in such fund when the candidate decides to terminate or dissolve such fund, shall be—

"(i) contributed to the United States Treasury to reduce the budget deficit, or

"(ii) transferred to a fund of a subsequent campaign of that candidate.

"(g) If, during the primary and runoff period portion of the two-year election cycle preceding the candidate's general election, independent expenditures by any person or persons aggregating an amount in excess of $10,000 are made, or are obligated to be made, in opposition to a candidate or for the opponent of such candidate, the limitations provided in subsections (d) and (e), as they apply to such candidate, shall be increased for that primary or runoff election in an amount equal to the amount of such expenditures made during the period covered by such election.

"(h) No candidate who receives a benefit under this title for use in a general election campaign, shall receive any such benefits if such candidate makes any expenditure before the date 6 months before the date of the primary election in which such candidate is involved.

"(i) No candidate who receives any benefit pursuant to the provisions of this title shall make any expenditure, directly or indirectly, for any political advertisement or broadcast communication on a television broadcast until after the date 6 months before the date of the primary election in which such candidate is involved.

"ENTITLEMENT OF ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES TO BENEFITS

"SEC. 504. (a) Except as otherwise provided in section 506(c)—

"(1) all eligible candidates shall be entitled to—

"(A) the broadcast media rates provided under subsections (b) and (d)(3) of section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934;

"(B) mailing rates provided in section 3629 of title 39 of the United States Code; and

"(C) payments under section 506 equal to the aggregate total amount of independent expenditures made or obligated to be made, in the general election involved, by any person in opposition to, or on behalf of an opponent of such eligible candidate, as such expenditures are reported by such person or determined by the Commission under subsection (f) of section 304;

"(2) if any candidate in the same general election not eligible to receive funds under this title either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) for such election—

"(A) an eligible candidate who is a major party candidate shall be entitled to receive a payment under section 506 in an amount equal to—

"(i) two-thirds of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) with regard to such candidate when a candidate in the same election not eligible to receive funds under this title either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed an amount equal to 100 percent of such limitation determined under section 503(b); and

"(ii) one-third of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) with regard to such candidate when a candidate in the same election not eligible to receive funds under this title either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed an amount equal to 133⅓ percent of such limitation determined under section 503(b); or

"(B) an eligible candidate who is not a major party candidate shall be entitled to matching payments under section 506, equal to the amount of each contribution received by such eligible candidate and the candidate's authorized committees, provided that in determining the amount of each such contribution—

"(i) the provisions of section 502(b) shall apply; and

"(ii) contributions required to be raised under section 502(a)(1) shall not be eligible to be matched; and the total amount of payments to which a candidate is entitled under this subparagraph shall not exceed 50 percent of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) applicable to such candidate.

"(b) A candidate who receives payments under paragraph (1)(C) or (2) of subsection (a) may spend such funds to defray expenditures in the general election without regard to the provisions of section 503(b).

"(c)(1) A candidate who receives benefits under this section may make expenditures for the general election without regard to the provisions of subparagraph (A) of section 502(a)(7) or subsection (a) or (b) of section 503 if and when any candidate in the same general election not eligible to receive payments under this section either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed an amount equal to 133⅓ percent of the expenditure limit applicable to such candidate under section 503(b) for such election.

"(2) A candidate who receives benefits under this section may receive contributions for the general election without regard to the provisions of subparagraph (C) of section 502(a)(7) if any major party candidate in the same general election is not eligible to receive benefits under this section, or if and when any other candidate in the same general election who is not eligible to receive benefits under this section raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed an amount equal to 75 percent of the amount of the expenditure limit applicable to such candidate under section 503(b) for such election.

"(d) Benefits received by a candidate under this section shall be used to defray expenditures incurred with respect to the general election period for such candidate. Such benefits shall not be used (1) to make any payments, directly or indirectly, to such candidate or to any member of the immediate family of such candidate, (2) to make any expenditure other than expenditures to further the general election of such candidate, (3) to make any expenditures which constitute a violation of any law of the United States or of the State in which the expenditure is made, or (4) to repay any loan to any person except to the extent the proceeds of such loan were used to further the general election of such candidate.

"CERTIFICATION BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 505. (a) No later than 48 hours after an eligible candidate files a request with the Commission to receive benefits under section 506 the Commission shall certify such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of the amount to which such candidate is entitled, unless the provisions of section 506(c) apply. Such request shall contain—

"(1) such information and be made in accordance with such procedures, as the Commission may provide by regulation; and

"(2) a verification signed by the candidate and the treasurer of the principal campaign committee of such candidate stating that the information furnished in support of the request, to the best of their knowledge, is correct and fully satisfies the requirements of this title.

"(b) Certifications by the Commission under subsection (a) and all determinations made by the Commission under this title, shall be final and conclusive, except to the extent that they are subject to examination and audit by the Commission under section 507 and judicial review under section 508.

"ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND; PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE CANDIDATES

"SEC. 506. (a)(1) The Secretary shall maintain in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund (hereafter referred to as the 'Fund') established by section 9006(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, in addition to any other accounts maintained under such section, a separate account to be known as the 'Senate Fund'. The Secretary shall deposit into the Senate Fund, for use by candidates eligible to receive payments under this title, the amounts available after the Secretary determines that the amounts in the Fund, plus the amounts of revenue the Secretary projects will accrue to the Fund during the remainder of the period ending on December 31 of the year of the next Presidential election, equal 110 percent of the amount the Secretary projects will be necessary for payments under subtitle H of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 during such remainder of such period. The monies designated for the Senate Fund shall remain available without fiscal year limitation.

"(2) On May 15 of each year following the year during which a regularly scheduled biennial Senate election has occurred, the Secretary shall determine the total amount in the Senate Fund, and evaluate if such amount, plus the amount of revenue it projects will accrue to the Senate Fund (based on the computation made by the Secretary with respect to the Fund, as provided in paragraph (1)) during the period beginning on such date and ending on December 31 of the year of the next regularly scheduled biennial election, exceeds 110 percent of the total estimated expenditures of the Senate Fund during such period. If the Secretary determines that an excess amount exists, the Secretary shall transfer such excess to the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

"(b) Upon receipt of a certification from the Commission under section 505, the Secretary shall promptly pay to the candidate involved in the certification, out of the Senate Fund, the amount certified by the Commission.

"(c)(1) If at the time of a certification by the Commission under section 505 for payment to an eligible candidate, the Secretary determines that the monies in the Senate Fund are not, or may not be, sufficient to satisfy the full entitlement of all such eligible candidates, the Secretary shall withhold from such payment such amount as he determines to be necessary to assure that an eligible candidate will receive a pro rata share of such candidate's full entitlement. Amounts so withheld shall be paid when the Secretary determines that there are sufficient monies in the Senate Fund to pay such amounts, or portions thereof, to all eligible candidates from whom amounts have been withheld, but, if there are not sufficient monies in the Senate Fund to satisfy the full entitlement of an eligible candidate, the amounts so withheld shall be paid in such manner that each eligible candidate receives his or her pro rata share of his or her full entitlement. The Secretary shall notify the Commission and each eligible candidate by registered mail of the reduction in the amount to which that candidate is entitled under section 505.

"(2) If the provisions of this subsection result in a reduction in the amount to which an eligible candidate is entitled under section 505 and payments have been made under this section in excess of the amount to which such candidate is entitled, such candidate is liable for repayment to the Fund of the excess under procedures the Commission shall prescribe by regulation.

"EXAMINATION AND AUDITS; REPAYMENTS

"SEC. 507. (a)(1) After each general election, the Commission shall conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of 10 per centum of the eligible candidates of each major party and 10 per centum of all other eligible candidates, as designated by the Commission through the use of an appropriate statistical method of random selection to determine, among other things, whether such candidates have complied with the expenditure limits and other conditions of eligibility and requirements of this title.

"(2) After each special election, the Commission shall conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of each eligible candidate in such election to determine whether such candidates have complied with the expenditure limits and other conditions of eligibility and requirements under this title.

"(3) The Commission may conduct an examination and audit of the campaign accounts of any eligible candidate in a general election if the Commission, by an affirmative vote of four members, determines that there exists reason to believe that such candidate has violated any provision of this title.

"(b) If the Commission determines that any portion of the payments made to a candidate under this title was in excess of the aggregate payments to which such candidate was entitled, the Commission shall so notify such candidate, and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the excess.

"(c) If the Commission determines that any amount of any benefit made to a candidate under this title was not used as provided for in this title, the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to 200 per centum of the amount of such benefit.

"(d) If the Commission determines that any candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by 5 per centum or less the limitation set forth in section 503(b), the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the amount of the excess expenditure.

"(e) If the Commission determines that any candidate who has received benefits under this title has made expenditures which in the aggregate exceed by more than 5 per centum the limitation set forth in section 503(b), the Commission shall so notify such candidate and such candidate shall pay the Secretary an amount equal to three times the amount of the excess expenditure.

"(f) Any amount received by an eligible candidate under this title may be retained for a period not exceeding sixty days after the date of the general election for the liquidation of all obligations to pay general election campaign expenses incurred during this general election period. At the end of such sixty-day period any unexpended funds received under this title shall be promptly repaid to the Secretary.

"(g) No notification shall be made by the Commission under this section with respect to an election more than three years after the date of such election.

"(h) All payments received under this section shall be deposited in the Senate Fund.

"CRIMINAL PENALTIES

"SEC. 507A. (a) No candidate shall knowingly or willfully accept benefits under this title in excess of the aggregate benefits to which such candidate is entitled or knowingly or willfully use such benefits for any purpose not provided for in this title or knowingly or willfully make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in excess of the limitation provided in this title.

"(b) Any person who violates the provisions of subsection (a) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. Any officer or member of any political committee who knowingly consents to any expenditure in violation of the provisions of subsection (a) shall be fined not more than $25,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c)(1) It is unlawful for any person who receives any benefit under this title, or to whom any portion of any such benefit is transferred, knowingly and willfully to use, or authorize the use of, such benefit or such portion except as provided in section 504(d).

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(d)(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully—

"(A) to furnish any false, fictitious, or fraudulent evidence, books, or information (including any certification, verification, notice, or report), to the Commission under this title, or to include in any evidence, books, or information so furnished any misrepresentation of a material fact, or to falsify or conceal any evidence, books, or information relevant to a certification by the Commission or an examination and audit by the Commission under this title, or

"(B) to fail to furnish to the Commission any records, books, or information requested by it for purposes of this title.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(e)(1) It is unlawful for any person knowingly and willfully to give or accept any kickback or any illegal payment in connection with any benefits received by any candidate, or the authorized committees of such candidate, who receives benefits under this title.

"(2) Any person who violates the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(3) In addition to the penalty provided by paragraph (2), any person who accepts any kickback or illegal benefit in connection with any benefits received by any candidate pursuant to the provisions of this title, or received by the authorized committees of such candidate, shall pay to the Secretary for deposit in the Fund, an amount equal to 125 percent of the kickback or benefit received.

"JUDICIAL REVIEW

"SEC. 508. (a) Any agency action by the Commission made under the provisions of this title shall be subject to review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit upon petition filed in such court within thirty days after the agency action by the Commission for which review is sought. It shall be the duty of the Court of Appeals, ahead of all matters not filed under this title, to advance on the docket and expeditiously take action on all petitions filed pursuant to this title.

"(b) The provisions of chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, apply to judicial review of any agency action, as defined in section 551(13) of title 5, United States Code, by the Commission.

"PARTICIPATION BY COMMISSION IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

"SEC. 509. (a) The Commission is authorized to appear in and defend against any action instituted under this section and under section 508 either by attorneys employed in its office or by counsel whom it may appoint without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and whose compensation it may fix without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title.

"(b) The Commission is authorized through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to institute actions in the district courts of the United States to seek recovery of any amounts determined under section 507 to be payable to the Secretary.

"(c) The Commission is authorized, through attorneys and counsel described in subsection (a), to petition the courts of the United States for such injunctive relief as is appropriate in order to implement any provision of this title.

"(d) The Commission is authorized on behalf of the United States to appeal from, and to petition the Supreme Court for certiorari to review, judgments or decrees entered with respect to actions in which it appears, pursuant to the authority provided in this section.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS; REGULATIONS

"SEC. 510. (a) The Commission shall, as soon as practicable after each election, submit a full report to the Senate setting forth—

"(1) the expenditures (shown in such detail as the Commission determines appropriate) made by each eligible candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate;

"(2) the amounts certified by the Commission under section 505 for payment to each eligible candidate;

"(3) the amount of repayments, if any, required under section 507, and the reasons for each payment required; and

"(4) the balance in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund, and the balance in the Senate Fund and any other account maintained in the Fund.

Each report submitted pursuant to this section shall be printed as a Senate document.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c), to conduct such examinations and investigations, and to require the keeping and submission of such books, records, and information, as it deems necessary to carry out the functions and duties imposed on it by this title.

"(c) Thirty days before prescribing any rules or regulation under subsection (b), the Commission shall transmit to the Senate a statement setting forth the proposed rule or regulation and containing a detailed explanation and justification of such rule or regulation.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 511. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission for the purpose of carrying out functions under this title, such sums as may be necessary.".

SENATE FUND

SEC. 3. Section 6096(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended—

(1) by striking out "$1" each place it appears in that subsection and inserting in lieu thereof "$2"; and

(2) by striking out "$2" each place it appears in that subsection and inserting in lieu thereof "$4".

BROADCAST RATES

SEC. 4. Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by striking out "section" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection";

(2) by redesignating subsections (b), (c), and (d) as subsections (d), (e), and (f), respectively; and

(3) by inserting immediately after subsection (a) the following:

"(b)(1) If any licensee permits a person to utilize a broadcasting station to broadcast material which either endorses a legally qualified candidate for any Federal elective office or opposes a legally qualified candidate for that office, such licensee shall, within a reasonable period of time, provide to any eligible candidate opposing the candidate endorsed (or to an authorized committee of such eligible candidate), or to any eligible candidate who was so opposed (or to an authorized committee of such eligible candidate), the opportunity to utilize, without charge, the same amount of time on such broadcasting station, during the same period of the day, as was utilized by such person.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'person' includes an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, or any other organization or group of persons, but such term does not include a legally qualified candidate for any Federal elective office or an authorized committee of any such candidate.

"(c) A licensee shall not preempt the use, during any period specified in subsection (d)(1), of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate for Federal office who has purchased such use pursuant to the provisions of such subsection (d)(1).";

(4) by amending subsection (d)(1), as redesignated herein to read as follows:

"(1) during the 6 months preceding the date of a primary, runoff, general or special election in which such person is a candidate, the lowest unit charge of the station over the preceding 12-month period for the same class and amount of time for the same period: Provided, That in the case of candidates for the United States Senate in a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, this provision shall apply only if such candidate has been certified by the Federal Election Commission as eligible to receive benefits under title V of such Act;"; and

(5) in subsection (e) as so redesignated by subsection (a) of this section, is amended to read as follows:

"(e) For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'authorized committee' means, with respect to any candidate for nomination for election, or election, to any

Federal elective office, any committee, club, association, or other group of persons which receives contributions or makes expenditures during a calendar year in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000 and which is authorized by such candidate to accept contributions or make expenditures on behalf of such candidate to further the nomination or election of such candidate;

"(2) the term 'broadcasting station' includes a community antenna television system; and

"(3) the terms 'licensee' and 'station licensee' when used with respect to a community antenna system mean the operator of such system.".

REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 5. (a) Section 304 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d)(1) Not later than the day after the date on which a candidate for the United States Senate qualifies for the ballot for a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6), or, if such candidate is a candidate in a State which has a primary election to qualify for such ballot after September 1, within 7 days after the date such candidate wins in such primary, whichever occurs first, each such candidate in such election shall file with the Commission a declaration of whether or not such candidate intends to make expenditures in excess of the amount of the limitation on expenditures for such election, as determined under section 503(b).

"(2) Any declaration filed pursuant to paragraph (1) may be amended or changed at any time within 7 days after the filing of such declaration. Such amended declaration may not be amended or changed further.

"(e)(1) Any candidate for the United States Senate who qualifies for the ballot for a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6)—

"(A) who is not eligible to receive benefits under section 502, and

"(B) who either raises aggregate contributions or makes or obligates to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed 75 percent of the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) for such Senate election, shall file a report with the Commission within 24 hours after such contributions have been raised or such expenditures have been made or obligated to be made, or within 24 hours after the date of qualification for the general election ballot, whichever is later, setting forth the candidate's total contributions and total expenditures for such election. Thereafter such candidate shall file additional reports with the Commission within 24 hours after each time additional contributions are raised or expenditures are made, or are obligated to be made, which aggregate an additional 5 percent of such limit. Such reports shall continue to be filed pursuant to the provisions of this section until such candidate has raised aggregate contributions or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures equal to 133⅓ percent of the limit provided for such State pursuant to section 503(b).

"(2) The Commission, within 24 hours after each such report has been filed, shall notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive benefits pursuant to the provisions of this title under section 504, about such report, and after an opposing candidate has raised aggregate contributions or made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures in excess of the limit provided for such State pursuant to section 503(b), the Commission shall certify, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of any amount to which such eligible candidate is entitled.

"(3) Notwithstanding the reporting requirement established in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate in a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6), who is not eligible to receive benefits under section 504, has raised aggregate contributions or has made or has obligated to make aggregate expenditures for such election which exceed the amount of the limitation determined under section 503(b) for such election. The Commission, within 24 hours after making such determination, shall notify each candidate in the general election involved who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504 about such determination, and shall certify, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of any amount to which such candidate is entitled.

"(f)(1) All independent expenditures, if any, (including those described in subsection (b)(6)(B)(iii)) made by any person after the date of the last Federal election with regard to a general election, as such term is defined in section 501(6), and all obligations to make such expenditures incurred by any person during such period, if any, shall be reported by such person to the Commission as provided in paragraph (2), if such expenditure or obligation is described in such paragraph.

"(2) Independent expenditures by any person as referred to in paragraph (1) shall be reported within 24 hours after the aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated first exceeds $10,000. Thereafter, independent expenditures referred to in such paragraph, made by the same person in the same election, shall be reported within 24 hours after each time the aggregate amount of such expenditures incurred or obligated, not yet reported under this subparagraph, exceeds $5,000.

"(3) Each report under this subsection shall be filed with the Commission and the Secretary of State for the State of the election involved and shall contain (A) the information required by subsection (b)(6)(B)(iii) of this section, and (B) a statement filed under penalty of perjury by the person making the independent expenditures, or by the person incurring the obligation to make such expenditures, as the case may be, that identifies the candidate whom the independent expenditures are actually intended to help elect or defeat. The Commission shall, within 24 hours after such report is made, notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive benefits pursuant to section 504(a)(1)(C), about each such report, and shall certify such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of any amount to which such candidate is entitled.

"(4)(A) Notwithstanding the reporting requirements established in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a person has made independent expenditures, or has incurred an obligation to make such expenditures, as the case may be, with regard to a general election, as defined in section 501(6), that in the aggregate total more than the applicable amount specified in paragraph (2).

"(B) The Commission shall, within 24 hours after such determination is made, notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504(a)(1)(C) about each determination under subparagraph (A), and shall certify, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (i), such eligibility to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment in full of any amount to which such candidate is entitled.

"(g)(1) When two or more persons make an expenditure or expenditures in coordination, consultation, or concert (as described in paragraph (2) or otherwise) for the purpose of promoting the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, each such person shall report to the Commission, under subsection (f), the amount of such expenditure or expenditures made by such person in coordination, consultation, or concert with such other person or persons when the total amount of all expenditures made by such persons in coordination, consultation, or concert with each other exceeds the applicable amount provided in such subsection.

"(2) An expenditure by one person shall constitute an expenditure in coordination, consultation, or concert with another person where—

"(A) there is any arrangement, coordination, or direction with respect to the expenditure between such persons making the expenditures, including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person;

"(B) in the same two-year election cycle, one of the persons making the expenditures (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) is or has been, with respect to such expenditures—

"(i) authorized by such other person to raise or expend funds on behalf of such other person; or

"(ii) receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from such other person or an agent of such other person;

"(C) one of the persons making expenditures (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated with, advised, or counseled such other person in connection with such expenditure; or

"(D) one of the persons making expenditures and such other person making expenditures each retain the professional services of the same individual or person in connection with such expenditures.

"(h)(1) Every political committee, as defined in section 301(4), active in non-Federal elections and maintaining separate accounts for this purpose shall file with the Commission reports of funds received into and disbursements made from such accounts for activities which may influence an election to any Federal office. For purposes of this section, activities which may influence an election to any Federal office include, but are not limited to—

"(A) voter registration and get-out-the-vote drives directed to the general public in connection with any election in which Federal candidates appear on the ballot;

"(B) general public political advertising which includes references, however incidental, to clearly identified Federal as well as non-Federal candidates for public office, or which does not clearly identify Federal candidates but urges support for or opposition to all the candidates of a political party or other candidates in a classification or context which includes Federal candidates; and

"(C) any other activities which require an allocation of costs between a political committee's Federal and non-Federal accounts reflecting the impact on Federal elections in accordance with regulations prescribed or Advisory Opinions rendered by the Commission.

"(2) Reports required to be filed by this subsection shall be filed for the same time-periods required for political committees under section 304(a), and shall include:

"(A) a separate statement, for each of the activities in connection with which a report is required under paragraph (1), of the aggregate total of disbursements from the non-Federal accounts; and

"(B) supporting schedules, providing an identification of each donor together with the amount and date of each donation with regard to those receipts of the non-Federal account which comprise disbursements reported under subparagraph (A), provided, however, that such schedules are required only for donations from any one source aggregating in excess of $200 in any calendar year.

"(3) Reports required to be filed by this subsection need not include donations made to or on behalf of non-Federal candidates or political organizations in accordance with the financing and reporting requirements of State laws, or other disbursements from the non-Federal accounts in support of exclusively non-Federal election activities, provided that such donations or disbursements are governed solely by such State laws and not subject to paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(i) The certification required by this section shall be made by the Commission on the basis of reports filed with such Commission in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or on the basis of such Commission's own investigation or determination, notwithstanding the provisions of section 505(a).

"(j) Within 15 days after a candidate for the Senate qualifies for the primary ballot under applicable State law, such candidate shall file with the Commission, a declaration stating whether or not such candidate intends to expend from his personal funds, or the funds of his immediate family, or incur personal loans, in connection with his campaign for such office, in the aggregate of $100,000 or more, for the election cycle.

"(k)(1) Any candidate for the United States Senate who expends from his personal funds or the funds of his immediate family, or incurs personal loans, in connection with his campaign for such office, in the aggregate in excess of $100,000, for the election cycle, shall file a report with the Commission within 24 hours after such expenditures have been made or loans incurred. Thereafter the expenditures referred to in this paragraph shall be reported within 24 hours after each time the aggregate of such expenditures or loans exceeds $10,000.

"(2) The Commission within 24 hours after a report has been filed under paragraph (1) shall notify each candidate in the election involved who is eligible to receive payments pursuant to the provisions of this title under section 504 about each such report.

"(3) Notwithstanding the reporting requirements in this subsection, the Commission may make its own determination that a candidate for the United States Senate has made expenditures from the personal funds of such candidate or the funds of any member of the immediate family of such candidate or incurred personal loans in connection with his campaign aggregating in excess of $100,000, or thereafter in increments of $10,000 during the election cycle. The Commission within 24 hours after making such determination shall notify each candidate in the general election involved who is eligible to receive benefits under section 504 about each such determination.".

(b) Section 301(4) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"For purposes of this section, the receipt of contributions or the making of, or obligating to make expenditures shall be determined by the Commission on the basis of facts and circumstances, in whatever combination, demonstrating a purpose of influencing any election for Federal office, including, but not limited to, the representations made by any person soliciting funds about their intended uses; the identification by name of individuals who are candidates for Federal office, as defined in paragraph (2) of this section, or of any political party, in general public political advertising; and the proximity to any primary, run-off, or general election of general public political advertising designed or reasonably calculated to influence voter choice in that election.".

(c) Section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(20) The term 'election cycle' means—

"(A) in the case of a candidate or the authorized committees of a candidate, the term beginning on the day after the date of the last previous general election for such office or seat which such candidate seeks and ending on the date of the next election; or

"(B) for all other persons, the term beginning on the first day following the date of the last general election and ending on the date of the next election.".

(d) Section 304(b)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(2)) is amended by striking out "for the reporting period and calendar year," and inserting in lieu thereof "for the reporting period and calendar year in the case of committees other than authorized committees of a candidate, and for the reporting period and election cycle in the case of authorized committees of candidates,".

(2) Section 304(b)(3) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(3)) is amended—

(A) in subparagraph (A), by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,";

(B) in subparagraph (F), by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,"; and

(C) in subparagraph (G), by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,".

(3) Section 304(b)(5)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(5)(A)) is amended by inserting after "calendar year," the following: "in the case of committees other than authorized committees or in excess of $200 within the election cycle in the case of authorized committees,".

(4) Section 304(b)(6)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(6)(A)) is amended by striking out "calendar year" and inserting in lieu thereof "election cycle".

(f) Section 301(13) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(13)) is amended by striking out "mailing address" and inserting in lieu thereof "permanent residence address".

(g) Section 304(b)(5)(A) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 434(b)(5)(A)) is amended by adding before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", except that if a person to whom an expenditure is made is merely providing personal or consulting services and is in turn making expenditures to other persons who provide goods or services to the candidate or his authorized committees, the name and address of such other person, together with the date, amount and purpose of such expenditure shall also be disclosed".

LIMITS ON CONTRIBUTIONS BY MULTICANDIDATE POLITICAL COMMITTEES AND SEPARATE SEGREGATED FUNDS

SEC. 6. (a) Section 315(a)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(2)) is amended by—

(1) striking out "or" at the end of subparagraph (B);

(2) striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

"(D) to any candidate for the office of Member of, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the House of Representatives and the authorized political committees of such candidate with respect to—

"(i) a general or special election for the office of Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) which exceed $100,000 ($125,000 if at least two candidates qualify for the ballot in the general or special election involved and at least two candidates qualify for the ballot in a primary election relating to such general or special election), when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such general or special election (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election); or

"(ii) a runoff election for the office of Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress which exceed $25,000 when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such runoff election;

"(E) to any candidate for the office of Senator and the authorized political committees of such candidate with respect to—

"(i) a general or special election for such office (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) which, when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such general or special election (including any primary election, convention, or caucus relating to such general or special election) exceeds an amount equal to 10 percent of the amount provided in section 315(i); or

"(ii) a runoff election for the office of United States Senator which exceeds, when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such candidate and his authorized political committees with respect to such runoff election, an amount equal to 10 percent of the limitation on expenditures provided in section 315(j), for runoff elections; or

"(F) to any State committee of a political party, including any subordinate committee of a State committee, which, when added to the total of contributions previously made by multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, other than multicandidate committees of a political party, to such State committee exceeds an amount equal to—

"(i) 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the State of such State committee, or whichever is greater. The limitation of this subparagraph shall apply separately with respect to each two-year Federal election cycle, covering a period from the day following the date of the last Federal general election held in that State through the date of the next regularly scheduled Federal general election.".

"(ii) $25,000,

(b)(1) Section 315 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(i) For purposes of subsection (a)(2)(E)(i), such limitation for the election cycle shall be an amount equal to 50 percent of the aggregate of $400,000, plus—

"(1) in States having a voting age population of 4 million or less, 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population; or

"(2) in States having a voting age population over 4 million, 30 cents multiplied by 4 million plus 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million; except that such amount shall not be less than $950,000, nor more than $5,500,000.

"(j) For purposes of subsection (a)(2)(E)(ii), such limitation for the election cycle shall be an amount equal to 20 percent of the aggregate of $400,000, plus—

"(1) in States having a voting age population of 4 million or less, 30 cents multiplied by the voting age population; or

"(2) in States having a voting age population over 4 million, 30 cents multiplied by 4 million plus 25 cents multiplied by the voting age population over 4 million; except that such amount shall not be less than $950,000, nor more than $5,500,000.".

(2) Section 315(c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(c)) is amended by—

(A) striking out "subsection (b) and subsection (d)" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "subsections (b), (d), (i), and (j)"; and

(B) inserting "for subsections (b) and (d) and the term 'base period' means the calendar year of the first election after the date of enactment of the Senatorial Election Campaign Act of 1987, for subsections (i) and (j)" before the period at the end of paragraph (2)(B).

(c) Section 315(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking out "(2) and (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(2), (3), (4), and (5)";

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(4) No congressional campaign committee may accept contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, during any two-year election cycle, which, in the aggregate, exceed 30 percent of the total expenditures which may be made during such election cycle by that campaign committee on behalf of candidates for Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (3).

"(5) No national committee of a political party may accept contributions from multicandidate political committees and separate segregated funds, during any two-year election cycle, which, in the aggregate, equal an amount in excess of an amount equal to 2 cents multiplied by the voting age population of the United States.

"(6) The limitations contained in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall apply to any expenditure through general public political advertising, whenever made, which clearly identifies by name an individual who is, or is seeking nomination to be, a candidate in the general election for Federal office of President, Senator or Representative; provided that this paragraph shall not apply to direct mail communications designed primarily for fundraising purposes which make only incidental reference to any one or more Federal candidates.".

(d) Section 315(a)(2) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(2)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking out "$5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,500."; and

(2) in subparagraph (C), by striking out "$5,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,500".

INTERMEDIARY OR CONDUIT

SEC. 7. (a) Section 315(a)(8) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a(a)(8)) is amended to read as follows:

"(8) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) contributions made by a person, either directly or indirectly, to or on behalf of a particular candidate, including contributions which are in any way earmarked or otherwise directed through an intermediary or conduit to such candidate, shall be treated as contributions from such person to such candidate;

"(B) contributions made by a person either directly or indirectly, to or on behalf of a particular candidate, through an intermediary or conduit, including all contributions delivered or arranged to be delivered by such intermediary or conduit, shall also be treated as contributions from the intermediary or conduit, if—

"(i) the contributions made through the intermediary or conduit are in the form of a check or other negotiable instrument made payable to the conduit or intermediary rather than the intended recipient; or

"(ii) the conduit or intermediary is a political committee, other than an authorized committee of a candidate, within the meaning of section 301(4), or an officer, employee or other agent of such a political committee, or an officer, employee or other agent of a connected organization, within the meaning of section 301(7), acting in its behalf; and

"(iii) the conduit or intermediary is required to register as a lobbyist or lobby organization as defined under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (2 U.S.C. 266), or an officer, employee or other agent of such an organization; and

"(C) the limitations imposed by this paragraph shall not apply to—

"(i) bona fide joint fundraising efforts conducted solely for the purpose of sponsorship of a fundraising reception, dinner, or other event in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission by (I) two or more candidates, (II) two or more national, State, or local committees of a political party within the meaning of section 301(4) acting on their own behalf, or (III) a special committee formed by (a) two or more candidates or (b) one or more candidates and one or more national, State, or local committees of a political party acting on their own behalf; or

"(ii) fundraising efforts for the benefit of a candidate which are conducted by another candidate within the meaning of section 301(2).

In all cases where contributions are made by a person either directly or indirectly to or on behalf of a particular candidate through an intermediary or conduit, the intermediary or conduit shall report the original source and the intended recipient of such contribution to the Commission and to the intended recipient.".

INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES

SEC. 8. (a) Section 301(17) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431(17)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "An expenditure shall constitute an expenditure in coordination, consultation, or concert with a candidate and shall not constitute an 'independent expenditure' where—

"(A) there is any arrangement, coordination, or direction with respect to the expenditure between the candidate or the candidate's agent and the person (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) making the expenditure;

"(B) in the same election cycle, the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) is or has been—

"(i) authorized to raise or expend funds on behalf of the candidate or the candidate's authorized committees,

"(ii) serving as an officer of the candidate's authorized committees, or

"(iii) receiving any form of compensation or reimbursement from the candidate, the candidate's authorized committees, or the candidate's agent;

"(C) the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated with, advised, or counseled the candidate or the candidate's agents at any time on the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election to Federal office, in the same election cycle, including any advice relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(D) the person making the expenditure retains the professional services of any individual or other person also providing those services to the candidate in connection with the candidate's pursuit of nomination for election, or election to Federal office, in the same election cycle, including any services relating to the candidate's decision to seek Federal office;

"(E) the person making the expenditure (including any officer, director, employee or agent of such person) has communicated or consulted at any time during the same election cycle about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs relating to the candidate's pursuit of election to Federal office, with: (i) any officer, director, employee or agent of a party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions, pursuant to subsections (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; or (ii) any person whose professional services have been retained by a political party committee that has made or intends to make expenditures or contributions pursuant to subsections (a), (d), or (h) of section 315 in connection with the candidate's campaign; or

"(F) the expenditure is based on information provided to the person making the expenditure directly or indirectly by the candidate or the candidate's agents about the candidate's plans, projects, or needs, provided that the candidate or the candidate's agent is aware that the other person has made or is planning to make expenditures expressly advocating the candidate's election.".

By Mr. BOREN:

S. 1577. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide that charitable contributions of appreciated property will not be treated as an item of tax preference; to the Committee on Finance.

TAX TREATMENT OF CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS OF APPRECIATED PROPERTY

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, charitable gifts of appreciated property have declined dramatically since 1986 when Congress included the appreciated portion as a tax preference in the alternative minimum tax [AMT]. Today, I am introducing legislation, along with my colleagues Senator DANFORTH, Senator MOYNIHAN, Senator PRYOR, Senator CHAFEE, and Senator DASCHLE, to remove charitable gifts of appreciated property from the AMT. My bill will help schools, colleges, universities, and other charitable institutions regain a competitive position among major fundraising campaigns, and will allow museums to obtain major works of art for public view.

Since the Tax Reform Act of 1986, a taxpayer's deduction for a charitable contribution of appreciated property has been limited under the AMT to the basis in the property. This change in the law did not originate in the Senate. The Senate determined that adding charitable gifts of appreciated property as a tax preference in the AMT was not needed in 1986 to prevent high income taxpayers from avoiding taxes. Before the 1986 act, the gift of appreciated property could not exceed 30 percent of adjusted gross income [AGI]. Although taxpayers with high incomes could "zero out" under the pre-1986 law, the Senate occurred with Treasury that charitable contributions of appreciated property were not the reason. The Senate believed a Treasury Department study which found that appreciated property gifts were not important causes of tax avoidance even when combined with other tax preferences. Before the 1986 Tax Reform Act, tax avoidance was made possible through abusive tax shelters, income exclusion, and excessive interest deduction—but these opportunities were precluded by the 1986 act.

Although the Senate did not believe that gifts of appreciated property belonged in the AMT, in the spirit of compromise, and to achieve the tax reforms which were needed, Senate conferees receded to the House position. Since then, gifts of appreciated property have fallen, accounting for a larger share of the drop in overall giving that we would have predicted from pre-1986 data on the ratio of property giving to other contributions.

Analysis of property giving suggests the recent decline in donations of appreciated property is not a temporary aberration but a real downward trend. The decline cannot be explained by a predictable increase in giving as a response to the 1986 tax law changes and a decrease due to the stock market trouble in 1987. Explanations of this downward trend in property giving does come from educators and museum directors. The Association of Art Museum Directors found that the dollar value of art donations per year decreased from $75 million in 1985 to $67 million in 1988 while the cost of art nearly doubled. Colleges, universities, and schools report a chilling effect on the leadership gifts necessary in beginning major fundraising campaigns. The Council for Aid to Education [CFAE] documented the peak of gifts to education in academic year 1986-87, followed in academic year 1987-88 by the first decline since 1975 and only the third decline in 25 years.

The bill we are introducing today is identical to H.R. 173. A Joint Committee on Taxation Revenue Estimate for H.R. 173 shows a decline in revenues of only $13 million in 1990 and less than $350 million over 5 years. We can afford to restore gifts of appreciated property to our Nation's educational, cultural, and other charitable institutions, and in doing so, contribute far more to the Nation's welfare than an equivalent outlay through appropriations. Even if the Federal Government could and should pay for the total cost of higher education and all the other welfare benefits provided through philanthropy, this pipe dream would not bring major works of art back into public view.

The charitable deduction for contribution of the appreciated portion of property belongs in Federal law, but not as a tax preference in the AMT. I will pursue this legislation diligently, enthusiastically, and relentlessly through out reconciliation.

I urge my colleagues to join with us in our efforts to restore gifts of appreciated property to our Nation's educational, cultural, and other charitable institutions. We can have tax equity and exclude gifts of appreciated property from the AMT.●

S. 1580. A bill providing for safe harbor leases involving rural electric cooperatives; to the Committee on Finance.

SAFE HARBOR LEASES INVOLVING RURAL ELECTRIC COOPERATIVES

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I would like to introduce a bill for myself and Senator PRYOR which addresses the tax treatment of "safe harbor" leases used by rural electric cooperatives. This bill, an amendment to section 277 of the Internal Revenue Code, would clarify that ongoing income and deductions which are generated by a "safe harbor lease" transaction and reported by a cooperative are to be matched to avoid the distortion of income.

The purpose of the bill is to avoid the distortion on a cooperative's tax return caused by a mismatching of lease expenses and lease income. Although "safe harbor" leasing was intended to benefit financially distressed companies, and though it in fact did save several cooperatives, the provision is harmful due to an odd accounting theory applicable only to cooperatives. This unusual quirk in cooperative accounting is that business with members is separated from business with nonmembers—operations are treated as if they were through two separate entities. The tax distortion occurs when deductions are not matched with lease income, but are instead allocated in part against member income and in part against nonmember income. This leads to a mismatching of lease income and lease expenses since the segregation of the two types of business prevents the offset of losses and income. Hence, a cooperative could receive heavy tax bills when it actually suffered a loss.

This bill would let cooperatives offset interest income from transactions involving qualified leased property with the rental expense of such transactions before the income or expenses are allocated to either members or nonmembers. It should be noted that the bill applies only to cooperatives, since the obscure accounting rule prevents them from receiving equal benefits to other industries.

The bill is vital to interests in Oklahoma. More than half of the people in my State live in rural areas where rural electric cooperatives are necessary for providing service at reasonable rates to farmers and ranchers.

I invite my colleagues, especially those Members of the Senate with rural interests, to join me in support of this measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1580

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

In the case of a rural electric cooperative described in section 1381(a)(2)(C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, any interest income in connection with a transaction involving qualified leased property which was treated as a lease under section 168(i) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect before the amendments made by the Tax Reform Act of 1986) or any corresponding prior provision of law shall be offset by any rental expense in connection with such transaction before allocation of such income or expense to members and nonmembers of such cooperatives for purposes of such Code.●

By Mr. ROBB:

S.J. Res. 189. Joint resolution designating the week of September 17, 1989, through September 23, 1989, as "National Critical Care Awareness Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL CRITICAL CARE AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I'm pleased to introduce today a commemorative joint resolution which proclaims the week of September 17, 1989 as National Critical Care Awareness Week.

Critical care encompasses all life-threatening medical emergencies, from the paramedics at the scene of an accident, to the doctors in an emergency room, to the highly specialized round-the clock medical teams in intensive care units. ICU, the most commonly recognized form of critical care, encompasses 20 percent of all inpatient hospital costs in the Nation today, and 1 percent of our gross national product.

Since roughly 80 percent of all Americans will experience critical care either as a patient, or as a family member of a patient, during their lifetime, it's important to educate the public on this increasingly technical and complex aspect of health care. During National Critical Care Awareness Week, activities are planned to heighten public awareness on what, for example, may happen when faced with a critical injury or illness, and how best to respond.

Last September, my former press secretary, George Stoddart, lost a courageous but unsuccessful battle against a cancerous brain tumor. To provide a teaching mechanism for doctors and nurses seeking to understand the important human component of medicine and to enable future patients and their families to prepare for similar ordeals, George and his wife, Sandy, agreed to have his surgery chronicled in a film on critical care. I was honored to provide the introduction.

George's commitment to turning his own difficult experience into a constructive legacy to others, heightened my own awareness of critical care, an awareness I believe all Americans should share.

Mr. President, National Critical Care Awareness Week is one positive step in educating our citizens. I hope my colleagues will join me in approving the passage of this important joint resolution, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resoluton be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 189

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Whereas the people of the United States are not sufficiently aware of the special medical needs of the critically ill and injured;

Whereas a family member must often act as the spokesperson for a critically ill or injured patient by providing important information about the patient and often by making decisions regarding the treatment of such patient;

Whereas critical care is a rapidly expanding and challenging area of life-saving medicine which is practiced in such places as intensive care units, trauma centers, burn units, coronary care units, and neonatal and pediatric intensive care units;

Whereas critical care units are often vital to the survival of patients in life-threatening conditions;

Whereas since nurses play an essential role in administering critical care treatment, the current shortage of nurses in the United States could have a devastating impact on the access and quality of care for patients experiencing life-threatening conditions;

Whereas the provision of critical care raises new and complex ethical, social, economic, and legal issues which will require the involvement of health care professionals, public policy makers, and the general public; and

Whereas the Foundation for Critical Care, the Society of Critical Care Medicine, and the American Association of Critical-Care Nurses are dedicated to improving the care of critically ill and injured patients through research and education: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of September 17, 1989, through September 23, 1989, is designated as "National Critical Care Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate programs and activities.●

S.J. Res. 190. A joint resolution designating April 9, 1990, as "National Former Prisoners of War Recognition Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary

NATIONAL FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR RECOGNITION DAY

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, today, on behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] and myself, I rise to introduce legislation designating April 9, 1990, as National Former Prisoners of War Recognition Day.

This effort, identical to those undertaken in the last Congress and earlier this year, serves to underscore the importance of the individuals known as POW's and the sacrifices they endured in the cause of freedom.

It is fitting to designate April 9 as a day to remember those who endured unimaginable hardships in answering the call of their country. It is the anniversary of the fall of Bataan—a name synonymous with suffering endured in captivity and a symbol of man's potential for cruelty to his fellow man. We must never forget those who perished or the individuals who still suffer from the horrors of deprivation and torture. We must never forget those like John Emerick, past Commander of American Defenders of Bataan and Corregidor, of Finleyville, PA, who was captured by the enemy on that fateful April 9. When he was captured he weighed a healthy 190 pounds. On the day of his liberation, September 26, 1945, he weighed just 98 pounds. Of the 208 men in his squadron only 16 survived.

It is for the John Emericks of this Nation that we offer this resolution to recognize the great sacrifices made by former prisoners of war and their families. I hope my colleagues join me, Senator GRAHAM, and the other Members of this body who have already cosponsored this important legislation to recognize these valorous former POW's. All Americans should be aware of the special sacrifices these men and women made for them through a national day of recognition.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 190

Whereas the United States has fought in many armed conflicts;

Whereas thousands of members of the Armed Forces of the United States who served in such wars were captured by the enemy and held as prisoners of war;

Whereas many such prisoners of war were subjected to brutal and inhumane treatment by their captors in violation of international codes and customs for the treatment of prisoners of war and died, or were disabled, as a result of such treatment;

Whereas in 1985, the United States Congress (in Public Law 99-145) directed the Department of Defense to issue a medal to former prisoners of war in recognition and commemoration of their great sacrifices in service to our Nation; and

Whereas these great sacrifices of former prisoners of war and their families deserve national recognition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That April 9, 1990, is designated as "National Former Prisoners of War Recognition Day" in honor of the members of the Armed Forces of the United States who have been held as prisoners of war, and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to commemorate such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, each year Congress appropriately sets aside a day, April 9, to pause and reflect on the courage and sacrifice of our former prisoners of war. This day is historically significant, as it marks that day in 1942 when Bataan fell and thousands of American soldiers were taken prisoner by enemy troops in the Philippines. What followed was the grim, forced march that led to the death of many of those captured.

There are an estimated 80,000 former prisoners of war in the United States from World War II and other conflicts. There is little we can do to repay these men and women, but we must not forget them. They have given more than most Americans will ever be called on to give their country. They have taught us about patriotism, about perseverance, and about character.

I urge my colleagues to join me, Senator HEINZ and the other Members of this body who have already cosponsored this important resolution honoring the contributions and recognizing the hardships of former prisoners of war.

By Mr. DECONCINI (for himself and Mr. D'AMATO):

S.J. Res. 193. Joint resolution designating October 1989 as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ITALIAN-AMERICAN HERITAGE AND CULTURE MONTH

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am honored to rise today along with my esteemed colleague from New York, Senator D'AMATO, to introduce a resolution proclaiming the month of October 1989 as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month," a month for all Italians to rejoice in their heritage and recognize their continuing achievements. It seems fitting that October be set aside in recognition for a special, passionate people. October is also a time when America sets aside a day in remembrance of one of the greatest Italians of all time, Christopher Columbus. In just 3 short years from now our country and, in fact, the world will celebrate the 500th anniversary of Columbus' discovery of the Americas.

It was on October 12, 1492, that a young, proud sailor and navigator peered through the calm of night on a ship seemingly bound for nowhere on an empty sea. The sailor's crew was restless because land had not been sighted in over 2 months. What he saw not only changed his life forever, but also changed the world. He saw bluffs up ahead and heard the glorious sound of the sea beating against them. He believed that he had found a new passage to the Indies where the riches of man were plentiful. He soon realized that he had discovered a new world, a new land for all men to revere.

So began the age of discovery. In the centuries following, explorers, pirates, pilgrims, and priests, men and women from all walks of life would discover America time and time again. This discovery would not only be for their countries, but would also be for themselves. Some of the most famous Italian explorers came to America, establishing colonies in the southwest for Spain, and in the Louisiana territory for France.

It would not be until the early 1800's that the wave of Italian settlers would arrive on America's shores. Many came to this country in order to find the opportunity it is fabled for, fleeing the hard times in Italy. Most Italian-Americans settled in the Northeast to facilitate their hoped for return to their troubled homeland. However, as the century lingered on, many would move onward toward the far western frontier, affirming the Italian exploratory spirit. Some, in fact, would settle in my own State of Arizona. By 1907, Italians represented nearly 40 percent of U.S. immigration and were firmly entrenched as leaders in American society.

Perhaps the greatest contribution that Italian-Americans have made to our Nation is their commitment to the preservation and continued growth of the family. This commitment is not a simple one because it comes from a source that, many times, we lose sight of in our complicated lives. The source of this commitment is, in fact, a spiritual one derived from a reverence for God that is centuries old. It is this commitment that allows the Italian-American community to reach out to others and to strive to better themselves. This focus on family has allowed Italian-Americans to become the artists, the scientists, the athletes, and the educators that have inspired former generations and generations to come.

I rise today, Mr. President, because I am proud to be an Italian-American. I am honored to be part of a people that have beaten the odds placed against them. Most Italian immigrants first came to this country with little money and built their lives in America with perseverance and hope for the future. Today Italian-American youth have role models they can look to with pride and admiration. They know that with the same hope, love, reverence, and commitment toward life and toward one another their ancestors had they can achieve greatness. They can become United States Senators, Supreme Court Justices, Governors, or even baseball commissioners. Of course these models are not just for Italian-Americans to revere, they are for the entire world.

Mr. President, I am confident that this resolution will be passed so that all Americans will take time to learn and discover the Italian-American people and their heritage. It is my hope that our continuing achievements will not be forgotten, that Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month will truly be a time of discovery for all people.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 193

Whereas Italians and Italian-Americans have contributed to the United States in all aspects of life, including art, science, civil service, military service, athletics, and education;

Whereas Italian-Americans make up one of the largest ethnic groups in the United States;

Whereas in recognition of the accomplishments of Christopher Columbus, recognized as one of the greatest explorers in world history and the 1st to record the discovery of the Americas, a national observance day was established in October of every year;

Whereas the phrase in the Declaration of Independence, "All men are created equal", was suggested by the Italian patriot and immigrant Philip Mazzei;

Whereas during October 1989 special attention will be directed at local and State programs that provide Italian heritage and culture, with special emphasis on national programs such as the Italian Heritage Center at Catholic University of America; and

Whereas during October 1989 the National Italian American Foundation will host the 14th annual dinner to honor Italians and Italian-Americans making important contributions to the development of the arts, sciences, athletics, and education in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 1989 is designated as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month" and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.●

By Mr. LAUTENBURG (for himself and Mr. DURENBERGER):

S.J. Res. 194. Joint resolution designating November 12-18, 1989 as "National Glaucoma Awareness Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL GLAUCOMA AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, today I am introducing a joint resolution to designate the week of November 12-18, 1989, as "National Glaucoma Awareness Week." I am pleased that Senator DURENBERGER has joined me in cosponsoring this resolution.

I hope this resolution will help focus attention on the efforts of those who are working to call attention to the need for early prevention and treatment of this crippling disease. Two million Americans are believed to have glaucoma, which must be treated promptly if loss of vision is to be prevented. When detected early, glaucoma can be controlled. Sadly, people are often unaware of the disease until their eyes have been permanently damaged.

Glaucoma is the second leading cause of blindness among Americans. Some in our country are at greater risk than others. It is the leading cause of blindness among black people. Glaucoma is also a particularly devastating disease of the elderly, and usually strikes in middle age or later. And there is a higher risk of glaucoma among those with diabetes and among those with a family history of the disease.

Glaucoma can be detected by a routine eye examination. A relatively simple procedure can provide for early detection and treatment and an opportunity to reduce the tragic costs so often associated with the disease.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 194

Whereas glaucoma is the 2nd leading cause of blindness among individuals in the United States;

Whereas glaucoma is the leading cause of blindness among black individuals in the United States;

Whereas the risk of blindness from glaucoma significantly increases in older age groups;

Whereas diabetes increases the risk of developing glaucoma;

Whereas at least 2,000,000 individuals in the United States have glaucoma and at least 50 percent of the individuals with glaucoma are unaware of it;

Whereas 80,000 individuals in the United States are already blind from glaucoma and 5,000,000 to 10,000,000 Americans are believed to have undiagnosed and elevated intraocular pressure, often a silent symptom of glaucoma;

Whereas early detection is critical to preventing bindness from glaucoma; and

Whereas periodic comprehensive eye examinations are the best means of detecting glaucoma and the number of individuals that receive examinations could be increased through greater public understanding, awareness, and education; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That November 12-18, 1989 is designated as "National Glaucoma Awareness Week", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 60—REQUESTING AN ACCOUNTING OF THE WHEREABOUTS AND FATE OF RAOUL WALLENBERG

Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. BRADLEY, and Mr. LEVIN) submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 60

Whereas Raoul Wallenberg, a Swedish citizen and diplomat, was responsible for saving thousands of innocent people from being killed by the Nazis during World War II;

Whereas at the request of the United States war Refugee Board and the World Jewish Congress, Raoul Wallenberg went to Budapest in 1944 to organize rescue operations and save Hungarian Jews from being massacred in Nazi death camps;

Whereas Raoul Wallenberg used "protective passports" passes to save Hungarian Jews targeted for extermination in death camps in Eastern Europe from being executed;

Whereas Raoul Wallenberg courageously issued Swedish passports to more than 15,000 Jews and indirectly helped approximately 100,000 Hungarian Jews to escape Nazi plans for their extermination;

Whereas on January 17, 1945, Raoul Wallenberg was escorted by two Soviets to the Russian front, ostensibly to discuss arrangements for emergency supplies to be sent to the Jewish ghettos in Hungary, where he was taken into protective custody;

Whereas Raoul Wallenberg was arrested on charges of spying and taken by Soviet troops to the Lubianka prison in Moscow and held there;

Whereas Raoul Wallenberg was taken into Soviet "protective custody" in violation of international standards of diplomatic immunity;

Whereas the Soviets claim that Raoul Wallenberg died in a Soviet prison in 1947 at the age of 35 of a heart attack, but neither his remains nor any other evidence of his death have ever been produced by the Soviets to verify his death;

Whereas there have been a number of sightings and accounts of Raoul Wallenberg that indicate that he may still be alive and in Soviet custody;

Whereas the Soviet Union refuses to investigate reports that Raoul Wallenberg is still alive;

Whereas the contribution of Raoul Wallenberg to fight for human rights and against the Nazi-orchestrated holocaust must be acknowledged; and

Whereas the truth about the whereabouts of Raoul Wallenberg must be made public: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the United States Senate, That the Senate requests—

(1) that the Soviet Union release the prison records of Raoul Wallenberg and account for his whereabouts; and

(2) that the President pursue, through diplomatic actions with the Soviet Union, such release and accounting.

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today marks the 77th birthday of Raoul Wallenberg—if he yet survives in the Gulag. I rise to submit a concurrent resolution calling on the Soviet Union to release the prison records of Mr. Wallenberg and account for his whereabouts.

Mr. President, one of the most striking aspects of the end of totalitarianism is the effort among such nations to recover their history. For the Soviet Union, the disappearance of Raoul Wallenberg is a story that cries out to be told.

During World War II Mr. Wallenberg was a Swedish diplomat posted to Hungary. Early in 1944 the Nazi's occupied Budapest and began the mass arrest of Jews, sending some one-half million off to death camps, the final atrocity of the Nazi regime. Wallenberg, helped with American funds, responded by issuing Swedish passports to as many Jews as he could reach. Thousands of lives were saved, including that of TOM LANTOS, now a Member of Congress from California. Then the Red army arrived. Wallenberg was arrested and has not been heard of since.

Almost certainly Raoul Wallenberg was murdered by Stalin. But it could just be he is still alive. We have been trying to find out for years, with no response whatever. He was made an honorary American citizen in 1981. I raised the question with Hungarian Minister of Justice Anton Kulcsar. Not 2 years ago the query would have been dismissed. Not now. The Minister of Justice stated that the fate of Raoul Wallenberg required a "profound investigation."

We welcome such an investigation. And we call on the Soviet Union to contribute to this effort by releasing the prison records of Raoul Wallenberg and accounting for his whereabouts.●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 61—RELATING TO HUMAN RIGHTS IN BURMA

Mr. MOYNIHAN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. CON. RES. 61

Whereas the people of Burma are currently ruled by an unelected military government that does not govern by the consent of the people;

Whereas Burmese citizens from all social classes and ethnic backgrounds are striving to replace military rule with a democratic government;

Whereas hundreds of thousands of Burmese citizens demonstrated peacefully for democratic change in August and September 1988;

Whereas the Burmese Government violently suppressed these peaceful demonstrations, killing thousands of unarmed civilians and forcing others to flee for their lives;

Whereas the Government of Burma has pledged to hold free and fair elections in Burma by May 1990;

Whereas despite this commitment, the Burmese military has heightened restrictions on Burma's political opposition, imprisoning hundreds of political activists and placing National League of Democracy leaders Aung San Suu Kyi and U Tin Oo under house arrest;

Whereas the Government of Burma has also continued to obstruct peaceful opposition protests and has continued to use deadly force against demonstrators;

Whereas the procedural rights of persons charged with political offenses have been severely curtailed through martial law orders bestowing judicial authority on military commanders and empowering them to conduct summary trials that lack basic safeguards; and

Whereas independent human rights monitors report patterns of severe beatings of opposition activists during interrogations, in some cases leading to death: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress—

(1) calls upon the Government of Burma to—

(A) remove house arrest orders imposed on Aung San Suu Kyi and U Tin Oo;

(B) release all persons imprisoned for the peaceful expression of their views;

(C) abandon martial law restrictions on the right to a fair trial and provide all persons charged with crimes with access to lawyers and family members, adequate time to prepare defenses, and the opportunity to have cases heard by an impartial tribunal;

(D) order thorough investigations of reports of torture and pursue prosecutions against those believed to be responsible for mistreatment of detainees;

(E) permit opposition political parties to operate freely in Burma and, in particular, to exercise their rights of free association, expression, and assembly without fear of arrest, imprisonment, or prosecution; and

(F) maintain its commitment to hold free and fair elections in Burma by May 1990;

(2) calls upon all nations to withhold foreign assistance from the Government of Burma until a democratically elected government assumes office; and

(3) calls upon the President, the Secretary of State, the United States Permanent Representative to the United Nations, and the United States Ambassador to Burma to—

(A) condemn publicly the heightened level of repression in Burma; and

(B) encourage free and fair elections by May 1990 and the provision of international observers for such elections.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 62—RELATING TO POLITICAL ASYLUM TO JOSEPH PATRICK DOHERTY

Mr. DODD submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. CON. RES. 62

Whereas Joseph Patrick Doherty, a citizen of the Republic of Ireland and of the United Kingdom, was convicted in a special non-jury British Diplock court in 1981 of offenses related to an incident involving the death of a British Army soldier and was sentenced to life imprisonment;

Whereas Joseph Patrick Doherty escaped from prison and fled to the United States, where he was arrested on June 18, 1983, pursuant to a deportation warrant;

Whereas Joseph Patrick Doherty has been a prisoner in the Federal prison system since June 18, 1983, solely because of extradition proceedings and charges of having illegally entered the United States;

Whereas on June 28, 1983, the United Kingdom, acting through the United States Department of Justice, requested the extradition of Joseph Patrick Doherty to the United Kingdom;

Whereas on Dec. 12, 1984, the United States District Court of the Southern District of New York in the action styled Matter of Doherty, 599 F.Supp. 270 (1984), denied the request for extradition on the ground that the acts for which the British government sought Joseph Patrick Doherty were within the political offense exception of the then existing extradition treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom;

Whereas on November 14, 1988, the Board of Immigration Appeals ruled to allow Joseph Patrick Doherty to apply for political asylum in the United States, superseding an earlier order by the Attorney General of the United States ordering Joseph Patrick Doherty deported to the same country (the United Kingdom) to which his extradition had been previously denied.

Whereas in so ruling the Board of Immigration Appeals expressly stated that Joseph Patrick Doherty had submitted sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie claim of a well-founded fear of persecution if returned to the United Kingdom; and

Whereas on June 18, 1989, Joseph Patrick Doherty began his seventh year of federal confinement, despite the fact that he has never been convicted of, nor even charged with, a criminal offense in the United States—circumstances which only serve to heighten legitimate concerns about the most fundamental violations of basic due process rights; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That—

(1) the Congress commends the decision of the Board of Immigration Appeals to allow Joseph Patrick Doherty to apply for political asylum in the United States, and expresses its concern at the decisions of Attorney Generals Meese and Thornburgh, which in ignoring successive decisions in favor of Joseph Patrick Doherty duly rendered by immigration judges and by the BIA, raise serious issues of denial of due process; and

(2) it is the sense of Congress that—

(A) the Attorney General of the United States should respect the decision of the BIA and permit Joseph Patrick Doherty the hearing ordered by the BIA on his claim for political asylum; and

(B) Joseph Patrick Doherty's request to be released on bond, pending the final outcome of the immigration proceedings, should be immediately addressed.

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the American people correctly react with revulsion to violations of human rights around the world. Earlier this summer, the American people were shocked by events in the People's Republic of China, as a government unconstrained by the rule of law systematically denied the Chinese people their basic human rights. Regrettably, these conditions continue to this day. If nothing else, they should serve to remind us all of the importance of the rule of law and the need for an unwavering commitment to constitutional guarantees and the protection of individual rights. With respect to that commitment, I want to direct the attention of the Senate to the case of Joseph Patrick Doherty.

Joe Doherty is a citizen of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. he was arrested on June 18, 1983, while at work in New York City. Since then, except for periods of unjustified solitary confinement in upstate New York, Joe Doherty has been locked up in the Metropolitan Correctional Center in Manhattan, a Federal facility designed for short-term, pretrial detention.

Joe Doherty's incarceration, however, has been neither short-term nor pretrial. The day of June 18, 1989 marked the beginning of his 7th year of confinement there, and he continues to be the longest held prisoner in the history of the Metropolitan Correctional Center. Moreover, Doherty has been neither convicted of any crime in this country, nor even charged with any offense more serious than illegal entry.

Mr. President, confining an individual for more than 6 years without charging him with, let alone convicting him of, anything more serious than illegal entry should set off alarm bells in the consciences of all Americans. In America, people are not supposed to be imprisoned without just cause. In America, an individual charged with an offense is entitled to rapid and fair disposition of his case. That is the first reason why Congress should protest the continuing mistreatment of Joseph Patrick Doherty.

The other reason is that the Justice Department has consistently refused to abide by the decisions of properly constituted judicial bodies regarding the Doherty case. On December 12, 1984, the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York denied the Justice Department's request that Joe Doherty be extradited to the United Kingdom. Twice the administration sought to have this ruling overturned. Twice more the administration's assertions were rejected by the courts. Following this outcome, Doherty requested deportation to the Republic of Ireland. Three times the Government made its case, claiming in the end that Doherty's return to the United Kingdom was essential to further the administration's foreign policy objectives. Three times, the Justice Department's case for having Doherty deported only to the United Kingdom was rejected by the Justice Department's own immigration officials.

I believe that the Justice Department is entitled to take a position in a case of this nature, if it thinks it must do so in support of a broader Government interest or policy. I may not agree with the policy in the Doherty case, for example, but the Justice Department is entitled to its day in court. It is essential, however, that the Justice Department abide by the final outcome of litigation. If it does not, it undermines the rule of law in this country.

In the Doherty case, the Attorneys General have consistently claimed the power to review the final results of legal proceedings, and to overrule them. On July 14, 1988, Attorney General Meese, as one of his last official acts before stepping down, overruled the decisions of administrative law bodies, and ordered Doherty deported to the United Kingdom. On November 14, 1988, the Board of Immigration Appeals held that Joe Doherty was entitled to apply for political asylum in this country. On June 30, 1989, Attorney General Thornburgh overruled this decision, denying Doherty a hearing on his request for political asylum.

Mr. President, the decisions of the Attorney General in this case make a mockery of our justice system. It is one thing for an Attorney General to direct people under his charge to pursue a particular course in litigation. It is quite another, however, for an Attorney General to make himself judge as well as prosecutor. Such an aggrandizement of power seriously threatens the impartial application of justice in this country. It is to be expected from a kangaroo court in China, but not from the chief law enforcement officer of the United States of America.

In response to the Justice Department's mistreatment of Joe Doherty, I am today introducing, along with my distinguished colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH, a concurrent resolution regarding this case. This resolution commends the Board of Immigration Appeals for its decision that Joe Doherty be permitted to apply for political asylum in this country, and calls on the Attorney General to recant his recent order overruling this Board of Immigration Appeals' decision. In addition, this resolution calls on authorities to give immediate consideration to Joe Doherty's request to be released on bond, pending the completion of immigration proceedings.

Mr. President, we cannot and should not tolerate human rights abuses anywhere in the world, neither abroad in Beijing, nor at home in New York. Such abuses are completely antithetical to the ideals of freedom and democracy that we cherish so deeply, and constitute a threat to us all. For this reason, we owe it to ourselves, if not to Joe Doherty himself, to protest the Justice Department's actions in this case by approving this concurrent resolution.●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 63—RELATING TO THE MARITIME POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BREAUX (for himself, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. PELL, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. EXON, Mr. SASSER, Mr. GORE, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. PRYOR) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. CON. RES. 63

Whereas a strong and economically healthy United States-flag merchant marine has been encouraged and promoted since the founding of this Nation to provide essential service to the national defense of the United States, and to promote our commerce in foreign and domestic markets;

Whereas the United States merchant marine has historically been an integral element of national security and defense policy;

Whereas the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 governs international ocean shipping practices, thus contravening the inclusion of maritime transportation issues in multilateral trade regimes;

Whereas the Congress and the President, in excluding maritime transportation services from the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement, recognized the unique national security aspects of this industry; and

Whereas any trade agreement restricting the power of Congress to foster and promote the United States-flag merchant marine would be contrary to the national defense and economic security policy of this Nation: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress strongly urges the President to ensure that the United States does not submit a proposal to include maritime transportation in the forthcoming General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade discussions regarding Agreement on Tariffs and Trade discussions regarding trade-in-services industries, that any proposals made by other nations to include maritime transportation are opposed by the United States, and that any other proposals which could result in a contraction of the United States-flag merchant marine or could restrain or restrict the ability of the Congress to adopt new measures relating to United States maritime policy are opposed by the United States, because of the disastrous impact such proposals would have on the merchant marine, national security, and existing regimes for addressing unfair ocean transportation practices, and because such results would gravely imperil the outcome of the entire negotiation.

● Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, today I am submitting a Senate concurrent resolution which urges the administration to refrain from placing maritime services on the table during the GATT negotiations. I am pleased to be joined in this effort by: Senators HOLLINGS, PELL, SASSER, GORE, EXON, HEFLIN, PRYOR, LEVIN, and ADAMS.

I introduced a similar resolution last year, Senate Concurrent Resolution 166, and had hoped that the new administration would refrain from any discussion that maritime services be included in the upcoming round of GATT negotiations.

Maritime services cannot be considered in the same light as other services, such as telecommunications, banking or insurance. While those industries are certainly important to the national economy, they are not essential components of our national defense and security. These businesses are international in nature and it is quite logical that they would be considered during the GATT negotiations which are aimed at opening up new worldwide markets.

The merchant marine, and the associated laws programs for its support, however, are vastly different from those other commercial services. Our national defense and security are based in large part upon the existence of a domestic merchant marine, and upon the ability to move large volumes of goods overseas during a time of national emergency.

Any attempt to open up the U.S. maritime markets, is a direct threat to our merchant marine industry. For the last decade, the U.S. fleet has faced relentless foreign competition, and the effects of this competition can be seen in the declining number of ships in operation, idled shipyards, and a shrinking share of the world market. It is unwise and unsound to take a step now that will encourage foreign competition in the last protected maritime market, especially since the competition would be from East bloc and Third World nations.

In 1987, a propsal was made to open the United States maritime markets as part of the Canada-United States Free-Trade Agreement. In response to that proposal, 55 Senators joined me in sponsoring Senate Concurrent Resolution 69, which called on the administration to withdraw maritime services from the negotiating table. Our efforts were successful and maritime services were withdrawn from consideration, and there is no reason why these services should be included in the broader framework of the GATT.

Mr. President, there is no question that the U.S. maritime industry is in serious difficulty. The head of the military transportation command, General Cassidy, has stated repeatedly, in my committee and others, his concern about the ability of the U.S. Merchant Marine to respond to a national emergency. He has been calling for steps to revitalize all segments of the merchant marine; ship building, operations and manpower, to ensure its ability to meet national defense needs. In light of this, it is inconceivable that this administration would propose something which would have a direct, immediate and adverse impact upon our merchant marine.

The concurrent resolution will convey to the administration the strongly held belief within the Congress that maritime services should not be part of international negotiations, any more than any other national defense area should be on the table.●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 64—CALLING FOR THE EXTRADITION OF SHEIK ABDUL OBEID TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself and Mr. DECONCINI) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 64

Whereas freedoms throughout the world are under attack from cowards commonly known as terrorists;

Whereas these terrorists ply their trade, hidden in shadows, with attacks against the innocent and defenseless;

Whereas among the victims who suffer at the hands of these cowards are those who are held hostage, often for periods that extend into years;

Whereas these gangsters now have taken to executing their captives;

Whereas one of their victims is a brave United States Marine Lieutenant Colonel, William R. Higgins, who was murdered after being ensnared in February 1988;

Whereas when he was seized, Lieutenant Colonel Higgins was in the service of his country and the world, as a man charged with keeping the peace, on a United Nations mission;

Whereas a leader of terrorists, Sheik Abdul Obeid, has admitted, by his own words, that he is responsible for the kidnapping of Lieutenant Colonel Higgins;

Whereas Lieutenant Colonel Higgins was tortured and murdered;

Whereas Obeid is in the custody of the Israeli Government;

Whereas Obeid's terror gang, Hezbollah, has been identified by the United States Department of Defense as being responsible for many attacks against Americans, including the cowardly murder of 241 United States Marines in Beirut in 1983; and

Whereas the Hezbollah gang and its chief, Abdul Obeid, were identified as being responsible for the 1985 hijacking of Trans World Airlines Flight 847 and the cold-blooded torture and murder of United States Navy diver Robert Stetham: Now, therefore, be it

(1) calls upon the President and the Secretary of State to take the action deemed necessary to demonstrate American resolve; and

(2) calls upon the President—

(A) to seek the immediate extradition of Abdul Obeid from Israel to the United States pursuant to the 1962 extradition convention between the United States and Israel; and

(B) to ensure that, upon entry into the United States, Obeid is arrested on charges regarding the kidnapping and murder of Lieutenant Colonel Higgins and prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law under sections 1203 and 2331 of title 18, United States Code.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise to submit a concurrent resolution urging the President to seek the extradition of Shiek Obeid, the individual responsible for the kidnapping of Lt. Col. William Higgins and other American hostages.

Terrorists must be held accountable for their actions. Obeid should be tried in a U.S. court of law for his crimes. This resolution is intended to ensure that Obeid is brought to justice.

Mr. President, every means within our power must be used to combat terrorism. That includes a military response, where appropriate, and it means diplomatic initiatives. Certainly, the President has, in the last week, pursued every possibility in an effort to resolve this latest hostage crisis. Diplomacy seems to be having some positive effect. The Governments of Iran and Syria have heard the message loud and clear: The United States won't tolerate their giving safe haven to terrorists. Their hospitality to terrorists gives them influence over the terrorists, and our message has been, use that influence to end the killing.

But, we must do more. We need to put an end to terrorism. Enforcing the rule of law against these criminals is a step toward that goal. News reports indicate that Obeid is frightened about being tried in a U.S. court. That shows the power of the rule of law.

We can't let this opportunity pass. No one has paid for the murders of Americans killed when our Beruit Embassy was blown up. And, there has been no accountability for the murder of our marines in Lebanon. Buckley's torturers and killers have not been called to account. And we've taken no action against the masterminds behind Pan Am 103.

Our caution threatens to paralyze us. The Israelis caught a big fish in this terrorist network. Let's put him out of business in a U.S. court of law.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 65—ESTABLISHING DRUG COMMITTEES ON THE TWO HOUSES OF CONGRESS

Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. D'AMATO) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. CON. RES. 65

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring),

The following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, and shall continue and have the power to act until their successors are appointed, with leave to report by bill or otherwise on matters within their respective jurisdiction, provided that said committees shall cease to exist five years after their appointment:

Committee on National Drug Control Policy of the Senate and Committee on National Drug Control Policy of the House of Representatives, to which committees shall be referred all proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the subject of illicit narcotics.

The said committees shall consist of the chairman and ranking minority members of the following committees:

Committee on Appropriations;
Committee on Armed Services;
Committee on the Budget;
Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation (Senate);

Committee on Intelligence;
Committee on the Judiciary;
Committee on Labor and Judiciary; Committee on Labor and Human Resources (Senate); and Committee on Education and Labor (House)

together with the Minority leaders of the two Houses and in the case of the House, the Speaker, and in the case of the Senate, the majority leader.

Provided, that any committee shall have the right to have referred to them for their recommendations back to the Drug Committee, any matter in any bill under their jurisdiction.

Provided further, That no hearings involving the testimony of the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy or either of his two deputies shall be conducted by any other committee of the Congress, except for the Committee on Drugs.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 66—TO ESTABLISH A JOINT DRUG COMMITTEE IN THE TWO HOUSES OF CONGRESS

Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. D'AMATO) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. CON. RES. 66

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring),

The following joint committee shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, and shall continue and have the power to act until successors are appointed, with leave to report by bill or otherwise on matters within its jurisdiction, provided that the said committee shall cease to exist five years after its appointment:

Committee on National Drug Control Policy of the Senate and House of Representatives, to which committee shall be referred all proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the subject of illicit narcotics.

The committee shall consist of the chairmen and ranking minority members of the following committees:

Committee on Energy and Commerce (House);
Committee on Foreign Relations (Senate); Committee on Foreign Affairs (House);
Committee on the Judiciary;
Committee on Labor and Human Resources (Senate);
Committee on Education and Labor (House)

together with the minority leaders of the two Houses and in the case of the House, the Speaker and one designee each of the Speaker and the minority leader, and in the case of the Senate, the majority leader, and two designees each of the two leaders.

Provided, That any committee shall have the right to have referred to them for their recommendations back to the Drug Committee, any matter in any bill under their jurisdiction.

Provided further, That no hearings involving the testimony of the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy or either of his two deputies shall be conducted by any other committee of the Congress, except for the Committee on Drugs.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 67—PROVIDING FOR A CONDITIONAL RECESS OR ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE AND A CONDITIONAL ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. CON. RES. 67

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the Senate recesses or adjourns at the close of business on Friday, August 4, 1989, or Saturday, August 5, 1989, pursuant to a motion made by the majority leader, or his designee, in accordance with this resolution, it stand recessed or adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday, September 6, 1989, or until 12 o'clock noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution, whichever occurs first; and that when the House adjourns on Friday, August 4, 1989, or Saturday, August 5, 1989, pursuant to a motion made by the majority leader, or his designee, in accordance with this resolution, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday, September 6, 1989, or until 12 o'clock noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution, whichever occurs first.

SEC. 2. The majority leader of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, acting jointly after consultation with the minority leader of the Senate and the minority leader of the House, shall notify the Members of the Senate and the House, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

SENATE RESOLUTION 168—RELATING TO THE FREE-TRADE OF LIVESTOCK BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

Mr. DOMENICI (for himself and Mr. GRAMM) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 168

FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) The federal government of the Republic of Mexico recently issued new regulations regarding the importation of livestock

(2) These regulations ban the importation of certain classes of livestock as well as require excessive health restrictions and certification for imported animals

(3) These regulations erect barriers to livestock trade between the two countries

(4) These regulations are not consistent with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade which advocates free trade between all nations and the elimination of tariff and non-tariff trade barriers

(5) The Republic of Mexico is a member of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the Sense of the Congress that conditions have recently developed in the livestock trade between the United States and the Republic of Mexico such that the Secretary of Agriculture and the United States Trade Representative should review this grave situation in an expeditous manner and work with the appropriate officials in the Republic of Mexico to achieve free livestock trade between the two nations.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I was hopeful that on the disaster assistance bill for agriculture producers we could have adopted a very simple resolution. But the House found the resolution unsatisfactory, even though the Senate adopted it night before last. I would like to take 1 minute to express my views on this resolution, and then reintroduce it. Hopefully it will be referred to the appropriate committee.

In the appropriations bill before us, the appropriations subcommittee, the full committee and, thus, the U.S. Congress is engaged in a capital improvement initiative for United States-Mexico border facilities. Since 1988 and hopefully continuing into 1990, our efforts to improve the border facilities between these countries have been truly gratifying. If one could have seen these border crossings before we started modernization, they were actually—I hesitate to use the word—but they were a disgrace. Not only to our country, but they were also inadequate to handle the commerce between the two countries. We are doing everything we can to increase, in an ordinary, normal, and mutually beneficial manner, the trade between the Republic of Mexico and the United States.

I regret to say that while this improvement is occurring, the Republic of Mexico has recently issued new regulations regarding the importation of livestock. These regulations ban the importation of certain classes of livestock as well as require excessive health restrictions and certification for the importation of animals. These regulations essentially erect barriers to livestock trade between our two countries. They are not consistent with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] which advocates free trade between all nations and the elimination of tariff and non-tariff trade barriers. Mexico has recently joined the GATT.

It seems to me that we ought to send a signal to Mexico that we do not expect to sit by and watch them adopt regulations in the name of health that are excessive and, to a great extent, unreasonable. We do not intend to sit by and watch them deny the export to their country of ewes which the people of Mexico want or need to buy, while our cattle market may soon be filled with Mexican steers. Through this subterfuge, they are denying us access to their markets.

This resolution expresses these concepts. In the RECORD I would like to include the letter which we have sent to the Secretary of Agriculture and to our Trade Representative which sets forth these facts. The letters urge that they enhance efforts to resolve this issue with the appropriate officials in Mexico as soon as possible to see what can be done about returning this aspect of our livestock trade to normalcy.

I send this resolution which is cosponsored by the distinguished junior Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] and letters to the two Cabinet members to the desk. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be appropriately referred and the letters be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, DC, August 5, 1989.

Hon. CLAYTON YEUTTER,
Secretary, Department of Agriculture, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY YEUTTER: We are writing to express our concern that the federal government of the Republic of Mexico has issued anti-trade and discriminatory regulations regarding the importation of livestock. These regulations will act as barriers to trade and will have severe economic impacts on sheep producers in New Mexico and Texas.

Recently, Mexico issued import requirements for all types of livestock. The most significant of these are for slaughter animals. These actions have virtually shut down slaughter sheep and goat exports from the United States to Mexico.

This action by the government of Mexico is a clear, protectionist attempt to inhibit free trade between the two countries. These trade barriers will negatively influence prices received by our producers and damage business relations between the two countries which have taken years to establish.

The Republic of Mexico is a member of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) which advocates the elimination of tariff and non-tariff trade barriers. Mexico's new livestock import regulations are in conflict with these principles.

While Mexico is, in effect, banning sheep and goat imports into that nation, they will be increasing their cattle exports to the United States. Relatively strong U.S. feeder cattle prices, lower duties on steer exports from Mexico and drought conditions in the northern states of Mexico will result in large numbers of steers entering the United States in the coming months. We believe ranches in the United States should have the opportunity to export freely to Mexico, as imports from Mexico enter this country.

We have sponsored and introduced a Resolution (enclosed) expressing the sense of the Senate on this grave situation. We ask that you enhance your investigation of the recent actions by the government of Mexico, and, in the most expeditious manner, work to achieve free livestock trade between our countries.

We look forward to your response and seeing this difficult issue quickly resolved.

Sincerely,

PHIL GRAMM,
U.S. Senator.
PETER V. DOMENICI,
U.S. Senator.

SENATE RESOLUTION 169—RELATING TO THE EFFORTS OF DOBROSLAV PARAGA FOR HUMAN RIGHTS IN YUGOSLAVIA

Mr. DIXON (for Mr. RIEGLE, for himself, Mr. SIMON, Mr. DIXON, Mr. HELMS, Mr. LEVIN, and Mr. KENNEDY) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 169

Whereas Dobroslav Paraga, who has twice been adopted as a prisoner of conscience by Amnesty International, has endured hardship for openly calling on the Yugoslav government to honor its commitments under the Helsinki Accords to respect the fundamental human rights of all the citizens of Yugoslavia,

Whereas Dobroslav Paraga has been tried on three occasions by Yugoslav courts, the initial charge being that, in 1980, he, along with a Jewish Croatian student, Ernest Brajder, authored a petition opposing torture in Yugoslavia and calling for the release of political prisoners;

Whereas, as a result, both men were arrested and, three days later, Ernest Brajder died under what the Department of State calls "mysterious circumstances";

Whereas, in 1986, Mr. Paraga sued the government of Yugoslavia for injuries, both physical and psychological, inflicted on him by prison authorities during his imprisonment;

Whereas the regime and court in Zagreb denied him a fair and just trial, an account of which was set forth in the Department of State's annual Country Report on Human Rights Practices for 1987;

Whereas the Yugoslav Government forbade Mr. Paraga in 1987 to speak out publicly in any way about his experiences as a political prisoner;

Whereas, in violation of that order of silence, Dobroslav Paraga has come to the West to speak out about human rights abuses in Yugoslavia;

Whereas, upon his return to Yugoslavia, Dobroslav Paraga risks imprisonment again because of his open criticism of the Yugoslav Government's human rights abuses;

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the Government of Yugoslavia, in recognition of the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, should guarantee its citizens fundamental human rights and freedoms;

(2) the Yugoslav Government should grant unconditional amnesty to all political prisoners;

(3) the Government of Yugoslavia should dismiss the charges currently pending against human rights activist Dobroslav Paraga, allow him and his family to return to their home in Croatia, and end all forms of harassment against him and his family; and

(4) the Government of Yugoslavia should conduct an investigation into the death of Ernest Brajder, who, according to the Department of State, died under "mysterious circumstances", and should make its findings public.

SENATE RESOLUTION 170—TO ESTABLISH A DRUG COMMITTEE IN THE SENATE

Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. D'AMATO) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. RES. 170

Resolved,

The following standing committee shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, and shall continue and have the power to act until successors are appointed, with leave to report by bill or otherwise on matters within its jurisdiction, provided that the said committee shall cease to exist five years after its appointment:

Committee on National Drug Control Policy of the Senate to which committee shall be referred all proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the subject of illicit narcotics.

The said committee shall consist of the Chairman and Ranking Minority members of the following Committees:

Committee on Appropriations;
Committee on Armed Services;
Committee on the Budget;
Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation;
Committee on Finance; Committee on Foreign Relations;
Committee on Intelligence;
Committee on the Judiciary; and Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

together with the Majority and Minority Leaders.

Provided, That any committee shall have the right to have referred to them for their recommendations back to the Drug Committee, any matter in any bill under their jurisdiction.

Provided further, That no hearings involving the testimony of the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy or either of his two deputies shall be conducted by any other committee, except for the Committee on Drugs.

SENATE RESOLUTION 171—APPOINTING A SENATE DELEGATION TO HOST A CONFERENCE ON GLOBAL ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

Mr. GORE (for himself, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. PELL, Mr. BAUCUS, and Mr. WIRTH) submitted the following amendment; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 171

Resolved, That (a) (1) the President pro tempore of the Senate is authorized to appoint a special delegation of Members of the Senate (hereafter in this resolution referred to as the "delegation") that shall host an international conference, to be held in the United States, on global environmental issues, as described in paragraph (2).

(2) The conference referred to in paragraph (1) is a conference held for the purpose of discussing the implications of the global environmental threat to the peoples of the world, conceptions regarding measures to contain further damage, measures to deal with damage which is already in the process of materializing, and the problem of allocating a just share of the responsibilities and burdens involved in the essential, common task.

(b) The Senate delegation shall be composed of five Members of the Senate, appointed as follows:

(2) Three Members of the Senate from the minority party, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendation of the Minority Leader.

(c) Any vacancy in the membership of the delegation shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

SEC. 2(a) (1). The Chairman shall designate Senate employees who shall provide professional staff support and expertise for the delegation. Only such staff members and secretaries who are employees of a Senator or a Senate Committee may perform professional services for the delegation.

(2) The Majority Leader, in consultation with the Chairman, shall designate such a Senate employee to be Chief Counsel to the delegation.

(b) Only designated delegation staff may participate in the official activities of the delegation.

SEC. 3(a). All administrative support and services for the delegation shall be provided by the Office of the Secretary of the Senate, under the direction of the Secretary.

(b) The Secretary is authorized, from funds made available under section 4, to employ such staff at an annual rate of pay, and incur such expenses, including official reception and representation expenses, as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out his duties and functions for the delegation.

(c) In carrying out his functions, the Secretary may, with the prior approval of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, procure the temporary (not to exceed one year) or intermittent service of individual consultants, or organizations thereof, in the same manner and under the same conditions as a standing committee of the Senate may procure such services.

SEC. 4. The expenses of the delegation, as authorized under section 3, including the employment of consultants, shall not exceed $500,000 and shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, out of the account of Miscellaneous Items, upon vouchers approved by the Secretary of the Senate, after consultation with the Chairman and the Majority Leader (except that vouchers shall not be required for the disbursement of salaries of employees who are paid at an annual rate).

SEC. 5. The delegation may submit periodic reports on its activities to the Senate and shall submit a final report at the time of its termination.

SEC. 6. This resolution shall terminate at the conclusion of the One hundred-first Congress.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

OILSPILL COMPENSATION AND LIABILITY ACT

STEVENS AMENDMENT NO. 686

Mr. STEVENS proposed an amendment to amendment No. 666 proposed by Mr. BREAUX to the bill (S. 686) to consolidate and improve laws providing compensation and establishing liability for oilspills, as follows:

Amendment No. 666, to make certain perfecting amendments to S. 686, is amended on page 41 by inserting after line 20 the following new paragraph:

"(3) for any claims against the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund, the term "damages" shall include but not be limited to the loss of taxes, fees, royalties, rents, or other revenues incurred by a political subdivision of a state due to the injury, destruction, or loss of real property, personal property, or natural resources, or diminished economic activity due to the discharge. This definition shall be deemed to be effective as of January 1, 1989.

STEVENS AMENDMENT NO. 687

Mr. STEVENS proposed an amendment, which was subsequently modified, to the bill S. 686, supra, as follows:

On page 30, line 17, after the period, insert the following new sentence:

Mr. STEVENS proposed an amendment to the bill S. 686, supra, as follows:

On page 34, after line 4, insert:

S. 686 is amended by adding the following new subsection to section 103:

"(k) In the expenditure of Federal funds for removal of oil, including, but not limited to, distribution of supplies construction and other reasonable and appropriate activities, which may be carried out by contract or agreement with private persons, preference shall be given, to the extent feasible and practicable, to those private persons residing or doing business primarily in the area affected by the discharge of oil. This section shall not be considered to restrict the use of the Department of Defense resources.".

STEVENS (AND KERRY) AMENDMENT NO. 689

Mr. STEVENS (for himself and Mr. KERRY) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 686, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place insert:

SCIENTIFIC SUPPORT FOR MAJOR COASTAL AND MARINE OILSPILLS

SEC. 20X (a) REQUIREMENT FOR SCIENTIFIC SUPPORT.—The Secretary of Commerce shall maintain a staff of experts trained in oceanography, marine biology, chemistry, computer and environmental sciences to respond to major oilspills in coastal and marine waters. Selected members of this staff shall be colocated with Coast Guard District offices and available to assist Federal On-Scene Coordinators in the discharge of their duties.

(b) FUNCTIONS OF THE SCIENTIFIC SUPPORT TEAM.—The functions of the scientific support team referred to subsection (a) shall be as follows:

(1) Provide for coordination of scientific activity and serve as a clear point of contact between the scientific community and the Federal On-Scene Coordinator during major oilspills;

(2) Forecast the movement and spreading of oilspills in the marine environment;

(3) Develop a computerized atlas of the environmental sensitivity of the coastline of the United States to oil pollution, indicating priorities for the protection of especially sensitive or vulnerable sections of the coast in the event of spill impacts;

(4) Develop a state-of-the-art mobile chemical laboratory of rapid deployment to the scene of major spills for the purpose of determining the composition and degradation of spilled oil and its effects on fisheries and other natural resources;

(5) Conduct systematic analyses of the environmental consequences of various cleanup techniques for the purpose of improving future responses;

(6) Develop computerized methods for managing scientific and operational information during major spills.

(7) Assist in the training of state and local government personnel in the scientific aspects of spill response.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF FUNDING.—For the purposes of this section, there are authorized to be made available to the Department of Commerce, $5,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1989 through 1999. Any such funds shall be provided from the Trans-Alaskan Pipeline Liability Fund in accordance with the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C. 1651 et seq.).

METZENBAUM AMENDMENT NO. 690

Mr. METZENBAUM proposed an amendment to the bill S. 686, supra, as follows:

On page 14, line 23, and page 15, line 11, strike "$500" and insert in lieu therof "$1,000".

On page 15, line 3, strike "$300" and insert in lieu thereof "$600".

On page 15, line 8, 11, and 13, and page 16, line 23, strike "$100,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$350,000,000".

METZENBAUM (AND GORTON) AMENDMENT NO. 691

Mr. METZENBAUM (for himself and Mr. GORTON) proposed an amendment, which was subsequently modified, to the bill S. 686, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place in the liability provision of this bill, insert the following:

SEC. . INCREASE IN LIABILITY FOR CERTAIN OILSPILLS, EXTENSION OF LIABILITY WITHOUT FAULT TO AREAS OF THE ARCTIC.

"The owner or operator of any facility, the holder of any lease, right-of-way or permit for oil exploration, development, or transportation shall be liable, under this Act, for all damages, and removal costs, sustained by any person, that arise out of or directly result from the discharge or substantial threat of discharge of oil from—

"(A) the Trans-Alaska Pipeline;

"(B) fields or reservoirs supplying oil to the Trans-Alaska Pipeline; and

"(C) onshore oil and gas exploration, development or transportation activities in areas on Alaska's North Slope, including State submerged lands.

"Notwithstanding section 204(a)(2) of the Trans-Alaska Oil Pipeline Act of 1973 (Public Law 93-153), liability under this section shall be limited to $350,000,000 for any one incident. Liability for such damages shall be in accord with the ordinary rules of negligence.".

CHAFEE AMENDMENT NO. 692

Mr. CHAFEE proposed an amendment to the bill S. 686, supra, as follows:

(1) Amend the third sentence of section 102(d)(1) to read as follows:

"Sums recovered by the United States Government as trustee under this subsection shall be retained by the trustee, without further appropriation, for use only to restore, replace, or acquire the equivalent of such natural resources, except that the use of such sums to acquire land or interests therein shall be subject to further appropriation and used as specifically provided in appropriation Acts.".

(2) Section 103(a)(6) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) the costs of Federal or State efforts to restore, rehabilitate, replace or acquire the equivalent of any natural resources injured, destroyed, or lost as a result of any discharge of oil, except that Federal efforts to acquire land or interests therein shall be subject to such amounts as are specifically provided in appropriation Acts;".

TREASURY, POSTAL SERVICE, EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, AND INDEPENDENT AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1990

NICKLES AMENDMENT NO. 693

Mr. NICKLES proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 2989) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain Independent Agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, as follows:

On page 50, line 25, strike the word "approval," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "approval; provided that this section shall take effect one day after enactment; provided further that the Senate backs the constitutional power of the President to make foreign policy.".

HELMS AMENDMENT NO. 694

Mr. HELMS proposed an amendment to amendment No. 693 proposed by Mr. NICKLES to the bill H.R. 2989, supra, as follows:

Strike all after the word "that" in line 5 of the amendment, and insert the following:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no person who is a retired regular officer of the military service, who was graduated from the United States Naval Academy, who has served in Vietnam, and who has been awarded the Silver Star, the Bronze Star, and two Purple Hearts, shall be considered as holding an office of the United States for purposes of section 2071(b) of title 18 of the United States Code. Upon enactment, this provision will become effective as of May 1, 1989.".

FEDERAL MARITIME COMMISSION AUTHORIZATION ACT

BREAUX AMENDMENT NO. 695

Mr. BYRD (for Mr. BREAUX) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 840) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for the Federal Maritime Commission, and for other purposes, as follows:

At the end, add the following new section:

SEC. 4. (a) Notwithstanding sections 12106 through 12108 of title 46, United States Code, and section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (46 App. U.S.C. 883), the Secretary of Transportation may issue a certificate of documentation for employment in the coastwise trade or fisheries, or both, for the following vessels:

(1) African Queen, United States official number 947514 and Florida registration number FL 9357CE;

(2) American Empire, United States Official number 553645;

(3) HMS Discovery, Washington State registration number WAZ 9816 F; and

(4) Papa Joe, Florida registration number FL 3900CW.

(b) Notwithstanding sections 508 and 510(g) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 App. U.S.C. 1158 and 1160(g)), section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (46 App. U.S.C. 883), and United States Department of Transportation Contract Numbered MA-3915 and amendments thereto, the Secretary of Transportation is authorized to allow, and the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may issue a certificate of documentation for, the vessel M/V Northern Victor (ex Ocean Cyclone, ex Coastal Spartan), United States official number 248959, to acquire, purchase, process, and transport fish and fish products in the fisheries of the United States: Provided, That if the vessel is scrapped, it shall not be scrapped other than in the domestic market without the prior approval of the Secretary of Transportation.

SEC. 4. Notwithstanding section 27 of Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (46 U.S.C. App. 883) and sections 12106 and 12107 of title 46, United States Code, the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating may issue a certificate of documentation for employment in the coastwise trade of the United States for the vessel M/V South Bass (Registration number 949048).

ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS OF CERTAIN CHINESE NATIONALS

KENNEDY AMENDMENT NO. 697

Mr. MITCHELL (for Mr. KENNEDY) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 2712) to facilitate the adjustment or change of status of Chinese nationals in the United States by waiving the 2-year foreign residence requirement for "J" nonimmigrants, as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Emergency Chinese Immigration Relief Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. STATUS OF CERTAIN NATIONALS OF THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA.

(a) WAIVER OF FOREIGN RESIDENCE REQUIREMENT FOR "J" NONIMMIGRANTS.—The 2-year home country residency and physical presence period requirement under section 212(e) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(e)) shall not apply in the case of any national of the People's Republic of China who is present in the United States on the date of the enactment of this Act (or who would have been present in the United States but for a brief, casual, and innocent departure from the United States), who is otherwise eligible for adjustment of status under the Immigration and Nationality Act during the period of time referred to in subsection (d), and who would otherwise be subject to that 2-year home residence requirement because of having had the status of a nonimmigrant described in section 101(a)(15)(J) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15)(J)).

(b) PRESUMPTION OF CONTINUOUS RESIDENCE FOR CERTAIN PRC NATIONALS.—For purposes of any adjustment of status under section 245 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1255) or any change of status under section 248 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1258) in the case of an alien who is a national of the People's Republic of China and who, as of June 5, 1989, was present in the United States in the lawful status of a nonimmigrant (or who would have been present in the United States in the status but for a brief, casual, and innocent departure from the United States), such an alien shall be considered as having continued to maintain lawful status as such a nonimmigrant (and to have maintained continuously a lawful status) for the period described in subsection (d).

(c) EMPLOYMENT AUTHORIZATION.—Any national of the People's Republic of China described in subsection (b) who, as of June 5, 1989, was present in the United States in the lawful status of a nonimmigrant described in subparagraph (F), (J), or (M) of section 101(a)(15) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (or who would have been present in the United States in the status but for a brief, casual, and innocent departure from the United States) shall be granted authorization to engage in employment in the United States and shall be provided with an "employment authorized" endorsement or other appropriate work permit during the period described in subsection (d).

(d) DURATION OF STATUS.—The period of time referred to in subsections (b), (c), and (e) is the period during which the Attorney General has in effect a deferral of enforced departure of nationals of the People's Republic of China.

(e) NOTIFICATION.—In the case of any national of the People's Republic of China who is eligible for deferral of enforced departure pursuant to a directive of the Attorney General during the period described in subsection (d) and whose authorized period of stay as a nonimmigrant has expired, the Attorney General shall, instead of initiating deportation proceedings against the alien (including the service of an order to show cause) during the period described in subsection (d), issue to the alien a notice of expiration of nonimmigrant status. Such notice shall be nonadversarial in nature and shall contain an explanation of the options available to such nationals under the directive of the Attorney General and under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

(f) CHINESE FEELING COERCIVE POPULATION CONTROL POLICIES.—

(1) Pursuant to paragraph (42)(A) of section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(42)(A)), all adjudicators of asylum or refugee status shall give fullest possible consideration to applications from nationals of the People's Republic of China who express a fear of persecution upon return to that country because they refuse to abort a pregnancy or resist surgical sterilization in violation of Chinese Communist Party directives on population, if such refusal is undertaken with full awareness of the urgent priority assigned to such directives by all levels of the Chinese government, and full awareness of the severe consequences which may be imposed for violation of such directives."

(2) In view of the urgent priority assigned to the 'one couple, one child' policy by high level Chinese Communist Party officials and local party cadres at all levels, as well as the severe consequences commonly imposed for violations of that policy, which are regarded as "political dissent," refusal to abort or to be sterilized, as described in subsection (a) of this section, shall be viewed as an act of political defiance justifying a "well-founded fear of persecution" sufficient to establish refugee status under paragraph (42)(A) of section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(42)(A)).

(3) All other factors which may contribute to a determination of asylum or refugee status in such cases are to be given additional weight by asylum and refugee adjudicators, such factors including, but not limited to, overt political activities while in the United States or third countries, membership in an ethnic or religious minority, family background and history, or suspicion of "counterrevolutionary" activities by Chinese Communist Party Officials.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to necessitate a grant of asylum or refugee status to any individual who is ineligible for admission to the United States under section 212(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)).

(5) The Secretary of State and the Attorney General shall, within 30 days of enactment of this section, promulgate regulations and guidelines to carry out the provisions of this section.

(6) Nothing in this section shall be construed as—

(A) Shifting the burden of providing, in each individual case, facts sufficient to establish a claim of asylum or refugee status as described in subsection (a) of this section, from any person making such claim of asylum or refugee status to the Attorney General; or

(B) Requiring the Attorney General to disprove such claim in the absence of proof of facts sufficient to establish a claim of refugee or asylum status as described in subsection (a) of this section by any person making such claim.

(7) The number of persons receiving political asylum status solely because of the provisions of this section shall not exceed 1,000 in any fiscal year.

(8) The Attorney General shall not be obligated to grant political asylum to any person claiming to qualify under subsection (a) if the Attorney General proves by clear and convincing evidence that such person has claimed such status solely for the purposes of evading the immigration laws of the United States.

(9) The provisions of this section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act, and notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (e) of this section or any other provision of law, all adjudicators of asylum or refugee status shall apply the provisions of this section to every case, administrative or judicial proceeding, or appeal that is pending on the date of enactment of this Act, and to any claim that arises on or after such date of enactment.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTING AND PAPERWORK REDUCTION

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Senate Small Business Committee's Subcommittee on Government Contracting and Paperwork Reduction will hold a hearing on Thursday, September 7, 1989, on the implementation of the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1980, Public Law 96-511, and its impact on the small business community, particularly small business Government contractors. This hearing was originally scheduled for Thursday, August 3, 1989. The hearing will be held in room 428A of the Russell Senate Office Building and will commence at 9:30 a.m.

Government witnesses invited to testify include: the Administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs [OIRA] within OMB, which has overall responsibility for the implementation of the Paperwork Reduction Act; the Acting Administrator of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy [OFPP], also within OMB, which has made regulatory simplification and paperwork reduction in procurement a priority initiative; and the chief counsel for advocacy of the Small Business Administration, Frank Swain, who has tirelessly birddogged the agencies regarding paperwork reduction and regulatory flexibility. OFPP's representative will share with the subcommittee the findings and recommendations of a forthcoming report reviewing paperwork burdens in procurement, which was conducted pursuant to the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act Amendments of 1988, Public Law 100-679.

Witnesses from the small business community include representatives of the Small Business Legislative Council, National Small Business United, and the American Subcontractors Association. Leo G. Lauzen, chairman of Comprehensive Accounting Corp. of Aurora, IL, will share with the subcommittee the results of a survey conducted by his firm. Finally, the subcommittee is scheduled to hear from a representative of the Business Council on the Reduction of Paperwork.

The committee intends to transmit the record of this hearing to the Committee on Governmental Affairs, and its Subcommittee on Government Information and Regulation, to assist them in their deliberations concerning the reauthorization of OIRA. OIRA's current authorization expires on September 30, 1989.

Further information concerning the subcommittee's hearing may be obtained from the committee's procurement policy counsel, William B. Montalto. Bill may be reached at 224-5175.

CAROLYN MANUSZAK

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise to join the students, faculty, and administration of Villa Julie College in recognizing 25 years of unprecedented growth and increasing academic excellence under the leadership of Carolyn Manuszak. As Villa Julie's president since 1964, Ms. Manuszak has worked tirelessly and achieved her goals of expanding and improving Villa Julie College.

Rarely have the talent and energy of one person had such impact on so many. When Carolyn Manuszak first took charge, Villa Julie was a financially troubled 2-year women's college known primarily as a secretarial training school. Drawing upon her own determination and guided by an inner vision of what Villa Julie could become, Ms. Manuszak embarked on a mission to revitalize and expand the school's curriculum. In the process, she demonstrated a unique ability to inspire others to share her commitment. Today, Villa Julie College features a co-ed student body of nearly 1,300 and offers both 2- and 4-year degree programs. Its graduates are in great demand throughout the Baltimore area.

Over a quarter of a century, Carolyn Manuszak has shaped and nurtured an innovative academic institution responsive to the needs of its area and its people. By creating programs tailored to the needs of Baltimore's business community, Ms. Manuszak has won essential financial support from private sources. She has secured public grants to expand Villa Julie's liberal arts curriculum and improve its facilities. In addition, Ms. Manuszak has sought to extend the availability of high-quality education to students from all backgrounds. Villa Julie now possesses a generous student aid program, and nearly one-fifth of its students come from economically disadvantaged families.

In 1989, Villa Julie College is a true success story. The accomplishments and lasting contributions of Carolyn Manuszak merit our deepest admiration. I ask that the Baltimore Sun's recent editorial praising Ms. Manuszak and a Baltimore Evening Sun article chronicling her many achievements be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

CAROLYN MANUSZAK'S 25 YEARS AS VILLA JULIE'S PESKY PRESIDENT

(By Stephanie Shapiro)

It was March 1972, and Villa Julie's business manager approached its young president, Carolyn Manuszak, with some bad news. The operating budget was short $25,000. To make matters worse, representatives from the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools would soon be on campus to evaluate Villa Julie. The deficit would not help the school's chances for accreditation.

The next day, Manuszak discussed the crisis with her board of trustees. She knew there was one woman in the room who could help. "I gave this impassioned speech, looking at everybody else except her, telling them Middle States couldn't find us in the hole. If somebody could just come up with this $25,000 . . . The next day she called me," Manuszak says today.

That somebody was Nan Campanella, widow of Joe Campanella, the Baltimore Colts middle guard and general manager. "I haven't really done anything for Villa Julie," Campanella, who has since remarried, explained to Manuszak. Soon, a check for $25,000 arrived.

"Maybe I should have asked for $30,000," Manuszak thought to herself.

For those who know Manuszak as the politely pesky—some might say obsessed—college president who persistently exacts time and money from some of the region's most prominent businessmen and community leaders, this tale is typical.

"She gets you in a position where you feel indecent saying no," says Walter Sondheim Jr., chairman of the Charles Center-Inner Harbor Management Corp. and member of Villa Julie's Resource Development Council.

But if a fortune teller had told Manuszak this story before she came to Villa Julie, she probably wouldn't believe it. "So much of what I have become in 25 years is because I was given this responsibility and I took it seriously. In doing that, I think I developed in a whole different way than I would have otherwise. I would have been a really good English teacher."

Instead, she became a really good college president. "If there's any such thing as a perfect administrator, she's probably it," says George Russell Jr., a Piper & Marbury law partner who serves on Villa Julie's board of trustees.

Tomorrow, Villa Julie's 25th commencement under Manuszak's watch will take place. In that time, the Stevenson, Md., college, founded in 1947, has grown from a tiny, two-year girls school to a fully accredited, four-year co-ed college with nearly 1,300 full- and part-time students.

The college has expanded its curriculum from two to 28 liberal arts and business programs fine tuned to current technology. Paralegal, accounting, computer and business graduates are snatched up quickly by employers and are well paid. The school's budget is balanced and the endowment is growing. Tuition is kept at a manageable level, and three quarters of the student body receive financial aid.

Increasingly, the school is making a strong effort to educate low-income and minority students with summer programs and special courses that bridge the gap between high school and college-level work. "Villa Julie, without question, is the only institution in this state that understands how to take kids from the depths of poverty and prepare that student for the business world," Russell says.

An astutely assembled board of trustees and various advisory boards studded with big names raise money for the institution and guide its future. And thanks to Virginia Tanner, Villa Julie's politely pesky public relations director, probably known to every reporter in the region, the school has a highly visible public image.

Manuszak was a tenacious young nun and English instructor at Trinity College in Washington when Sister Mary Daniel Turner, the provincial superior of the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur, the order that founded Villa Julie, directed Sister Carolyn to lead the school as its president.

"I don't know what I would have said if she had asked me. I may have said no," Manuszak says.

On the job, she learned how to be a college president. When she arrived on campus, Manuszak had to dispose of a room full of refrigerators and stoves, the legacy of Villa Julie's defunct home economics program. Routinely, she, her secretary, the business manager and dean worked until 11:30 p.m. typing and duplicating grant applications and rushing them to the post office to be postmarked by midnight.

Manuszak traveled by bus to college administration conferences as far away as Chicago. There was no such thing as plane fare, let alone a development office. She called on high school guidance counselors herself to drum up interest in the growing school. And she taught.

Eventually, Villa Julie no longer teetered on the brink of extinction, and Manuszak even had time to receive her law degree and pass the bar. Today, she sits in her sunny office on the pretty green campus, prim in a light gray suit and a paisley, flowered blouse. She wears an engraved pendant watch, a 25th anniversary present from Villa Julie students who recently surprised her with a party in her honor. Her German shepherd Cara sleeps in a corner of the office. Her conversation is a mingling of idealistic visions—Villa Julie doesn't have a niche, it "has a destiny"—cliches, shop talk, pep talk, literary quotations, introspection and an honest attempt to deflect credit for the school's growth. She jumps from topic to topic, bristling a bit when the subject turns to her. "When you get on me, I get very nervous," she says.

Known simply as Carolyn by friends and colleagues, Manuszak is an intensely private person. Quick snapshots of her psyche appear in the course of a conversation. Her voice breaks when she talks about Thea, a dog who died of a heart attack in her arms. And she seems to struggle to square her professional role and her personal well being. "Success I measure in numbers and buildings and programs. But I think it's a very, very empty [way to measure success.] In fact, my friends tell me that I don't ever sit back and enjoy it. And I really don't because I think of what's the next hurdle."

In 1979, Manuszak left the order. She has little to say about her decision. She speaks with a smile of her board and the student body that accepted her decision without hesitation. And she tries, without publicly plumbing her soul, to explain. "I think I'm a better person for it, but I don't think it's anybody's business."

Manuszak is still, she stresses, a woman of faith. On long walks with Cara on the rural Villa Julie campus, she has time to reflect and meditate. "I don't think I'm any different from any other person that's in a responsible position. You have to make time for something like that. That's the kind of thing I was telling the students. You can't just be responding and initiating and never stopping to think about what does it all mean. You would lose perspective. The saddest thing is to be on the fast track and to forget what it's all about."

Manuszak, who won't divulge her age, continues to plot Villa Julie's future, brainstorm with students, staff and faculty, and surprise her board with bold ideas and giant leaps of faith. How much longer?

"Somebody said to me once, one of my faculty who came two years after I did, 'How long are you going to stay here?'

"I said, 'I don't know. How long are you going to stay here?'

"And she said, 'Until it stops being a challenge and until it stops being exciting.' "

"VILLA WHO?" NO MORE

At the time a young nun assumed the presidency of Villa Julie College 25 years ago, the tiny Catholic secretarial school for women (100 students, 12 professors) was an eminently forgettable institution. When its name was mentioned, most Baltimoreans asked, "Villa who?"

That is no longer the case. Under the leadership of Carolyn Manuszak (who left the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur in 1979), an independent Villa Julie has emerged as an exemplary business-oriented college offering two-year and four-year degrees. Its graduates are in hot demand. The student body has mushroomed to 1,300, the faculty to more than 200.

The Greater Baltimore Committee's study of the bleak higher-education scene concluded that Villa Julie was one of the few bright spots because "it stands out as a model provider of high-quality technical education that is responsive to the needs of the changing economy . . . Few institutions are as widely acclaimed by employers as this one."

Ms. Manuszak has continued to insist that students at the Green Spring Valley school receive both a core liberal-arts education and technologically relevant job training. Each of the college's programs has an advisory board of local businessmen that ensures students are taught what employers want them to know. Courses are tailored to meet specific needs of Baltimore's businesses.

Students learn more than a trade; they gain a breadth of knowledge employers praise. For every Villa Julie graduate, there is an average of 10 job offers. Nearly all 1988 graduates were employed or went on to further study within two months.

Success in placing students with companies has also spawned success in fund-raising. A five-year, $10 million capital campaign hit its goal a year ahead of schedule. Private contributions as a percent of revenues more than doubled in six years. And a scholarship fund to honor Ms. Manuszak's silver anniversary has topped $1 million.

All this helps the school keep tuition low—half the average tuition for a private college in Maryland—and increases student aid. That is crucial because 19 percent of the students come from poverty-level families and 70 percent work to finance their education.

Forming a close partnership with business has made Villa Julie a leader in its field. It provides students, at a relatively inexpensive price, both on arts and science background and up-to-date job skills that virtually assure graduates good jobs. That's quite an accomplishment for a college that was a no-name institution a quarter-century ago.●

THE NEED FOR IMPROVED RURAL TELECOMMUNICATIONS

● Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, 5 years ago, prior to the divestiture of AT&T, most Americans regarded our telephone system as the most sophisticated and advanced in the world. Since that time, however, that view has changed substantially, particularly in rural parts of the country, and with that we have not only seen a dramatic decline in our ability to compete in the world market but a significant increase in our telecommunications trade deficit.

This problem is largely the creation of Judge Harold Greene who insisted on fixing a system that was not broken and divesting the service of AT&T into seven Baby Bell telephone companies. In rendering his decision, Judge Greene prohibited those seven communications companies from participating in several important telecommunications activities. Today, these companies cannot manufacture communications equipment used in homes and businesses or tell manufacturers how to design inexpensive terminals so they could have more affordable access to information services. Also, the seven Baby Bells are barred from investing in companies which can engage in manufacturing, developing video imaging processing which could provide high-quality FAX, medical assistance and aids for visually handicapped persons.

And, until recently, the Baby Bells were precluded from developing, owning, and transmitting various electronic information services such as stock quotes or research data. I am pleased to see that this recent change in the modified final judgment came about because I believe the American public is incurring the greatest harm by the imposition of these restrictions. It is time we permitted the telecommunications industry to devote its time and resources to providing the best possible service to consumers and businesses.

Mr. President, I recently received a detailed analysis of the benefits to my State of Wyoming should the remaining restrictions under the modified final judgment be lifted. Needless to say, I am not at all surprised at the number of advantages which would accrue to the rural residents of my State if the modified final judgment restrictions were removed. For example, Wyoming consumers would be able to use home computers for a variety of personal services such as shopping bargains, library and research data for schoolwork, and assistance with health care needs. For the rural business man, improved telecommunications services would increase his ability to transmit data through electronic mail, access information about a supplier's products and services and locate or expand a business anywhere in Wyoming while maintaining a quality of life rarely found in more congested areas. These services touch many sectors of our rural economy from agriculture, to education, to the medical community, to senior citizens and our tourism industry, one of the State's largest employers.

In today's competitive climate, we must continue to look for creative ways to improve our economic growth, particularly in rural areas of the country. In my view, the advancement of telecommunications is vital to that effort. In fact, my view is wholly substantiated by an article recently published by former Agriculture Secretary, Bob Bergland. Mr. Bergland points out that "besides enhancing business performance, an improved rural telecommunications infrastructure is also a way to give fiercely independent rural people access to the social services taken for granted by city dwellers." I would ask that Mr. Bergland's article be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

The article follows:

RURAL AMERICA NEEDS BETTER TELECOMMUNICATIONS SYSTEM

(By Bob Bergland)

Thanks to the telecommunications revolution, a few hardy pioneers are showing that parts of rural America can put behind their economic woes and build a brighter economic future for themselves.

Consider:

In Washington, a farmer who connects with an "electronic bulletin board" learns that a North African nation wants to buy lentil beans. He is able to bypass middlemen and sell directly to a niche market, boosting his income;

A fish packer in the Aleutian Islands of Alaska uses a telecommunications link to New York City to find out the latest demand for fish—and then alters accordingly the types and quantities of fish he catches;

Mrs. Field's Cookies operates more than 100 retail outlets in shopping malls throughout the country from Park City, Utah;

L.L. Bean, the mail-order retailer, is able to employ dozens of customer service representatives in the remote towns of Maine via special telecommunications hookups. New jobs are created and local economies bolstered.

These stories suggest how the nation's sagging rural economics could be revived with the help of advanced telecommunications. Satellite data transmission, electronic mail, fax machines, fiber optic lines—these innovations can help bring new investment into rural communities, creating new jobs, greater social stability and, perhaps most important of all, hope.

Just as the interstate highway system once spurred economic growth in once-isolated rural towns, so modern telecommunications can play a similar role today.

Unfortunately, current trends make this scenario for the future unlikely; even the most persistent rural entrepreneurs have trouble succeeding in the present climate. Parts of America are saddled with obsolete telephone lines that cannot transmit electronic data. They are sometimes overburdened with artifically high telephone rates and unfair federal regulations that discourage installation of advanced telecommunications. Some rural businesses still have to contend with party lines.

Unable to make the most basic connections with outside markets, it is not surprising that many rural entrepreneurs just give up. Urban businesses that might otherwise expand into depressed rural regions are often scared off. Despite plentiful supplies of workers willing to work at competitive wages, rural towns usually lack one of the most important elements for business success today—a modern telecommunications system.

Unless corrected, this crippling "telecommunications gap" could doom the economic prospects of rural America for decades to come. That's because American businesses, whether urban or rural, increasingly need advanced telecommunications to compete in the national and global markets of the 1990s. Small-town hardware stores, for example, must be able to place new orders via computer lines. Rural manufacturers must be able to maintain online telecommunications links with urban wholesalers.

Given the diversity of today's rural economy, the need for better telecommunications is particularly urgent. While agriculture remains a vital part of the rural economy, it provides only nine percent of all rural jobs. By far, the largest rural sector is services, with 65 percent of the jobs, followed by manufacturing with 17 percent. If these industries cannot acquire the sophisticated communications that their competitors are already adopting, they could easily fall, leaving the people in America's small towns far worse off.

Besides enhancing business performance, an improved rural telecommunications infrastructure is also a way to give fiercely independent rural people access to the social services taken for granted by city dwellers. New electronic technologies now make it possible to instruct students in many remote locations simultaneously ("tele-learning") and to consult with distant medical specialists and monitor patients from remote locations ("tele-medicine"). How ironic if the very technologies that can magically overcome geographic distance end up being used only in dense urban areas!

Fifty years ago, the first telecommunications visionaries made a bold commitment to "universal telephone service," a goal that has nearly been achieved. New federal policymakers need to set a new goal: "universal information access." Rural residents and businesses need full access to a wide range of telecommunications technologies and services.

But how to get from here to there? "Rural America in the Information Age: Telecommunications Policy for Rural Development," a new report by the Aspen Institute, explains how the telecommunications gap is hurting the economic future of rural America, and recommends eleven practical solutions. For instance, why not update and expand the Rural Electrification Administration's mission, so that it can help rural towns acquire the basic communications tools of the Information Age? Why not institute new transition rules for the deregulation of telephone service, so that rural communities can afford to invest in the latest telephone technologies?

Today's generation of rural Americans enjoys electricity, telephone service and interstate highways only because farsighted government officials in the 1940s and 1950s launched some bold initiatives. To secure the economic strength of rural America in the future, we need that same sort of government leadership today.

In closing I would hasten to say that this article also brings to light the shortsightedness of our Federal court system in sticking to what essentially amounts to a recipe for disaster for the future of our telecommunications infrastructure. It would appear that any other significant changes to the modified final judgment may have to be made legislatively and I would note that such a bill is currently pending in the House of Representatives. I hope the House will move forward with this legislation and provide the Senate an opportunity to debate this important issue later this year.●

CALIFORNIA 4-H PROGRAM

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, it is with great pride and admiration in the long and distinguished history of the California 4-H Program that I today salute its 75th anniversary in this Chamber of the U.S. Senate and urge my Senate colleagues to join with me in tribute to a splendid youth organization which has long and ably served and enriched America's young people.

The California 4-H Program, sponsored by cooperative extension, division of agriculture and natural resources, University of California, was chartered in 1913 by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Three million young people have participated in the 4-H Program in the first 75 years; 76,000 youth and 20,000 adult volunteers presently are enrolled in California 4-H.

Educational projects are offered in agriculture, home economics and social sciences with the emphasis on learn-by-doing as youth develop life skills.

The 4-H mission is to help youth develop into responsible, self-directed, productive citizens of the world, and to improve the well-being of youth and society through the use of research-based, learn-by-doing educational experiences. The educational goals of 4-H are:

Acquisition by youth of life, leadership and problem-solving skills to enhance individual development and well-being.

Acquisition by youth of knowledge and skills in the production and wise use of food, fiber and conservation of the world's natural resources.

Understanding and responsible participation by youth in community affairs.

The mission is accomplished through the development and support of leadership teams of staff, volunteer leaders, youth, and others who organize and conduct educational project experiences in community and family settings. Events and activities include 4-H clubs, after-school units, camps, fairs, study-travel programs, leadership development conferences, community service projects and career exploration.

The California 4-H Program is administered by cooperative extension State and county professional and support staff members as part of the University of California campuses at Davis, Riverside and Berkeley and in 57 counties in cooperation with the local board of supervisors.

Program priorities for the next decade are expanded membership from culturally diverse groups, innovative educational programs based on research relative to youth needs, and increased visibility of youth development through coalitions of youth organizations and marketing.

The California 4-H Program is developing materials and strategies to focus on three national initiatives of the Extension Service of the USDA which are: building human capital; family and economic well-being; and youth at risk. Issues are being addressed at local, county, State and national levels of programming groups, youth and adult attendees at State leadership conferences and in training programs to overcome neglect of children and families.

The California 4-H Program is instituting a variety of program activities to expand membership to be reflective of the cultural diversity of California. In this anniversary year of the California 4-H, I think it appropriate to reflect on its shining record of past achievement, and to commend the ever-renewing pioneering spirit of this splendid youth organization. It has, and will continue to play an invaluable role in helping to guide the educational, cultural and moral development of young people not only in California, but in rural and urban communities throughout America.

I wish the California 4-H a bright future and continued success in its most worthy mission.●

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHICAGO BRIDGE & IRON CO.

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, on August 8, 1989, CBI Industries, Inc. will be celebrating its 100th anniversary. CBI was incorporated in my home State of Illinois as the Chicago Bridge & Iron Co. on August 8, 1889.

Chicago Bridge & Iron was born with a humble wood bridge business for county highways, which Horace E. Horton started soon after the Civil War. The company has come a long way since those days. Over the past 100 years, the Nation and, indeed, the world, has benefited from quality construction and inspired innovations. The company has continually adapted its products and services to the world's major technical and industrial developments, becoming one of the leading companies in the worldwide contracting business.

In the early years, Chicago Bridge & Iron built a large number of ornamental elevated water tanks, including such landmarks as the pineapple shaped water tank outside the Dole pineapple factory in Honolulu, HI, and the peach shaped water tower for the peach capitol of the United States in Gaffney, SC. The company also built the first all-welded steel "watersphere" elevated tank. In response to the discovery of the great oil fields in the Southwest and West, Chicago Bridge & Iron Co., developed floating roofs for petroleum storage tanks and constructed spherical storage facilities for storing natural gasoline.

The company made significant contributions to U.S. efforts in World War II. Soon after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, Chicago Bridge & Iron Co., swung into gear and began building dry docks in Morgan City, LA; Eureka, CA; and Newburgh, NY. An even greater undertaking was the construction of landing ship tanks for the Navy. Many of these ships participated in the invasion of France, and the company earned awards at each of its plants for outstanding production achievements.

After the war, Chicago Bridge & Iron returned to the development and construction of storage facilities, including nuclear containment vessels. The company also built 13 large diameter penstocks for the Niagara generating plant in New York.

Chicago Bridge & Iron, more often referred to as CBI, has grown over time and adapted to changes to become a worldwide leader in the construction of large industrial facilities for petroleum, chemical, power, and paper industries. CBI Industries, Inc. also grew into other markets when, in 1984, the company acquired liquid carbonic corporation, which is the world's largest supplier of carbon dioxide.

One of the company's most recent projects was the fabrication of all new deck sections for San Francisco's Golden Gate Bridge. The improved Golden Gate Bridge may be a technological advance over that first bridge in Oronoco, MI, but it is certainly made of the same ingredients CBI Industries put into all its projects: an innovative spirit, a commitment to quality engineering, and a job well done. Mr. President, I commend CBI Industries, and wish them well for continued success in the future. ●

BALTIMORE COUNTY EXECUTIVE DENNIS RASMUSSEN

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I am pleased to bring to the attention of my colleagues the fine work that is being done in Baltimore County by County Executive Dennis Rasmussen. Recently Mr. Rasmussen was recognized as the most valuable county officials by the highly regarded journal "City and State."

Since taking office 2½ years ago Mr. Rasmussen has demonstrated an outstanding commitment to improving the quality of life in Baltimore County. His budget messages and state-of-the-county addresses contribute to his reputation of being an astute planner as does his publication "Closest to the People," in which he regularly updates progress made.

With his usual modesty, Mr. Rasmussen gave credit to "a strong management team. The award is a reflection of the work of many dedicated employees who work hard to deliver responsive services to the public." Under his leadership, Baltimore County continues to grow as a leader in local governments.

Mr. President, I join with the people of Baltimore County in congratulating Mr. Rasmussen, and I ask that the Baltimore Evening Sun editorial be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun, Aug. 2, 1989]

AND THE WINNER IS . . .

At a time when the notion of political commitment is under siege, it is worth recognizing that vision still exists, and pays off. Dennis Rasmussen, Baltimore County's executive, got such recognition this week when he was chosen as most valuable county official by "City and State" magazine.

"City and State," a professional journal, is highly regarded as a resource by the men and women who run city, county and state governments all over the country. Rasmussen was selected for setting an agenda and coming up with workable plans to implement it—including a variety of public-private partnerships that have laid the groundwork for quality-of-life improvements in the face of federal funding cuts.

Obviously, this is a tremendous personal honor for Rasmussen. But as Baltimore County continues to evolve from a sleepy suburb into a major metropolitan center, the award also signals that it is moving in the right direction.●

LEONARD HALPERT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise with great mixed feelings to report to the Senate the retirement of an extraordinary journalist. Leonard Halpert, editorial page editor of the Buffalo News for nearly a decade and writer for that newspaper for over four decades, retired just last week. He could not retire with greater admiration or success.

Len Halpert is that exceptional type of journalist who is an expert in the affairs of his immediate environs as in the important events of the world. His knowledge is broad and his intellect keen, and his editorials reflect his capacity.

Colleagues extol his exactitude and his emphasis on quality. His standards reveal the ability of one who is more than skilled—they reveal the devotion of a master.

As is so often the case with exceptional men, Len is a native New Yorker. Born in Brooklyn, he graduated from Brooklyn College in 1947 and Northwestern University's Medill School of Journalism in 1948. That same year marked the beginning of his career with the Buffalo News. He began as a news reporter and copy editor in 1948, and, while he had a brief stay with the Washington Times Herald in the early 1950's, he returned to the Buffalo News as an editorial writer. Might I say he returned to his true calling and his true home.

In the years that followed, Len garnered Freedom Foundation George Washington Medals for editorials and numerous first-place awards in the Buffalo Newspaper Guild's annual Page One competition. In fact, it was for a series of Len's editorials that the News was bestowed the 1968 distinguished editorial writing award from the State Publishers Association.

Nonetheless, it is obvious that Len's greatest reward has been the work itself. Since 1980, he has served as editorial page editor with brilliance and devotion. He has been an important member of the Buffalo community as he will continue to be. He is a friend, and I congratulate him on a retirement which will afford him more time with the greatest loves in his life—his wife Shirley and charming family.

I am sure my colleagues join me in congratulating Len Halpert.●

FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION

● Mr. FORD. Mr. President, yesterday the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA] announced its intention to review the design of wide-body aircraft to see if backup flight control systems can be improved. The DC-10 crash in Sioux City on July 19 in which the hydraulic system was wiped out is the precipitating cause, but the FAA plans to look at Boeing 747's and L-1011's as well, since both of these wide bodies have crashed after major damage in-flight occurred.

I commend the Administrator, James Busey, for taking this first step towrd improving safety in the fleet. As I said on this floor a few weeks ago, Mr. President, I think it makes sense to look at certificates and design standards in light of safety improvements made since the plane was certified, and to consider whatever new information may be acquired following accident findings. I want to pursue this idea further when we resume session, and I may consider hearings on the subject to inform us of what the FAA is doing in this area—much as they did in the aging aircraft hearing I held a few months ago.

I think Mr. Busey has certainly started off well as Administrator. I am surprised that as we approach the August recess, we still haven't received a nomination for Deputy Administrator. I guess if it took us 6 months to get the Administrator, the Deputy won't be here before we leave in October. This delay makes a good case for one of the provisions in the independent FAA bill which I will introduce as soon as we return from recess. My legislation provides that the Administrator shall choose his Deputy from among the career ranks at the FAA. This accomplishes at least three things: It gives the Administrator the choice of his No. 2 person; it means the No. 2 person is someone who knows and is known by the FAA; and it provides opportunity to the outstanding career people at that agency.

I have spoken many times, Mr. President, on the importance of separating the FAA from the Department of Transportation. My bill also deals with some of the other problems that bedevil the FAA. All of us in the aviation community know that in the areas of personnel, procurement of major systems, and funding stream, the FAA needs help. My bill provides that help. So when we return in September, I hope my colleagues in the Senate and in the House will work with me to pass a bill which will give the FAA the structure, the independence, the reforms its needs to assure it can devote its full attention to improving safety.●

THE DELAWARE VALLEY VIETNAM VETERANS FLAG MEMORIAL

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise to direct my colleagues' attention to a unique and extraordinary effort undertaken by the Delaware Valley Vietnam Veterans [DVVV].

Over the Labor Day weekend, on Sunday, September 3, the DVVV will display a Flag Memorial to those who served this Nation in Vietnam. The memorial consists of 58,157 American flags and 2,195 Black POW-MIA flags. The American flags represent each American that died in the war in Southeast Asia defending the freedoms which the Stars and Stripes represent. The POW-MIA flags symbolize our constant vigil and devotion to those Americans who remain prisoners of war or missing in action.

Five years ago, Micki Voisard designed this memorial out of love and caring for the many who have not returned to their loved ones. The DVVV has accepted the responsibility of ensuring this one-of-a-kind memorial would be cared for and maintained for all the Nation to share. It is indeed truly a labor of love on the part of the DVVV to erect this display each year, and I commend them for this effort.

As a U.S. Senator, a veteran, and as an American, I applaud the members of the DVVV for their ongoing efforts to serve America's veterans of war and peace.●

BIOLOGICAL DIVERSITY

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, there is growing concern about the destruction of our environment and the depletion of our natural resources. Whether the issue is tropical deforestation in Brazil or the greenhouse effect and global ozone depletion, our environment is crucial to human welfare. Destruction of our environment is not only occurring abroad. The United States also is contributing to the rapidly developing problem. One issue I would like to discuss today is the deterioration of this Nation's biological diversity.

Maintaining a broad array of plant and animal species in a wide variety of ecosystems is critical. These species contribute significantly to the food we eat, as well as the roofs over our heads and the clothes we wear. Indeed, we rely on the complex interactions between species to provide the very foundations upon which we live. However, we are eroding these foundations. While we are attempting to ensure the survival of certain species designated as threatened or endangered some unstudied species may be suffering the negative impact of habitat destruction and other damaging influences, such as human population growth, pollution, and resource development. A lack of adequate knowledge concerning biological interactions may be contributing to further environmental degradation. A wide variety of species may become extinct before we can learn their potential ecological function or economic value. Understanding the components of biological systems and how those components interact is crucial for developing an effective strategy to maintain biological diversity.

It is clear that action needs to be taken to protect the species on our planet from extinction. While efforts have been made to preserve biological diversity around the globe, relatively little has been done within the boundaries of the United States. It should be a national goal to preserve biological diversity in the United States.

A prime example of the need to preserve our Nation's biological diversity can be found in my home State of New Mexico. The Gray Ranch, which encompasses the entire Animas Mountains and Animas Valley, has been called a biological melting pot. It represents the greatest concentration of State and federally listed endangered species in New Mexico, including the Mexican gray wolf, the bald eagle, the peregrine falcon, and the ridge-nosed rattlesnake. The Gray Ranch contains more species of mammals than any National Park or National Wildlife Refuge in the United States, and has the potential to be the "Yellowstone of the Southwest." The Federal Government now has the opportunity to purchase this ecologically diverse area, giving us a rare opportunity to help ensure our Nation's biological diversity.

Whether it is the Gray Ranch in New Mexico or other biologically diverse areas in the United States, the Federal acquisition of biologically diverse land is needed to preserve our Nation's biological diversity. We must establish a national agenda that allows us to protect and preserve our environment for future generations.●

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT ON TREASURY-POSTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the Senate Budget Committee has examined, H.R. 2989, the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill and has found that the bill is under its 302(b) allocation budget authority allocation by about $30 million and under its 302(b) outlay allocation by half a million.

I compliment the distinguished manager of the bill, Senator DECONCINI, and the distinguished ranking member of the Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government Subcommittee, Senator DOMENICI on all of their hard work.

Mr. President, I have a preliminary table from the Budget Committee showing the official scoring of the Treasury Postal appropriations bill and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD at the appropriate point.

BELLE OF LOUISVILLE

● Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I am happy to announce that on June 30, 1989, the Department of the Interior declared the Belle of Louisville, one of Kentucky's most prized possessions a national historical landmark. The Belle, initially christened the Idlewild, was built in 1914 by James Reese & Sons, of Pittsburgh. The Belle is a beautiful three-level, paddlewheel steamboat, having dimensions of 167.5 feet in length, 36 feet in beam, and 5 feet in depth of hold. Docked in Louisville, she is an extraordinary sight to behold. Also, she is the sole remaining sternwheel-propelled steamboat of the western rivers type.

Her career began in Memphis on January 8, 1915, primarily as a ferry between Memphis and Hopefield Point, AR. In 1925, the Belle was sold and served as a ferry from Cairo, IL, to Bird's Point, MO. Between 1926 and 1928, she served as an excursion boat from New Orleans to the upper portion of the Mississippi River. During the 1930's, her versatility kept her in service by providing excursions, barge towing, and ferry services. During the Second World War, she served as a tow boat for barges carrying much-needed oil to ports along the Mississippi. Following the war, she served as the last paddle excursion boat in operation.

In 1962, former Senator and then Jefferson County fiscal court judge, Marlow Cook, purchased the vessel at auction for Jefferson County. He then had her reconditioned to her present beauty. It was at that time that she was rechristened the Belle of Louisville. Judge Cook's eminent wisdom has preserved for us all a piece of our history and a beautiful cultural landmark for the city of Louisville. The Belle now serves the city by carrying excursion charters, educational tours, and promotional tour groups on the Ohio River. All of us in Kentucky are very proud of our Belle and I feel that she has received her just reward for her many years of honorable service to the city of Louisville, and the rest of the Ohio River.●

EUGENE E. AND CATHERINE MORGAN TREFETHEN, JR., 80TH BIRTHDAYS

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to salute two outstanding Americans, and dear personal friends, Eugene E. Trefethen, Jr., and his wife of 52 years, Catherine Morgan Trefethen, on the occasion of their 80th birthdays.

The lives of these two remarkable Californians are models of the best qualities in American citizens, qualities that enable our society to be an examplar where individual achievement is bounded only by ambition and ability, and achievers generously share their good fortune from an abiding sense of community responsibility. For many decades, the Trefethens have shined together as two points of light, the likes of which our President speaks when he describes the best of the American spirit.

Gene Trefethen is a product of our public system of education. He graduated from elementary and secondary schools in Oakland, CA, and the University of California, Berkeley. While still in college, he began his working career as a laborer in a quarrying operation of Henry J. Kaiser. In this young laborer, Mr. Kaiser saw the qualities of business leadership. Gene became the third lynchpin in the rapidly expanding Kaiser enterprises, together with Mr. Kaiser and his oldest son, Edgar.

Their combination produced results unique in modern business history. Together, these men developed a group of enterprises that helped open the depression plagued West to greater industrial and agricultural production by building gigantic hydroelectric projects including Hoover, Bonneville, and Grand Coulee Dams; they contributed to victory for democracy in World War II by setting the pace for production of Liberty ships, combat aircraft, and other war material; they stimulated postwar conversion and recovery through the production of housing, automobiles, and basic building materials for American industry; they exported the principles of productive partnership by funding international ventures with American know-how, capital, and respect for their host country's culture; they joined with pioneering physicians in founding one of this Nation's largest health care programs and they established one of our private sector's largest philanthropic foundations.

Gene Trefethen retired happily from his first career in 1973, only to reactivate his remarkable talents and energy in two new pursuits. He has developed the world renowned Trefethen Vineyards in Napa Valley; he has devoted more of himself to community service including raising millions of dollars for the capital requirements of many educational, cultural and voluntary social welfare institutions that serve hundreds of thousands of his fellow Americans. Last year, the San Francisco Bay area recognized him as its outstanding volunteer fund raiser on the occasion of National Philanthropy Day. His concern for human rights on a global scale is reflected by his participation in the international conference on the Helsinki accords in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, as a member of the United States delegation.

Catherine Morgan (Katie), chose between a promising career in fine arts and becoming anchorwoman for a future family when she became Mrs. Trefethen in 1937. This gracious lady has stood beside her husband as hostess, foreign traveler, sounding board and consultant, mother of their daughter Carla Jean and their son, John Vance, and grandmother of four. In addition, she has pursued her interest in support of art and art institutions, and in higher education for women as a supportive alumna of Mills College.

On September 12, hundreds of friends of the Trefethens will gather in San Francisco to celebrate the 80th birthdays of these two remarkable citizens. Their gift, in respect and friendship, will be the Trefethen professorship, permanently endowed at the Walter A. Haas School of Business of the University of California, Berkeley.

In October, the literature on American business history will be enriched by publication of the first full, scholarly chronicle of the Kaiser enterprises' contributions to our Nation's social and economic fabrics during Henry J. Kaiser's lifetime. This biography of Mr. Kaiser documents his reliance on Gene Trefethen as an analyst, manager, and developer of the most vital resources in any endeavor, human resources.

I am privileged to count Katie and Gene Trefethen among my friends. Countless numbers of individuals and families, both here in the United States and elsewhere, have a better quality of living or have found help in time of critical need because the Trefethens, together, have made a significant difference in social and economic development. For this measurable achievement and for their inspiring examples of the American spirit applied, I invite the Congress to join in sending the Trefethens our greetings, our congratulations and our appreciation of their humanitarianism.●

THE SILENT WAR

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President. On May 21, 1989 I attended the Inauguration of the North Smithfield Library in North Smithfield, RI. A speech was given at the event by Mark Patinkin, a Pulitzer Prize winning journalist and syndicated columnist based at the Providence Journal Bulletin. I was so impressed by Mr. Patinkin's discussion of what he terms "The Silent War," or the threat of the fierce competition from other nations entering U.S. markets on every front, that I wanted to share it with my colleagues.

Mr. Patinkin's speech was based on his recent book, "The Silent War," which he coauthored with Ira Magaziner. Mr. Patinkin and Mr. Magaziner have been traveling around the globe for the past 2 years investigating how and why so many nations have surpassed us economically in a staggering number of areas. They offer sound and encouraging advice on ways that we can compete more effectively in the international arena. For policy makers this book is required reading, and I would urge my distinguished colleagues to pick up a copy.

We have much to learn from the stories told by these two men regarding the role of Government in the support of research, development, and manufacturing if we are to successfully compete on the aggressively competitive global economic battleground. The following transcript of Mr. Patinkin's speech which I submit for the RECORD offers a few of those lessons.

The remarks follow:

THE SILENT WAR

I arrived at my office to find a phone message from a name I recognized mostly from afar. Ira Magaziner—I knew of him as a former Rhodes Scholar and global business strategy consultant based in my home state of Rhode Island. We sat down and he told me what he had in mind.

In his career, he'd worked for hundreds of companies around the world—from Volvo to Mitsubishi to General Electric. Over time, he'd grown increasingly alarmed at how our competitors, even unlikely competitors like Singapore and France, were becoming far more sophisticated at international business than we were. Just as disturbing, he saw foreign governments giving their companies far more help in competing than our own was.

He was convinced a new war was unfolding, a silent war, one that would determine which nations would be able to leave their children a higher standard of living. He began to tell me of the battles we've lost.

He pointed out that there was only one U.S. company left making color televisions. No U.S. company had ever made a VCR. In the last few years, Korea had taken away much of our microwave oven industry. We'd even fallen behind in semiconductors—Japan was now the world leader. The irony, he said, was that each of those products was an American invention. But too often, we got the patents while our rivals got the profts.

Now he wanted to write a book that would warn of the threat—not a book of economic analysis, but one that would tell the inside stories of how our fiercest competitors were invading U.S. markets, and how the best of American companies were fighting back.

About two years ago, we left on the first of six trips around the world. One of our early stops was Singapore. It was new to me. I'd never been to the Far East before. I pictured rows of unskilled workers bent over sewing machines. Instead, I found a tiny nation that has begun to resemble Silicon Valley, bristling with the kind of firms any U.S. governor would covet. At first, I thought Singapore had lured those companies with the classic bait of a Third World country—low wages. It's not that way anymore.

We sat down with a well-groomed young man named Wong Lin Hong, the managing director of Micropolis, a typical Singaporean company. It doesn't make cheap radios or clothing. It makes computer disk drives, which is typical enough. Eighty percent of the world's disc drives are made there. I wondered how a low-skilled country could have dominated so high tech a product. Mr. Wong gave me the answer. It's true that he grew up in a shanty, the son of a junk dealer, but today, Mr. Wong is an engineer. So are his three brothers. So is his sister. So is his sister-in-law. That is our new Third World competition.

We also visited an Apple computer plant there. In the early 1980's, Apple put up a simple plant in Singapore making memory boards—a low-skill job. That was all Apple thought it could make in a low-skilled Third World country. But Apple's Singaporean workers wanted to prove they could do more. They began to volunteer nights and weekends for special classes in the country's vast network of worker training institutes—built by the government to arm its people in the skills of the 1990's. Eventually, Apple's management in Cupertino, Calif. realized one of its most skilled workforces anywhere was in Singapore. So it made a bold decision. It built a major new plant there. And today, every single Apple II computer, one of the most successful personal computers ever designed—a true American symbol—is made in Singapore, not because of low wages, but high skills.

We found similar stories in Korea, in Hong Kong, in Taiwan. That, I learned, is the reality of today: an increasingly aggressive Third World.

But we had one other question we wanted to answer: what about the products of tomorrow? Who will win those battles? To help understand the answer, we went to Japan.

We went there not to simply explore a high tech product, like semiconductors, but a true product of the future, one that wouldn't be big until the next decade or century. There were many we could have chosen—superconductors, advanced ceramics, microelectronics. We decided to focus on photovoltaics; solar energy—the conversion of sunlight to electricity by way of silicon cells. Right now, it's about a $300 million a year industry, but many are convinced it will be worth billions in a decade. Which nations will harvest that wealth?

We met two men who helped show us the answer. The first, Joseph Loferski. He's considered one of the fathers of solar science and symbolizes why America has been the world's technology leader for so long: the backing of government. Loferski's education was federally funded, so was his research at RCA, and then, government reached out to him again, putting him on a special team to perfect the solar cells that powered our first satellites. When he decided to move to Brown University, he found the faucets still wide open again, and was able to buy over a million dollars in equipment and staff his lab with a dozen workers. By the late 1970's, we were the world's clear solar leader, just as we led in electronics, semiconductors and aeronautics.

The second man who opened our eyes about the solar race was Yutaka Hayashi. Although Japanese, he knew that to get a top science education, there was only one nation to go to. And he did, graduating from Stanford, then returning home to join Japan's first rudimentary solar effort, begun after the 1973 oil crisis. His reality was the opposite of Loferski's—he was stuck in a crowded, underfinanced lab, forced to beg companies for second hand equipment and to read U.S. solar magazines for the latest breakthroughs. We were the leader, Japan the copier.

But in the 1970's, that began to change. Japan's government became convinced that to keep its people prosperous into the next century, it wouldn't be enough to be a nation of good manufacturers. They'd have to be good innovators, too. And so, in the late 1970's, Japan began one of its biggest technological projects ever—the building of a science city two hours south of Tokyo, bigger than almost any U.S. college campus; hundreds of buildings and thousands of scientists, whose key mission was to help companies compete.

I visited that Science City two summers ago. One of its most impressive labs was dedicated to solar cells. It had millions of dollars of equipment and well over a dozen scientists. One of them was Dr. Yutaka Hayashi, now armed with the best that money can buy.

The postscript to this story: when oil prices dropped, America slashed its solar funding to the bone. In Japan, where oil prices also dropped, they actually redoubled their solar effort. Today, Japan is the world's clear solar leader.

Unfortunately, it's the same in other products of the future—from superconductors to advanced ceramics.

I came away from our time abroad convinced that America is now in a fierce horse race. But our time exploring companies at home showed me there's no reason we have to lose.

First—can America win when a Third World country begins challenging us with $2 an hour labor? We can and the proof is the refrigerator, one of the great American products. You may find Sony stereos in your living room, but you don't find Mitsubishi refrigerators in your kitchen. That almost changed a few years ago when Japan put a low-wage plant in Singapore to make refrigerator compressors, the heart of the machine, as important as an engine in a car.

At General Electric, our biggest refrigerator maker, a number of executives wanted to simply give up—shut their compressor plant and import from the competition. They had to pay their workers $17 an hour with benefits; there was no way they could fight back against $2 an hour rivals. But a number of engineers insisted on standing their ground. They argued that the only way to build a prosperous company, and country, was through manufacturing. They convinced GE management to make its biggest factory investment ever—$120 million into a new compressor plant so automated it would allow our workers to be ten times as productive as their competition. GE is still working out the bugs, but that plant is now completed, and capable of allowing $17 U.S. workers to build cheaper compressors than their $2 an hour competition.

The next question—can we go beyond stopping imports at the border and succeed at exporting? Few U.S. companies even try. Of America's 360,000 manufacturing firms, only 10 percent export. But we found one that proves any company can do it: Cross pens and pencils, a non-high-tech, non Fortune 500 firm. A number of years ago, Cross realized it would one day stop growing if it didn't move beyond America. But it saw other U.S. firms who'd tried to export and given up after a year or two of failure. So Cross came up with a key strategy: it vowed it would care more about market leadership next decade than stockholder payoff next quarter. In every new foreign market it took on, it resolved to stick it out for at least five years. In many countries, to establish a solid beachhead of salespeople and advertising, it spent ten times the profit it was harvesting. And it made sure to tailor its products to foreign tastes. It saw how U.S. auto companies ship cars to Japan with the steering wheel on the left even though the Japanese drive with it on the right. To avoid that kind of mistake, Cross adjusted its goods for different markets, in one case going so far as to come up with a whole new product—a fountain pen for European buyers. The strategies have worked. Today, Cross sells in 150 countries, from Fiju to Andorra; it's the top selling status pen in Japan, and a key player in Europe, bringing millions of dollars into America when usually it's the other way around: our dollars flowing into foreign pockets.

Finally, can America lead in products of tomorrow? We can, and the proof we found is Corning Glass. About 15 years ago, it came up with the greatest breakthrough in telecommunications since Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone: fiber optic phone lines. Instead of talking by electricity over copper wire, Corning found a way to let us talk by light over glass—our voices carried on microscopic laser beams over hair thin glass fibers that run for miles. Corning's executives went to Japan to sell their breakthrough. The Japanese acknowledged it was an astounding product. But they refused to buy. They refused because Japan had targeted fiber optic phone lines as a key industry of the future, and had resolved to manufacture it on its own. The only way Corning could get a piece of the action, Japan said, would be to license over its technology. In the last 20 years, U.S. companies have done that routinely, selling over 45,000 technology licenses to Japan. But in this case, Corning refused. Japan's response: it formed a coalition of fiber optic phone line companies and backed them with millions of research dollars.

That meant Corning had to spend millions more of its own to keep improving its product. It has paid off. Travel the world today and you'll see Japanese cars everywhere, American cars restricted mostly to our own market. But look closely at the world's phone systems and you'll see American technology everywhere, and Japan boxed inside its own borders.

So we can win.

But not simply by dropping the value of the dollar as our only strategy for competing. To stay ahead, we have to win in the lab, in the factory and in the marketplace. We have to match the strategies now unfolding around the world. In Japan, governments and companies are spending millions to research products of the future. In Singapore, they're spending millions to train workers in the skills of the future. In Europe, they're spending millions to export into the markets of the future.

We have to do the same.

In Spring of 1987, my co-author, Magaziner, met a Japanese government official for lunch as part of one of his consulting jobs. The official began discussing Japan's latest economic vision. In the methodical way of Japanese, he explained how they'd charted out the exact point where they expect to pass America by as the world's technology leader—right around the year 2000.

Then he asked Magaziner a question. He wondered what had happened to our economic will? Why is it, he asked, that except for military pursuits, we no longer seem to want to win? Magaziner wasn't sure what answer to give him. But after 70 visits to Japan, he's convinced of something. Although the Japanese are good, we can be better. They and other nations—from Singapore to Germany—may well win the economic race, but only if we let them.●

GORDON PIERCE OF SHREWSBURY, VT

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, it is a tradition in this body of many traditions that when a person of prominence, well-known for his or her accomplishments, passes away that Senators come to the floor to honor their lives. More often than not, their passing has already made National or State headlines.

Other times a man passes whose significance is noted only locally, yet its broader importance escapes attention. The eloquent eulogy of such a man put it succinctly. "Not people die, but worlds die in them." The world of Gordon W. Pierce, of North Shrewsbury, VT, was very special indeed. A large part of Vermont's past world died with him. To understand this one must know Vermont, its pastoral past, and the importance of the country store, particularly the W.E. Pierce Store.

Some 7 years ago a reporter noted, "The W.E. Pierce Store should be in the Smithsonian Institute, or maybe the Shelburne Museum." Let me share a glimpse of the reasons for that comment.

The store traces its history back to 1876. As noted in the article referred to below, "Time has brought change to North Shrewsbury and the Pierce Store has changed. Even so, the store is a bit of living history."

W.E. Pierce, "Willie," became the store operator in 1918. He had five children, each epitomizing their own portion of Vermont life and tradition. The youngest, Gilford, gave his life for his country in World War II. The oldest, Marion, is remembered for dedicating her entire life to the young, as a teacher and social worker.

Marjorie is a devoted historian, and a conservative store manager, yet motors around in a Volkswagen bug with a mock wind-up key inserted in the back, and is an enthusiastic member of Amnesty International. These traits may seem contradictory to those who do not know Vermonters, yet they very much reflect Vermont.

Glendon, the youngest, is also a mixture of Vermont characteristics. He is a Mr. Fixit, especially when it comes to wooden clocks. He is an inventor, he cuts hay and wood, grows vegetables, is a humorist—a prankster in his early days, and is most patient with the children who frequent his store. Most of all, he is a country gentleman of the finest kind.

The special significance of Gordon Pierce's life is best expressed in the eulogy given at his service, which I will now read.

Fortunately, North Shrewsbury and Vermont still have Pierce's Store. Majorie and Glendon still charm and educate those of us who go to stand by the wood stove in the winter, or to get a cool soda in the summer. Yet the Pierces have no children and the loss of Gordon reminds us of our mortality. We sadly realize we are also witnessing the passing of that Vermont world so rich in history and tradition.

I wish to give my sincere thanks to Lee Wilson for his most eloquent and fitting eulogy and to Yvonne Daley of the Rutland Herald for this exceptional and insightful story of August 19, 1982 entitled: "Pierce's Store: Candy Costs, History's Free." Mr. President, I ask to have this story entered into the RECORD at this point.

The material is as follows:

EULOGY DELIVERED JUNE 12, 1989 BY LEE WILSON IN MEMORY OF GORDON W. PIERCE

When first moving to Shrewsbury I remember looking out from our porch down towards Pierce's and seeing their lawn sweep down to Sargent's Brook, the stream which flows past our place down to theirs. There was a park in miniature, with the stream, the lawn on either side of it, a dark stand of spruces, a large apple tree, a beautiful old swamp maple, and forget-me-nots growing by the stream. Containing the stream was a rock wall embankment. It appeared to be old. Its smooth face easily deflected the current, with every stone securely and tightly fitted into place. I assumed some sturdy Shrewsbury pioneer had built that rock wall embankment many years ago. It looked like the product of a by-gone era, when men and women were strong enough to push back the woods, clear the fields, and layout miles of rock wall boundaries with no power other than what their own hands or animals could provide.

One day in Pierce's Store I told Gordon how much I admired the rock wall embankment, and the way the lawn swept down cleanly to meet it. I wondered out loud what person had the strength, know-how, and persistency to build it. He gave me his characteristic laugh, with his head thrown slightly back and to one side, and let me discover he had done it. There in front of me, weighing in at no more than 120 pounds, stood my supposed pioneer giant.

Gordon Pierce had a way of surprising a person. He did not push himself forward, but walked his way through life with a quiet gentleness. He was a gentleman.

To look at him you would not think he had the strength to clear his land the way he and Glendon have done. Rather than have his funeral here, I wish we could have had it up on the mountain above Northam Village at the foot of Shrewsbury Peak in one of the 3 large meadows cleared by Gordon and Glendon. There the whispering leaves of the sugar maples would have told us more about this person who loved the land and tended it as if it were a giant garden. You come across those meadows by surprise—no signs, no calling attention to themselves, just a quiet unlooked-for beauty surprising you when walking out of the wild wood—another of Gordon's surprises and very much like him.

He had a unique sense of quiet merriment and subtle humor. He and Marjorie took two newcomers to Shrewsbury on a hike to the top of Jockey Hill to see the famous balancing rock. The newcomers became slightly concerned when Gordon explained why he had a large paint brush stuck in his belt, and a gallon paint can swinging at his side by means of a rope looped over his shoulder. He had them to paint marks on trees so we would find our way back in case we got lost, or so he said. He did look alarmingly well-prepared for getting lost. But of course the paint brush was never used, and the paint can contained sandwiches for a picnic eaten up by the rock.

Another story involved Gordon and his sister Marion. One late summer day they stood by the Pierce's vegetable garden looking at some miserable ears of corn growing on the stunted stalks of one short row Gordon had planted. The corn crop had not turned out as expected. "Gordon", Marion said, "You should have planted more." Gordon looked at Marion and the corn with a smile in his eyes and said, "I don't know what we'll do with all that we've got now." They both laughed.

Gordon could combine amused merriment and seriousness in dealing with the many young customers who for years have been drawn to the Pierce's Store penny candy like bees to honey. How many times did these young customers ask Gordon to add and re-add their candy purchases, one piece at a time, while they counted and recounted the pennies in their hand? I think Gordon, the store bookkeeper and veteran town auditor, enjoyed these early adventures in accounting. Then there were his youngest customers who threw themselves at the mercy of the store by depositing all their money on top of the glass candy case pleading for assistance in correctly matching this money to their appetites. Gordon politely assisted each according to their need and never appeared to tire of it. His hands were just as quick to help his young customers count their candy as they were to help his neighbors stack their wood, piece by piece. This also he did many times without ever appearing to tire of it.

Gordon's hands could tackle even the toughest jobs. On October 4, 1987, a devastating snow and ice storm swept through Vermont. It uprooted the massive swamp maple on Pierce's lawn by the stream. What will they do now?, I wondered. Cutting the wood up was normal work for Gordon and Glendon, but who could take on the massive root ball still partially embedded in the earth? During the next spring I drove by day after day, and noticed a hole being dug out around that root ball. Slowly the hole got wider and deeper, until the giant root ball seemed small in comparison to the hole. Someone was mining away at that root ball—of course it was Gordon. Then came a Saturday morning of triumph when Gordon attached chains to it and hauled it away with his pick-up like a man who has captured his prey. I recall this now because it occurred almost exactly one year ago today. A frail 80 year old man once again proved he could surprise.

Are there giants who have walked the earth to clear the way and make it smooth for us? No, there are just people like Gordon Pierce, who believe in things being done decently and in order. He was a man who was just as content to count out pieces of candy one by one, and place them in the soft small hands of his youngest customers, as he was to wrestle and overcome a huge gnarled root ball, or to help a neighbor in need. To each task was appointed its own time and place, and for each task there was quiet patience and a strong will to see it done right.

A few words cannot encompass a life. One poet wrote, "Not people die but worlds die in them." Who can describe an entire world? We could all say more about Gordon, and in these hours of remembering we should say more. We are here today because in ways large and small we have each shared a part of the world of Gordon Pierce and found it was a place of surprising strength, enduring patience, and much gentle good will. We will remember Gordon when walking through his meadows, buying candy in the store; or seeing the stream flow by the rock wall and the forget-me-nots.

PIERCE'S STORE: CANDY COSTS, HISTORY'S FREE

(By Yvonne Daley)

NORTH SHREWSBURY.—The W.E. Pierce Store should be in the Smithsonian Institute, or maybe the Shelburne Museum.

The boxes of penny candy, displayed under a curved-glass counter, sylpho-nathol antiseptic disinfectant and spirits of ammonia in two ounce bottles, lending library with many pre-1930s books, and woodenworks clocks are about as authentic as you can get.

The Pierces—Marjorie, Marion, Glendon and Gordon—could act as guides. The four siblings who now run the family store also inherited a wealth of anecdotes about life in a country store from the latter part of the 19th century to the present.

They know stories of the days when this part of Shrewsbury was called Northam, of the days even before their birth to when the Pierce Store, like other country stores in Vermont, was the center of a bustling community.

The Pierces are in their latter years. They guard their ages like some families hide skeletons in the family closet, but a sleuthful interviewer with a copy of a Shrewsbury history calculated their respective ages to be somewhere between 71 and 82 years old.

Marion is the oldest and shyest. She is a retired school counselor who, like her brothers and sister, returned to the store after a successful career.

Marjorie, next in age, "has the best memory," her siblings say, and is the busiest. Between writing to Chile and other countries as a member of Amnesty International, a world-wide group that lobbies for political prisoners, and writing the gossip column for The Shrewsbury Times, she runs the store, keeps house for the family and tools around in her Volkswagen "bug."

Marjorie doesn't walk; she runs. And when she talks, people listen; she is a well of historical information who has the knack of keeping the story interesting.

Gordon, the youngest surviving brother—a younger Pierce died in World War II—also tends the store. He's the vegetable gardener for the family: "I'm not scientific about it at all," he said. He is modest and quiet, but wonderful with the children who come into the store to purchase licorice and hot balls, Tootsie Rolls and lollipops.

"This one's strawberry and well, that one's very hot—have you ever tried those. Do you like Tootsie Rolls?" he asks, patient and generous.

The other brother, Glendon, is the story teller. He has a talent for fixing most anything, especially old clocks with wooden works. Glendon also minds the store, when he isn't cutting wood. haying, inventing a toy or rebuilding a machine.

The four live together in the house their ancestors built, where storekeepers for 150 years have slept their few hours between locking up after a night of conversation and checkers with "the men" and opening the door for the morning's first customers.

Time has brought change to North Shrewsbury and the Pierce Store has changed. Even so, the store is a bit of living history.

Marjorie traces the store's beginnings to a distant relative, Nathaniel Aldridge, who built it in 1876. The store was passed from cousin to cousin until 1911 when Jasper Aldridge bought it.

"I remember Jasper," she said, sitting on a bench next to the stove in the center of the room. "He liked me because his daughter had died and I reminded him of her. He always sat in a captain's chair by the stove."

Jasper's son, "Willie D," ran the store, Marjorie remembers. "I dreamt about it just last night. They had these little chocolate teddy bears in those days with marshmallows in the center. Some would have a penny in them. Willie D always made sure I got one with a penny in it."

Jasper sold the store to Marjorie's father, Willie E. Pierce, in 1918.

"We all helped with the store. My mother tended store most of the time, while my father farmed the meadows. We owned a big barn and had horses and cows. He cut the hay and raised potatoes. We were in school and then high school, but we would help out some," she relates.

"We have mainly groceries and gas now, but when he bought the store, they stocked patent medicines, boots, shoes, overalls, socks, yardgoods and hardware, rakes, shovels, hoes and guards for mowing machines, just about everything."

More than 80 years ago, Marjorie relates, Frenchmen and Italians logged in the woods just over the hill from the store. They came to the Pierce Store for supplies.

"Where you can't even drive now, there were once logging and saw mills," said Marjorie.

"Father had a big grain business. I think he lost on groceries," Marjorie said. "When my father ran the store, Shrewsbury was all farms. Now there aren't more than five or six."

Shrewsbury farmers, ekeing a living out of stony fields, would transport their milk to a nearby cheese factory every morning and cart the whey back home for their pigs. On the way back, Marjorie said, they would stop at the store, tie up their teams of horses and make their purchases.

Even when they needed nothing, farmers stopped by the store as part of the day's routine—to discuss the news of the day, the gossip and the weather.

In the evening, the men would wind their way down Northam's windy roads to sit in the store and trade yarns and compare crops. "My father would open the store after supper every evening till 8 or 9 p.m. Men would come down with their lanterns, buy some bananas and swap stories. Sometimes I'd stand behind the counter and listen to the jargon. My brothers played jokes on the men. I didn't hang around with the men much. It kinda bored me—just talking about cows and milk."

Glendon likes to talk about the pranks he and his brothers played on the customers—Gordon, however, denies participation.

"There was this customer, John Quinlan, a Civil War veteran, he was a nice old man. Well, he came into the store and sat down to talk with the rest of the men. He had some nice large eggs in a pail and we took them out and put in pullet eggs—no, bantam eggs, when he wasn't looking," Glendon relates. "Later, Quinlan looked down and said, 'By Jehovah!' That was his favorite (expression)."

Sometimes, Glendon said, one of the boys would hide under a barrel in which they had bored a small hole. When an unpopular customer sat down, the boys would jab him with a spike.

Another time, the boys hooked up an old Ford battery to the door knob so customers would get a shock when they touched the door. Glendon gets almost as big a kick out of telling the story as he got when he pulled the prank.

"Years and years ago, there was quite a to-do when the Gypsies would come through, you know." Glendon said, "I was just a little boy. I'm over 24 now, so I was just a tad then.

Giving advice was just one of the jobs of old time storekeepers. They frequently offered advice—like suggesting soap for a particularly offensive-smelling customer—or credit, free food or clothing to the poor. Glendon said his parents stocked laudanum and morphine, especially for one woman "who must've used it," but the Pierces still resist the pressure to stock beer or wine.

Other vestiges of the early days line the walls: a 1914 "Top Notch Magazine," Copenhagen tobacco container, a Lenox soap box, buttons and handkerchiefs from the 1920s, a device that was used to cut tobacco plugs, a hand-made cleaver and hay knife, the post office that once operated here, an egg scale and a brass cash register painted silver.

The cash register was stolen some years ago and turned up later near the top of White Rocks cliffs in Wallingford. It was in pieces, warped and barely salvageable, but Glendon restored it and it is in use today.

A tradition of Republicanism is also evident—pictures of presidents from Eisenhower to Reagan decorate the store and Marjorlie speaks fondly of her boy, James Jeffords. She's lost her fondness for Nixon, however: "I don't like him any more."

Through all the changes, the store has kept its most important qualities; friendliness of the proprietors coupled with a wide variety of goods.

Recently, for example, a man came in for some thread, Marjorie said she was out, but offered safety pins in their stead. "That would do," the customer said, "How much?"

"Well, I don't know," Marjorie retorted. "We've had them a while. You got a quarter on you?"

Marjorie doesn't know what will happen to the store when she and her brothers become too old to run it. None of the four married; there are no offspring.

"People have been asking to buy it," she said, "and we know the time is coming—though we don't like to think about it—when we won't be able to keep it up.

"But for now," she said, "we're doing just fine."●

THE DISASTER ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1989

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I wish to voice my support for H.R. 2467, the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989. This bill will provide relief for thousands of agricultural producers whose crops have been destroyed by drought, freeze, floods, and other natural disasters. Farmers in my home State of Oklahoma have suffered great losses to their winter wheat crop. Many producers have suffered complete losses. We have also experienced significant losses in cotton, soybeans, peaches, pecans, rye, and other crops.

This bill represents a compromise between the various interests represented on the Agriculture committee. After many long and late hours, the committee was able to fashion a package that will provide coverage to all producers.

I would like to draw special attention to two provisions I believe to be of great importance to my home State. First, the bill contains a provision that will allow those producers with failed acres or prevented plantings who put their acres in "conservation use" under the "0/92" or "50/92" programs to have the option to receive disaster payments. Many producers experienced their losses long before there was talk in Washington of a disaster bill, and they simply made the best business decision available to them at the time. I don't think these producers should be treated less favorable simply because they were good managers or because their loss was incurred very early in the year. I would like to thank the Senators from Kansas, Mr. DOLE and Mrs. KASSEBAUM, for their support on this provision.

Second, the bill allows for some payments to be made very soon. If an eligible producer applies before September 30, 1989, the Secretary of Agriculture shall make full or partial payments within 15 days, but not before September 15. This is a very important provision for winter wheat producers who may need the payments to prepare to plant again this fall.

Mr. President, as I mentioned, this is a compromise bill, and therefore I have some concerns. First, unlike previous disaster bills, this bill has no provision for catastrophic losses. The absence of this provision may mean smaller total payments to those suffering total losses.

Second, the bill requires producers suffering a 65-percent loss or greater to purchase crop insurance in order to receive their payments. I support the concept of crop insurance, however, I am hesitant to force producers to buy insurance before we have time to review the report recently issued by the Commission for the improvement of the Federal Crop Insurance Program. I should note, however, that this requirement can be waived if the cost of the insurance is too high in a particular area or if the purchase would cause economic hardship.

Mr. President, I cannot sufficiently stress the importance of getting the regulations written and the payments made as quickly as possible. In my opinion, this bill is really an extension of last year's disaster bill; I know it was an extension of last summer's drought that caused much of the damage to the wheat crop in the Southwest. I hope the Department of Agriculture will administer the program using the same or similar rules when at all possible. For example, one provision I trust will be kept is the deminimus yield rule. In short, Mr. President, this rule allows the local ASCS office to establish a reasonable level at which a producer no longer has to harvest a nearly lost crop just to prove his eligibility for disaster payments. A farmer should not have to incur harvest costs if it's not economically beneficial to do so. I hope the Department agrees and will continue to allow this deminimus level to be set.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to thank the distinguished chairman, Senator LEAHY, and the ranking member, Senator LUGAR, for their leadership and cooperation in the crafting of this bill even though their States may not have suffered substantial losses. I thank them for their help in sending this bill to the President.●

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, after several weeks of long and trying negotiations, I welcome the arrival of the Disaster Act of 1989 to this floor for final passage. When nature delivers such an adverse impact to agriculture, especially one so widespread, there are many competing priorities from across the country. This fact, combined with ever-increasing budget constraints, does not make a process such as this a simple matter. Many of us come from States with specific needs, yet the one goal all of us share is to deliver a timely assistant package to our farmers, and to remain fiscally responsible at the same time. Mr. President, we have accomplished that achievement, and for that reason, this is an acceptable piece of legislation.

While this bill provides a relatively equitable amount of assistance to farmers, it falls short of perfection. Indeed, it falls short of fully addressing the needs of farmers in my State, and others who have experienced similar problems. In last year's disaster bill, there was a provision that provided for additional relief for those who suffered catastrophic losses. This bill has no such provision. There is no apparent reason for this change in policy, other than the fact that the administration claims the additional costs associated with such a provision override the need to maintain a consistent and fair policy. The absence of such a clause is not minor, Mr. President. Last year, I watched as many farmers in the Midwest and upper Plains States—where the drought was most severe—benefited from such a catastrophic measure. This year, I will watch farmers in the mid-South, devastated by floods and freeze, attempt to get by on the standard payment that is available to farmers.

Another issue that has a very direct impact in parts of Arkansas is the producer versus farm number application for assistance. This is an issue that is almost exclusive to the small tenant farmer. Under current law, assistance is provided by farm number, which causes some farmers to be neglected from assistance that they would otherwise qualify for. Surely Congress never intended this to be implemented in an unfair manner, which is the result when benefits are not provided to the producer per farm number. Under current implementation, the consequences are that a farmer is penalized by simply farming on the wrong side of the road. The administration stated that such a provision would prove too costly, yet nothing was produced to support the expense the administration said this measure would be. While this measure remains unresolved, I do look forward to working with USDA in hopes of addressing this in a way that will be fair, and that will consider the unique problems that current law causes in many parts of the delta. It is the tenant farmer we have in mind with this issue that is demanding of our attention.

The only issue in the bill that is less than satisfactory is the language concerning Federal crop insurance. The language we included in last year's bill was adequate, and would have been this year as well. Under last year's law, we required producers to purchase crop insurance if they received disaster assistance, as long as it did not create an undue financial hardship on the farmer. This year, in addition to that, we have made a distinction in the eligibility for assistance for program participants. Those who had purchased crop insurance will need to show at least a 35-percent loss of their crop to receive benefits, while those who do not have crop insurance must prove a forty percent loss. I emphasize this change in policy not because I am an opponent of Federal Crop Insurance, but for the simple fact that I realize there are some changes that need to be made in this insurance program before it is given such influence in policy making. If it were a popular program, no one would need to be forced to purchase it. Also, taxpayers have spent approximately $1.5 million on the Federal Crop Insurance Commission, which has done a tremendous job of exploring the current program and making determinations in what type of changes might need to be made. I advocate that before we mandate crop insurance, we should have time to review the work of this commission. Certainly, this is an area that will receive much attention in the coming year.

Mr. President, in passing this bill we have succeeded in providing assistance to farmers who, I am sure, have been anxious to see such a measure pass. There is quite a bit in this bill to be thankful for. Primarily, I am glad that Congress has seen the need and the fairness in providing assistance to all farmers who have had losses this year due to adverse weather. A farmer who has lost his wheat to drought in Kansas is the same as a farmer who has lost vegetables to hail damage in Texas or a soybean farmer who has lost his crop to excessive rains in Arkansas. The Senate has shown wisdom and sensitivity in addressing this fact. I am also pleased that, with what is for the most part an extension of last year's bill, we shouldn't see a producer forced to undertake uneconomical action in order to qualify for assistance. No member of either agriculture committee could justify making a producer run his cottonpicker or combine on an unharvestable field. I am certain that it is not the intent of Congress to force a farmer to take such a foolish and uneconomical action just to prove his attempt to harvest what he already knows can't be done.

As I mentioned earlier, this was not an easy bill to draft; disaster bills never are. However, if we in the Congress think this has been difficult Mr. President, then we should pause for a moment and remember those we are doing this for. It is the farmer who has struggled through these past months, and I hope that some of his anxieties can be calmed with the passage of this legislation. There is not a windfall for any farmer in here, but just enough to allow the farmer to meet his financial obligations within the community in hopes that he can try again next year—that's all the farmer asks for, and it is the least we can do. I urge my colleagues to join the Senate and House Agriculture Committees in approving this measure, so that we can have assistance in place as soon as possible.●

THE DISASTER ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1989 AND CLARIFICATION OF THE ACT

NUTRITIONAL VALUE OF HAY

● Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the purpose of following statement is to clarify section 108 of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1989. Delayed cutting, improper drying, or excessive moisture during the growing or harvesting of hay and other forage crops can cause them to loose nutritional value. In determining qualifying losses for hay and forage crops, both the quantity and the quality must be considered. Quality measured in either "crude fiber, energy," or both, calculated as a function of the quantity produced per acre, compared with a suitable average production using the same criteria, should be employed to provide an accurate determination of loss of value in hay and forage crops and be the basis for the determination of qualification and value of disaster assistance.

NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL WEATHER SERVICE

Many weather related effects on crops can be minimized or in some instances avoided all together. This Nation has in place a National Agricultural Weather Program, operated by the National Weather Service, USDA and the Cooperative Extension Service. This program can be credited with providing timely information on weather related events which has saved many millions of dollars in crops and livestock. By applying prescribed best management practices and integrated pest management practices in conjunction with both short- and long-term weather data in a timely fashion, many disasters have been prevented or mitigated. It is the sense of this committee that we must continue current services and, where possible, improve them. A systematic upgrading of the computer systems of the National Agricultural Weather Program, coupled with improved communications to integrate weather data with programs of research, education, and extension would save growing crops and livestock and preclude the necessity of emergency expenditures, and many disaster relief programs.

DE MINIMIS YIELD PROVISIONS OF THE 1989 DISASTER ASSISTANCE BILL

I would like to ask the chairman a question. I recall that last year in the administration of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988 that the Secretary of Agriculture determined that crops which were severely damaged and for which it was determined that anticipated yields would not justify the costs of continuing to grow and harvest the crop, that the crop would be declared de minimis and disaster assistance made immediately available. It is my understanding that the Secretary will have the same authority under this act.

Mr. LEAHY. Yes, that is my understanding.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank the chairman. I know that he will agree that it is our intent that he exercise that authority under this act.●

BLACKHAWKS 20TH REUNION

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of a very special group of Vietnam veterans gathering this month on the 20th anniversary of their demobilization. I speak of the 7th Armored Squadon of the 1st Air Cavalry, better known as the "Blackhawks."

A unit whose lineage can be traced back to 1833, the Blackhawks began their Southeast Asian service on March 22, 1968. Supporting the 1st U.S. Infantry Division, the Blackhawks fought in the Alcorn and Toan Thang campaigns. Later, the unit moved to a different part of Vietnam and fought in the Nui Coto, Ric Gia, and Phu Vinh Forest operations. While these efforts ended in total victories, they cost the unit a stiff price in blood spilled on the dark Southeast Asian soil. Today, only 33 of the unit's 143 soldiers survive to trace their fingers lightly over the Blackhawks forever etched into the black marble of the wall.

Mr. President, these men sacrificed the youth of their souls for our country and deserve our honor and respect. As a U.S. Senator, I feel obliged to salute them for their patriotic dignity and I ask all my fellow Members to join me in doing so.●

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the distinguished career of Ralph Hofstad, president and chief executive officer of Land O'Lakes, Inc. His career has been more than a commitment to work, it includes significant contributions to rural and agriculture concerns in Minnesota and across the country.

I am proud of my long association with Ralph and have come to count on his statesmanship and leadership not only in the food and agricultural industry, but also for his commitment to the economic development of people in lesser developed countries around the world.

Ralph Hofstad started working with Land O'Lakes in 1974 and has been a highly visible and prominent cooperative leader in the United States and internationally for more than 25 years. He began his cooperative career at FS Services [Growmark] in 1948 after receiving his bachelors degree from Northwestern University.

In 1965 he was selected as president of Felco, a large agricultural cooperative headquartered in Fort Dodge, IA. He held this post until 1970 when Felco and Land O'Lakes merged. He became senior vice president of agricultural services in the consolidated organization and in 1974 was named president and chief executive officer.

Ralph has emphasized the need to work closely with national policymakers and administrators to ensure the best interests of the family farmer and American agriculture were served. He has testified at numerous congressional hearings on subjects related to food and agriculture and has served on a variety of commissions and international delegations. For many years he was chairman of the United States Chamber of Commerce delegation to the European Community farm forum. Today he serves as cochairman of the National Commission on Agricultural Policy for the International Management Development Institute.

He is particularly noted and recognized for his leadership in developing a long-term vision for U.S. agricultural cooperatives. Throughout his career he has stressed importance of cooperation among cooperatives and has spearheaded new and innovative cooperations for Land O'Lakes.

Ralph is particularly well known and respected in international cooperative circles for his work to end world hunger through economic development. In 1984 he was awarded the Fowler McCracken Leadership Award and in 1985 he received the Presidential World Without Hunger Award.

Mr. President, on the occasion of Ralph's retirement, I join with his family and friends in wishing him well. I look forward to the continuing contributions I know he will make toward building a stronger rural America and a more economically sound world.●

SAVING A TROPICAL RAIN FOREST

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to commend Nature's Way Products, Inc., of Springville, UT, for their efforts earlier this year to preserve tropical rain forests in the South Pacific.

Because of a generous contribution from Nature's Way, a pharmaceutical manufacturer, a 30,000 acre lowland rain forest in Western Samoa was saved from destruction. Before Nature's Way intervened, residents of the village of Falealupo on the island of Savai'i had been forced to allow logging in their sacred rain forest in order to generate revenue for the construction of an elementary school which had been planned by the Western Samoan Government.

Upon learning of this situation from Dr. Paul Cox, an ethnobotanist at Brigham Young University, Nature's Way, along with Rex Maughan of Forever Living Products in Arizona and other concerned citizens, contributed funds to erase a large portion of the village's outstanding debt of $108,000. The logging ceased, and Ken Murdock, chairman of Nature's Way, Dr. Fox, and the village chiefs signed a covenant in Falealupo that contained the village's pledge to preserve the forest's natural state for the next 50 years.

It is important to note the efforts of Mr. Murdock and his company, because nearly 100 acres of the world's rain forests are destroyed each minute according to the Rain Forest Action Network. With half of the world's original rain forests destroyed and the prospect of massive wildlife extinction if the current rate continues, efforts by concerned citizens deserve recognition.

Keeping rain forests intact can produce many benefits for mankind, such as holding in check possible climatic shifts caused by the greenhouse effect, preserving thousands of plant and animal species from which man generates medicinal as well as environmental gains, reducing flooding in adjacent countries, and preventing soil erosion.

As the village of Falealupo enjoys their modern school building in future years, Mr. Murdock, Nature's Way, and all those who contributed to these efforts can take great pride knowing that they have helped to preserve our planet's environment, I salute them.●

SHOWDOWN IN "SUE CITY"

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, 111 people died in the tragic crash of United Airlines flight 232 in Sioux City, IA, on July 19. The heroic performance of the pilot and crew saved the lives of the 185 survivors. A recent Time article reveals that the aftermath of this crash is anything but heroic.

The airline, the aircraft manufacturer and the insurance companies will be embroiled in a legal battle to divide the responsibility of compensating the injured and the estates of those who died. This battle will be fierce. The potential liability for any of these three parties appears limitless. This battle will take years to resolve. The real tragedy in the aftermath of the accident is that victims may not receive fair compensation for their losses. If they choose to litigate, victims should not expect to receive any compensation for years.

The article states correctly that plaintiffs' lawyers have a financial interest in litigation. One lawyer will collect up to one-third of the damage award his client receives. These lawyers will seek out clients and encourage them to sue. They will claim that litigation is the only way to ensure full compensation.

Mr. President, the survivors and the successors in interest of those killed deserve to be compensated. That is not an issue. The issue is whether a victim will receive fair compensation and how quickly the award will be made. I regret that the outcome likely will not be satisfactory for victims.

The current tort system is a lottery. The Rand Institute for Civil Justice found that litigation does not compensate aviation accident victims for their economic losses. This means that the tort system does not compensate victims for their medical expenses and lost wages. Victims will not receive this basic compensation. And, they may not receive this unsatisfactory amount for years if they are forced to litigate. Victims often agree to litigate upon being advised that a trial is the only way to win. But, Mr. President, as Time points out, plaintiffs' lawyers have a strong financial incentive to litigate. In fact, in 1986, the Rand Institute estimated that two-thirds of the damage awards from contingency fee cases go to lawyers, with only one-third going to victims.

The tort system grossly overpays those with the smallest losses. One study found that injured plaintiffs with losses between $1 and $1,000 received, on the average, 859 percent of their losses, while those with losses of over $1 million received, on average, 15 percent of their losses. That figure does not include the amount that goes to the lawyers. Another study found that 37 percent of suits for losses resulting from bodily injury are not paid until at least 4 years after they are first reported. A similar study found that, in the cases of the most severe injuries, those in which payment exceeded $100,000, 21.6 percent of claimants waited more than 5 years for payment. Only 2.1 percent were paid less than 1 year after reporting that injury, and 62.6 percent took more than 3 years to be paid. A severe injury likely will leave a victim in desperate financial straits. Lengthy delays in the awarding of compensation add to the costs and burdens for victims.

Mr. President, the case for reforming the tort system is clear. Congress has the opportunity to reform the inequities of the civil justice system. Senators KASTEN, INOUYE, ROCKEFELLER and I have introduced S. 1400, legislation to reform the patchwork of State products liability laws. Reforming the products liability system by the enactment of S. 1400 will be a good start. I would not stop there. I support general tort reform. We should correct the inequities in the tort system which do not treat victims fairly. Victims should be able to recover their economic damages quickly and without seeing a huge percentage of it going to lawyers. Until the tort system is changed, it is victims that will pay the price.

I ask that the Time article appear in the RECORD.

The article follows:

SHOWDOWN IN "SUE CITY"

Philip Corboy doesn't need to chase ambulances. They seem to chase him. Just one day after the July 19 crash of United Airlines Flight 232 in Sioux City, Iowa, the white-thatched, patrician-looking Chicago attorney was asked for legal help by the family of one of the survivors. Within 24 hours, Corboy had filed the first lawsuit to come out of the disaster. Since then, he has received calls from twelve other people involved in the crash. His fee, if he wins: as much as one-third of the damages.

Corboy's lawsuit was the first volley in what promises to be a high-stakes legal battle over the Iowa crash. Some attorneys have even taken to calling the tragedy "Sue City" because of the huge number of lawsuits that are expected to follow. While the 185 survivors and the next of kin of the 111 who were killed are the ultimate beneficiaries, the struggle will take place between a small cadre of plaintiffs' lawyers and their counterparts, who represent airlines, aviation manufacturers and their insurance companies. That kind of tug-of-war has grown increasingly fierce over the past few decades.

Iowa bar officials arrived at the scene of the Sioux City crash nearly as fast as the doctors did. They were determined to head off a well-known postcrash problem: unscrupulous lawyers soliciting clients on the scene in violation of ethics codes. Representatives of the state bar set up an office at the health center where many of the survivors had been taken for treatment. Bar officials also placed an ad in the Sioux City Journal asking people to call if they knew of any unethical contacts by attorneys. None were reported.

Other crash scenes have been more ghoulish. After 137 people died in the Aug. 2, 1985, crash of a Delta L-1011 at the Dallas-Fort Worth airport, legions of lawyers sought business amid the chaos, scurrying among emergency-relief workers and hospital aides. They even tramped through the halls of Parkland Memorial Hospital handing out name cards to the families of the deceased. Top lawyers in the field, who get their cases mainly through referrals, consider such tactics lowbrow. "I have utter contempt for those who choose to get cases this way. They deserve the bad reputation they have," says Lee Kreindler, a New York City lawyer who won a record $7.9 million judgment in the Delta case.

Insurers show up just as quickly as the lawyers, seeking through a disputed process known as claim control to keep costs from spiraling. Associated Aviation Underwriters, one of the major airline-liability insurance companies, has already begun the process of talking with survivors and the families of victims of the Sioux City crash, trying to settle their claims quickly and dissuade them from going to court. Says Peter Magee, executive vice president of the company: "If you buy a ticket to get from Point A to Point B, and you don't make it there, then the legal burden is on me to explain why. Statistics show you're going to recover something. It isn't a question of Is compensation fair? It's a question of how much."

The answer, say plaintiffs' lawyers, is usually "not enough" for those who sign up with the insurance companies. Friendly letters urging families and survivors to take the settlements initially offered to them—and suggesting that they shouldn't consult a lawyer—are anathema to the aviation bar. According to Gerald Sterns, a San Francisco lawyer who specializes in air-crash litigation, "These letters can be very dangerous for the victims if they decide later to file a lawsuit. The insurance company's concern is damage control. What they're doing is developing a rapport with the victims and duping them."

Lawyers for plaintiffs also accuse the insurers of more dastardly deeds. Says Daniel Cathcart, a Los Angeles-based lawyer who specializes in air disasters: "Either directly after the accident or a little later, as soon as the insurance companies know who the survivors are, they will dispatch a team of investigators to find out your financial situation, whom you're sleeping with and the status of your married life. Then they'll use this evidence to try to intimidate and embarrass you in court." Following the 1985 crash in Dallas, Delta was criticized for prying into the lives of passengers during litigation. After investigators found that one victim was homosexual, insurance lawyers raised the issue of whether his life expectancy would have been cut short because of AIDS.

Plaintiffs' lawyers have a strong financial incentive to keep people from settling without representation, since it is virtually certain in crash cases that damages will be paid. But a study last year by the Rand Corp. found that litigation often does not yield the jackpots that the public imagines. Rand found that airlines and other defendants paid victims' families less than half their average "economic loss," the value of what the deceased would have earned in a normal lifetime. Jury verdicts averaged $599,000 per victim. Still, the odds are good enough and the stakes high enough to ensure that lawyers will continue to litigate these cases avidly. As insurer Magee puts it, "This whole business has come to take on a lottery mentality. If someone gets hurt this week, then they rush to court to see what numbers come up."

TOM WRIGHT

● Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to enlighten my colleagues on the success of a Kentucky man, recently named regional Entrepreneur of the Year by Arthur Young Entrepreneurial Services Inc. magazine, Business First newspaper, and the Louisville Venture Forum. I came across this article in the Lexington Herald-Leader which I would like to have submitted into the RECORD.

When Tom Wright was 19 years of age, he decided that he wanted to have his own company, make money, and build an empire. Now, 19 years later, he is chairman and chief executive officer of AmeriQuest Inc., an industrial cleaning operation based in Boyd County, KY.

After only 1 year at Eastern Kentucky University, where he earned money from a truck-washing business that he started with a friend, Tom Wright dropped out of school and went into business for himself, cleaning coal trucks. However, 7 years later he realized that cleaning trucks is not a year-round job, and decided to pursue other services. He then applied the cleaning process to power plants, steel mills, refineries, chemical plants, and coal mining operations. The success with these operations prompted Tom Wright to create related subsidiaries. These were designed to permit AmeriQuest to sell several services to the same industry.

Today, the cleaning service has about 600 employees around the Nation, and sales are growing at an average of 40 percent a year. Tom Wright credits much of the company's success to the talented and intelligent people who work for him. He believes that AmeriQuest will continue to grow from the inside.

Tom Wright's company has been a tremendous success, and I would like to commend him to my Senate colleagues today.

The article follows:

ENTREPRENEUR OF YEAR CLEANS UP BY DIVERSIFYING

(By Todd Pack)

ASHLAND.—Tom Wright couldn't sit still.

He rocked and swiveled in his leather chair and sometimes chopped the air in front of him as he talked about the goals he set years ago, when he was a brash young man of 19.

"I wanted to have my own company, make money and build an empire," said Wright, now 38 and chairman and chief executive of a cleaning operation based in Boyd County.

Sitting in his office, his regional Entrepreneur of the Year award displayed on a tabletop, Wright did not hesitate to talk about how far he had come since he dropped out of college and went into business for himself, knocking the dried mud off coalmining equipment.

That one-man cleaning service diversified and now has about 600 employees nationwide. Sales have grown an average of 40 percent a year since 1984, Wright said, and are already up 51 percent since January. At that rate, he said, AmeriQuest should have a record $40 million in sales by the end of the year.

But he is still not satisfied, he said.

He has his own company and is well-off financially, but "the empire keeps moving on me."

"Compared to Donald Trump, I'm nowhere close."

But a longtime friend said Wright was much closer than he was when they first met in the late 1970s.

"He's a self-driven, self-made man," said Bill Scaggs, who attends the Rose Hill Missionary Baptist Church with Wright; his wife, Deborah; and their two children, Heather, 12, and Brad, 10.

Scaggs also is spokesman for Armco Inc.'s Ashland steel works, where Wright's company is often hired to use water under high pressure to blast the slag from steel-making equipment.

It has been since the late 1970s that Wright's company has found its niche and has seen its most dramatic growth.

Scaggs said his friend had changed little despite his success. "If there's been any changes I have seen, it has been for the better."

Wright started his first company, Mobile Pressure Cleaning, in 1971 with a $2,500 bank loan cosigned by his grandfather. He loaded his makeshift high-pressure washing equipment into the back of an old bread truck and made a living cleaning coal trucks.

Business wasn't bad, he said, but it could have been better. In 1978, Wright said, "I realized it was difficult to wash trucks in the winter."

After washing a fleet of coal trucks for one company on a warm winter afternoon, he said, he was called back the next day and told that all the locks had frozen overnight.

It was about this time that he decided to consider other services.

Mobile Pressure Cleaning eased out of the truck-cleaning business and applied its high-powered cleaning process to industrial facilities, such as power plants, steel mills, refineries, chemical plants and coal-mining operations.

Spurred by that success, Wright created other, related subsidiaries.

Protek and Omni Sales and Service were founded in 1980.

Protek is another cleaning operation. In addition to high-pressure water hoses, it uses custom-built vacuum trucks to clean a variety of industrial facilities.

Although Omni does some outside work, Wright said, its main purpose is to handle maintenance, safety equipment and other supplies for other AmeriQuest companies.

Belpar Chemical was established in 1981. It was followed by Belpar Environmental Services five years later and Belpar Asbestos Abatement Services in 1987. The companies handle hazardous wastes.

MPC Inc. went into business in 1984. It uses small explosives to clean coal-fired power plants and other industrial operations.

The companies were designed, Wright said, so AmeriQuest could sell several services to the same industry. For example, a power company might hire Proteck to tidy up its electric plant and Omni to keep its equipment running right.

Wright said AmeriQuest could not have reached its level of success if he had not hired talented and intelligent people to work for him.

"The company is at the point where I can afford to hire only the best CPAs (certified public accountants) in town or the best law firms.

"We've got a first-class team," he said. "I'm just the quarterback."

That was the reason Wright first went to Eastern Kentucky University, where he and a friend earned spending money by washing trucks.

A winning quarterback at the old McKell High School in Greenup County, Wright wanted to be on the EKU Colonels football team. But his academic life lasted only one year.

"I couldn't see myself getting banged up and bruised," he said. Besides, "the school part of it was drudgery."

About the only thing Wright said he liked about life in Richmond was the lucrative truck-washing business he started with his friend.

His friend knew more about the business end of it, but Wright did a better job at sweet-talking customers and drumming up business, a talent he picked up while working at his father's restaurant in South Shore.

He left Eastern in 1971 and returned home to start Mobile Pressure Cleaning.

For a while, he was the only employee, dividing his time between answering the telephone and hosing down coal trucks.

"I was working my little heart out," he said.

Business grew steadily, and he hired a handful of employees until 1977 when Wright went to Johnstown, Pa., to help clean up after a major flood.

Impressed with the vacuum trucks he saw there sucking up the mud, he entered the industrial cleaning business a year later.

The expansion helped the company's income increase considerably, Wright said. Business was so good, he said that he broke down and bought a Porsche Targa 911.

"It was the first time we splurged," Wright said. But if he had known what was coming, he said, he would have waited.

When the 1981 recession struck, steelmakers—which were among his biggest customers—stagnated and so did his industrial cleaning business.

That time was the most difficult for AmeriQuest, but the company continued to diversify and weathered the recession without serious injury. In fact, Wright said his company should have $50 million a year in sales by 1991—if not sooner.

Meanwhile, he said, AmeriQuest will not branch out into new areas. Instead, it will continue to grow from the inside, learning to handle itself as a $40 milion-a-year company.

Wright said the person who had the most to learn was the self-described quarterback.

"If Tom Wright doesn't expand his knowledge and use it wisely," he said of himself, "this company is not going to grow."

AmeriQuest has done well enough that it earned Wright a regional Entrepreneur of the Year Award last month in a competition sponsored by Arthur Young Entrepreneurial Services Inc. magazine, Business First newspaper and the Louisville Venture Forum.

The future may look good, Wright said, but "I can't lean back and say I'm really happy."

"We've got a good, solid company," he said, but "I don't want to get to the point where I think everything is fine, because it's too easy for something to go wrong."

RETIREMENT OF JOHN COUGHLIN FROM WBBM-TV IN CHICAGO AFTER 36 YEARS

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues the retirement of John Coughlin, of Chicago, who will leave the CBS-owned affiliate, WBBM-TV in Chicago, after 36 years of outstanding, Emmy award-winning work.

You may have seen John on channel 2 in Chicago. For the last 19 years as a weatherman, he has brought a professionalism and dedication to his work that is a model for all of us. John had the difficult task of forecasting weather in the Windy City, a place so diverse in its weather, the local saying is if you don't like the weather, wait a few minutes. It will change.

John Coughlin's career is a study in the growth and development of the radio and television industry. Upon completion of his studies at Northwestern University in his hometown of Evanston, John worked as an announcer for WEAW-FM in Evanston, then as chief announcer and program director for WOKZ in Alton, IL, and as an announcer for Chicago radio stations WIND, WAAF, WAIT, and WBBM.

Upon joining WBBM-TV in 1953, John Coughlin quickly became a jack-of-all trades, appearing on regularly scheduled programs and sometimes filling in as anchor on the news. He could be seen in those days hosting locally produced children's shows and quiz shows, such as "It's Academic."

Moving to the weather desk in 1970, he established himself as a solid player in what was to become the No. 1 newscast in Chicago for a number of years.

John Coughlin gave you the weather straight and simple. No shows, no dramatics. No matter what other storms were raging in the news, John's 2½ minutes a night were an eye of calm, cool, accurate reporting.

Chicagoans have been loyal fans of his through the years. When he was replaced in the mid-1970's, the move touched off the largest citizen protest mail campaign against a Chicago television station. Thousands of people wrote the station demanding his return. The station reinstated him, even taking out ads in the local papers announcing "Coughlin's back."

In recent years, he has hosted two children's specials, one of which was awarded an Emmy award by the Chicago Chapter of the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

Sometimes good guys do finish first, Mr. President.

Now, after 36 years, after being seen on the CBS morning news, on top of Walgreen's in the Loop to ring in the new year, as well as accurately forecasting Chicago's constantly changing weather, John is taking his well-deserved retirement.

All of Chicago will miss him. His outstanding work will be long remembered.●

ASSISTANCE TO POLAND

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise today to speak on the $100 million foreign assistance package President Bush promised to the people of Poland. I strongly support this aid, and I believe that we ought to honor the President's commitment.

The $100 million offer cannot begin to cover the problems encountered by the friends of democracy in Poland, who are now struggling to work out a new social and economic compact with the ruling Communist Party and the Polish people. Great gains have been made politically in the past few months. But political reforms, important as they are, are but one leg of genuine reform. The aid package will help the other leg of reform in Poland: economic restructuring toward a freer, more responsive and more productive private sector.

This is one of the most crucial periods in recent Polish history. The forces of democracy and private enterprise now in responsible positions in the Polish legislature now must ask the Polish people to support reform and accept some necessary sacrifices. Credible reform needs and deserves our support now. Inflation is running about 100 percent. The shops are empty. When stores do carry items, there are long lines, and there are terrific shortages, ranging from toilet paper to flour, sugar and meat.

In the economy at large, the figures are no more encouraging: less than $1 billion in hard currency will come into State coffers this year, but the debt servicing level will be in the neighborhood of $4 billion. Much of this debt is owed to governments, not commercial banks. It's clear, then, that the lion's share of the task ahead for Poland will be to find a long-term rescheduling solution, preferably spread throughout the 1990's. This would include adjustment of government debt payment to the Parris Club member governments beyond 1991 and acceptance of Poland into the Brady Plan.

We ought to lead the way with Poland's major creditors, principally Western governments but also the main lending institutions, in finding and initiating a reasonable debt rescheduling plan soon. An early IMF standby program preceding the full development of a reform program would be helpful. And we should urge our friends and allies who have a stake in European stability to help assist Polish recovery with direct aid. But neither of these necessary programs will move very far along if we don't lead the way by honoring the President's commitment. The task at hand right now is for all of us in Congress and the executive branch to find a way to appropriate the $100 million, 3-year aid request.

I suggest that we look at the foreign aid authorization bill to find the sums required. If we take $33 million per year, starting with fiscal year 1990 and making it clear that this is a 3-year program, that ought to be workable. The funding ought to come from the Economic Support Fund account, or preferably from the Security Assistance account within the bill. But we ought to find the money, and do our part in speeding Poland's economic restructuring.

We also need to keep our attention focused on the development of effective programs for Poland. Policy declarations in Warsaw and Paris are necessary but not sufficient. To ensure effectiveness, we should set up a high level, technical working committee to work with their Polish opposite numbers and our allies in such areas as health, environment, housing and food from private agriculture. If we do this, then I am confident other nations will follow our lead and work with us on the larger problem of Polish external debt.●

INTEL CORPORATION'S RECYCLING PROGRAM

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to praise a New Mexico company for its national leadership in its recycling program.

Since June 1, 1989, Intel Corp. of Rio Rancho, NM, has taken the lead by establishing the State's first industrial recycling program. Intel, the main manufacturing facility of Intel Corp., employs about 1,400 at its modern Rio Rancho plant, which I visited this spring. Intel, a producer of semiconductor chips, has taken the initiative to begin a solid waste reduction project at their Rio Rancho plant. In the first 30 days, the company has recycled 4 tons of cardboard, about 3 tons of glass and plastics, and 3 tons of office paper. This is equivalent to a 90-percent reduction in waste that did not have to be transported to the public landfill at a cost of $200 a ton.

As my colleagues know, solid waste reduction is a major concern in New Mexico due to the tremendous controversy surrounding the possible siting of a 24,000 acre landfill in Hidalgo County. This controversy only highlights a national problem regarding solid waste disposal. In the United States, we generate over 160 million tons of solid waste each year. The amount of waste is rising steadily at the same time many areas of the Nation are experiencing shortfalls of permitted landfill capacity. So, it is especially rewarding to commend Intel for taking the lead with its recycling effort.

Intel's commitment is clear. The company's employees have demonstrated that through a concerted effort, industry and other sectors of the Nation can find alternatives to solve the waste problem. The program prompted no grumbling from employees, only questions about how they can help to reduce waste.

It is encouraging to see the private sector take the initiative to develop waste reduction programs that will play a key role in improving our environment. Intel's success supports my view that alternative methods for handling solid waste is an important component of our environmental efforts in this country and an issue we must pursue aggressively.●

CONGRESSIONAL CALL TO CONSCIENCE—SOVIETS STILL IN REFUSAL

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, last week Soviet authorities announced that this year they have granted permission to 1,556 former refuseniks to leave the country. The statement was made in reference to commitments undertaken by the Soviet Union at the January 1989 adoption of the Vienna concluding document. This document, a followup to the 1975 Helsinki accords, stated that signatory States would "take the necessary steps to find solutions as expeditiously as possible, but in any case within 6 months, to all—emigration—applications * * * outstanding at the conclusion of the Vienna followup meeting."

We welcome Soviet acknowledgment of its international obligations in the area of human rights—in the past, the West has had to struggle for even this preliminary step from the Soviets. Furthermore, in the last few years we have witnessed not only increased emigration, but improvement in other human rights areas as well. As chairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I have had the opportunity to meet with the Soviets to discuss these issues and to observe these important changes as they are taking place.

The new Soviet approach to human rights issues has not, however, eliminated our concerns. July 19, 1989, marked the 6 month anniversary of the conclusion of the Vienna meeting. The statement issued by the Soviets last week refers to the large number of refuseniks granted exit permission, but adds to that an admission that 299 others have been denied emigration permission because they, at some point, had access to state secrets or had unspecified other problems. These Soviet figures are inconsistent with those in the West; the United States Government list of refuseniks numbers over 600. More importantly, any arbitrary refusals signal to us that praise for Soviet reforms cannot be without reservation.

Among the unresolved secrecy cases enumerated by the Soviets is that of Leonid and Natalia Stonov, who first applied to emigrate in 1978. Their work at the All-Union Scientific Institute of the Chemical Means of Crop Production, even if it was classified, ended at least 12 years ago. Gorbachev has himself in the past set an upper limit of 10 years on such secrecy restrictions—and that in only the most extreme cases. One of the most recent replies the Stonovs received to their continued pleas to join relatives in Israel was that their request for exit visas could not even be considered until 1992.

Last week, Leonid Stonov received a letter from the Chief of Administration of Internal Affairs dated July 17, 1989. It read:

In accordance with obligations in the Final Document of the Vienna meeting of representatives of the states participating in the CSCE, your request for permission to go to Israel for permanent residence has been reviewed again. However, at the present time the request cannot be answered positively based on the knowledge of state secrets.

In addressing the Vienna 6-month deadline with the publication of emigration statistics, the Soviets are acknowledging their international obligations. But they are not fulfilling them. The Vienna concluding document, as well as many other international treaties and covenants undertaken by the Soviet Union, states that "Everyone shall be free to leave any country, including his own." The Soviets have recently granted unprecedented numbers of exit visas, and so they are correct in citing a relatively small number of refusals. This progress, however, must not allay our concern for the many still denied the freedom to leave their country.

The Stonov family still sits in unjustified refusal. Our message to the Soviets must be clear: We will not forget those who wait.●

CRANBROOK, ALDEN DOW HOUSE, AND GRAND HOTEL BECOME NATIONAL HISTORIC LANDMARKS

● Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. President, during this past week the Secretary of the Interior named 19 additional national historic landmarks. This designation brings well earned prestige to these remarkable sites. My State, where three of the landmarks are located, and indeed the entire Nation are very fortunate to possess such assets. These national landmarks provide excellent examples of the talent and craftsmanship of Americans. They also provide a vital link to our Nation's past. Michigan's three additions are wonderful examples of what I have just discussed and they deserve to be placed with our Nation's finest treasures.

The Grand Hotel, located on Mackinac Island was a favorite among United States Presidents—Theodore and Franklin Delano Roosevelt, John F. Kennedy, and Jimmy Carter are among the nine who paid it visits. This 19th century Queen Ann-style hotel sits on a 100-foot bluff overlooking Lake Michigan.

Cranbrook located in Bloomfield Hills, MI, is a complex of primary, secondary, and art schools along with art and science museums outside Detroit. It was built in 1908 in a range of architectural styles. Some of our finest sculptors and artists along with one of our colleagues, Senator SIMPSON, studied and worked there.

The Alden B. Dow House and Studio in Midland, MI, was a home and workplace of a scion of the family that founded the Dow Chemical Corp. Mr. Dow's widow still lives in the house, which was built between 1935 and 1941. The studios were used by Mr. Dow who was a disciple of Frank Lloyd Wright.

I urge everyone to visit these sites which are open to the public for tours. They cannot be adequately described in a history book; one must see them to fully understand their importance.●

SENATE CONFIRMATION OF DR. JOHN A. KNAUSS AS ADMINISTRATOR OF THE NATIONAL OCEANIC AND ATMOSPHERIC ADMINISTRATION [NOAA]

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased that yesterday the Senate approved the President's nomination of Dr. John A. Knauss to be Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, or NOAA. I would like to thank the chairman and members of the Senate Commerce Committee for acting quickly to bring this nomination before the Senate in a matter of days.

President Bush couldn't have chosen better. John Knauss is a highly acclaimed oceanographer, recognized by his colleagues as one of the most knowledgeable and experienced experts in the field. In fact, John Knauss has helped shape and define the science of oceanography as it is known today. His nomination as Administrator of NOAA is particularly appropriate, since he served on the Stratton Commission upon whose recommendation NOAA was created in 1970.

In 1962, Dr. Knauss left the Scripps Institution of Oceanography of the University of California to become the first dean at URI's Graduate School of Oceanography. During his 25-year tenure, he built the school into one of the top marine research and study institutions in the Nation. Last fall, NOAA announced the designation of the School of Oceanography as a "Center of Excellence in Coastal Marine Studies" at a ceremony in which then-Secretary of Commerce Bill Verity and I took part. That recognition was in large part due to Dr. Knauss' achievements as dean.

Dr. Knauss' abilities and experience have been appreciated not only by Rhode Islanders, but by Presidents. Apponted to two Presidential Commissions, he has also served as chair—and is still a member or fellow—of many prominent marine councils and committees.

Mr. President, NOAA's mission is one of the most important of any agency in the Federal Government today. As you know, NOAA runs a series of diverse operations, including the National Marine Fisheries Service and the National Weather Service, all of which involve the daily monitoring of our global environment.

Right now, we are seeing an explosion of concern—from the President to Congress to kids in school—about the health of our environment. And with good cause. Global warming, air and water quality, and deforestation are some of the major issues directly related to the well-being of our population and our Earth. In this context, NOAA is playing a vital role. To lead NOAA, we need a person with deep knowledge, keen vision, and strong managerial skills. President Bush recognized Dr. Knauss as such a person.

I can think of few others who are as qualified for the position of Undersecretary for Oceans and Atmosphere as is John Knauss. We in Rhode Island know him as the guiding spirit of the URI School of Oceanography and as a respected, superbly-qualified oceanographer and administrator. In the words of a recent Providence Journal editorial, Dr. Knauss can be expected to handle the job of Administrator with distinction.

Mr. President, I applaud my colleagues for unanimously giving this nomination the stamp of approval.●

SEMICONDUCTOR TRADE AND THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, many of us in the United States and around the world are watching with interest the developments in the European Community [EC]. As the 12 members of the EC move closer to their goal of achieving a single unified market by 1992, businesses both within and outside of Europe are busy making the adjustments in their thinking, planning, and operations which will be required. Not all of these developments, however, are encouraging.

The realization of a unified European market is rightly touted as a major event. It will create a market of over 300 million people, with a GNP greater than that of the United States. And while its most significant impact will be on the Europeans themselves, the United States and the rest of the world will also be affected. It has frequently been stated that the EC in 1992 represents a great opportunity for American business. A single market is supposed to stimulate economic growth, thereby encouraging more imports into the EC, while at the same time making the import procedure simpler. Rather than exporting to a single or several small European markets, an American manufacturer will have access to a single large European market.

This is how EC 1992 is presented by its supporters. Concerns have been raised by many trade experts, however, that the developments in Europe could have an adverse impact upon American exports. It is argued that a single European market could be trade diverting. That is, that the European will trade more with themselves but less with the rest of the world. There is even the possibility that the EC will build a "fortress Europe," raising trade barriers to the rest of the world. Those involved with the development of the EC have strenuously denied that this will occur. However, there are disturbing signs that American exports are already being adversely affected.

On August 2, the Washington Post printed an article on how U.S. semiconductor manufacturers are starting to suffer because of EC developments. Semiconductors, which are of course essential in a multitude of high-technology products and industries, represent a multibillion dollar market in Europe. Furthermore, research and development for semiconductors remain at the cutting edge of technological progress.

Until now, American semiconductor manufacturers have been able to sell semiconductors in Europe without much difficulty. Intel Corp., for instance, has been exporting $500 million worth of semiconductors a year to Europe. Other U.S. companies, seeking to avoid the tariff on imported semiconductors, have performed the basic fabrication of the semiconductors in the United States and have then assembled them in Europe—a relatively simple process which qualified the semiconductors as European-made.

New EC regulations, however, are causing European semiconductor consumers, consisting of a wide range of manufacturers, to turn away from American semiconductors. Assembly in Europe no longer qualifies a semiconductor as European-made, it now must be fabricated in Europe as well. This change should effectively shut off the option of fabricating semiconductors in the United States and assembling them in Europe. American manufacturers will have to either manufacture the semiconductors completely in Europe or make them in the United States and pay the import duty for shipping them to Europe.

Unfortunately, the opportunities for exporting semiconductors to Europe, even with the burden of a 14-percent tariff—the United States has no tariff for semiconductor imports—are also being restricted. Other new EC regulations are requiring a higher European content in many electronic products in order for those products to qualify as European-made. Therefore, these various products must include fewer American-made semiconductors. As a result, many European manufacturers have been informing their American semiconductors suppliers that they have to use European-made semiconductors. Since the option of simply assembling semiconductors in Europe has been eliminated, American semiconductors manufacturers are basically left with but one option, if they wish to preserve their customers: they must relocate their production facilities to Europe.

European manufacturers have been telling American semiconductor manufacturers that they need to relocate to Europe, and many are seriously exploring this possibility. Intel Corp. has already decided to enter into European manufacturing. Implications for the American economy, if this trend continues, are obvious. A decline in exports will only worsen our national trade deficit. Further, a typical semiconductor fabrication plant employs around 3,000 workers. Along with the potential loss of jobs, there is a distinct possibility that research and development programs could also be lost, as such facilities are usually located close to the semiconductor manufacturing centers.

EC officials claim that European manufacturers are reacting to fears that regulations could become tougher, rather than fact. This may be the case. The chairman of Intel Corp., Gordon Moore, agreed that the decision to move to Europe was based upon customer uncertainty rather than actual EC regulations. Nevertheless, there is clearly some basis for these concerns. As pointed out before, the EC has already implemented regulations which are having a negative impact upon U.S. semiconductors exports. The fear is that more restrictions are to come.

The Washington Post notes that Secretary of Commerce Robert Mosbacher has indicated that the Administration is becoming more concerned about EC barriers to American semiconductor exports. I certainly hope so. We need to pay close attention to development in the European Community. There might be new opportunities for American business in Europe by 1992 and beyond, but it is not sufficient to merely observe the changes. We in the United States must do all we can to ensure that American business and our national economy are not impaired by developments in Europe. As friends and allies, neither the United States nor the EC desires increased friction in our trade relationship. Still, I wish to take this opportunity to note my concern over recent EC developments, and to remind our European counterparts of their promise not to create a protectionist community. I urge that the necessary steps be taken right now to ensure open and fair trade between the United States and the EC.●

SENATE NEEDS TO RESTORE THE ASSET CAPITALIZATION PROGRAM

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senate Armed Services Committee has brought to the floor a basically good bill.

Of particular interest to me is the operations and maintenance [O&M] accounts. Here we find the substance of our ability to achieve readiness, and once engaged, to sustain our forces in battle.

The so-called Major Force Program VII accounts contribute to this capability. They include the depot maintenance, supply, and industrial fund operations that are very technical, complex and, I regret to say, for that reason, not terribly popular or debatable issues in this Chamber. Except for the better known more easily defined civilian pay accounts, most of the work on O&M programs is done within the context of informal committee meetings with DOD officials.

I hasten to commend the committee's wisdom this year, Mr. President. Readiness got a snappy salute: the committee came to grasps with the growing backlog of equipment awaiting repair—which means equipment that wasn't getting back into the hands of our forces—a serious deficiency in our ability to train against the overwhelming odds our forces will face—by increasing the Army depot maintenance accounts in the amount of $100 million, with another $65 million going to each of the two other services.

The committee has also increased civilian pay by 2 percent, as we heard earlier this week. In Utah, the Tooele Army Depot and the Ogden Air Logistics Center employ nearly 25,000 persons who will stand to benefit. I know many of them personally. Their morale has suffered over the past 2 years, but their productivity and commitment never faltered. I wish we could have given them a better shake.

The news is not entirely good, unfortunately. The Asset Capitalization Program risks a serious setback. While the House left the President's request intact, the Senate Armed Services Committee shifted ACP funds to the "Other Procurement" accounts. The committee, I believe, did not provide a sufficient justification, nor a remedy for making this important account produce the benefits that it should. A recent GAO report describes ACP as a program that "offers great potential as a technique for financing projects needed to modernize [depot] operations."

In fact, the Committee cites GAO criticisms of the program that have either been corrected, or are already well under control. These include what had been inadequate oversight, what had been unclear guidance from OSD, and what had been a program without a functional manager at the OSD level.

GAO itself, nowhere in the report, recommends gutting the program by shifting its funds and resources. I say "gutting" because by putting ACP funds in the Other Procurement account, where, in the words of the Committee, "ACP projects [will] compete for funds with other capital investment projects in the military services," ACP will lose. Indeed, several years ago we shifted these funds from procurement to ACP for that very reason: ACP projects were not getting their fair and intended share.

Let me explain why ACP needs to be funded: First, the moneys are not appropriated directly, as GAO takes pains to explain, but are generated from fees paid by customers, that is, the units that send their equipment to the depots for work. ACP, in other words, is a low-cost, self-sustaining source of moneys to make its own capabilities more productive.

Second, ACP invests in equipment that modernizes plant productivity. Today, as I can attest from my Labor Committee position and from my board role with the Office of Technology Assessment, virtually the only way that productivity enhancements can be realized is through equipment upgrades, to include computers and computerized factory floor equipment, the bulk of ACP purchases.

How much can ACP improvements save? Over a 10-year cycle at the Ogden Air Logistics Center in Utah, these savings amounted to over $350 million. In addition, again at the Utah facility alone, total anticipated savings from the ACP projects already in process are over $600 million. That's over one-half billion dollars, Mr. President. And from Utah alone, I need only mention that there are five other ALC's in the Air Force, and as many depots in each of the other two major services, the Army and Navy.

Let me add a few final comments. There are still other hidden benefits in the ACP program. Industrial modernization projects at these depots make them more competitive—we must remember that Army and Air Force depots are statutorily required to maintain threshold capabilities for peacetime use, without which they will set back a wartime mobilization and general effort.

In addition, such facilities can demonstrate the commitment of the public sector to establishing model facilities. Private commercial networks evolve around modernized, not outmoded governmental facilities. They provide encouragement and experience to the private sector, and they provide a training base for sectoral skills to form in the geographical community and region.

Nor do I want our public facilities that must compete and must remain operational to be humiliatingly inept. I saw a morale problem emerge at Tooele Army Depot a number of years ago when our equipment and plant became outmoded, even dangerous to our workers. It was a disgrace. It would not occur in the private sector, because employees would look elsewhere, taking their skills to plants where the worker was respectfully treated.

But, Mr. President, many industries that work with DOD, and depend on these depots and centers to provide maintenance for the systems they build and design, want to move forward. Working with OSD, they are demonstrating how concurrent engineering, for example, can produce tremendous costs savings, the type that their modernization programs are already generating. Boeing's Missile Division, to take just one case, introduced process improvements of the variety we are discussing and reduced their labor rate and parts and materials lead times by 30 percent in each category. Design time was reduced by 90 percent, while floor inspections, or quality control times, were reduced by over 65 percent. All this with a 99-percent defect-free operation. I believe that our depots, with their skilled work forces can match these records. I want to give them the chance.

Mr. President, I do not want to belabor these points. The advantages are too well known, especially to my distinguished and informed colleagues on the Armed Services Committee. I am hoping, therefore, that we can remedy this apparent oversight of ACP's value in conference.●

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM VON RAAB

● Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, as the Customs Service marks its 200th anniversary, it is appropriate to pay tribute to an individual who did much to make the Customs Service the highly respected agency of Government that it is today.

William von Raab perhaps is best known for his tough approach to law enforcement and drug interdiction. Under his leadership, Customs:

First, more than doubled its resources devoted to drug interdiction;

Second, installed a toll-free hotline for citizens to report drug smugglers;

Third, bolstered Customs' Border Patrol force, which now includes 100 aircraft, 250 vessels, and increased personnel on our southern border; and

Fourth, took significant action to keep illegal textile imports out of the United States;

I particularly want to commend Commissioner von Raab for standing up to the State Department when the State Department tried to convince the Senate that certain drug-producing countries, such as Mexico and Panama, were fully cooperating in controlling the production and distribution of drugs. It was Commissioner von Raab who candidly and publicly linked Manuel Noriega and Fidel Castro to drug running activities.

Commissioner von Raab was one of the finest individuals ever to serve as Commissioner of Customs, and his integrity and aggressive law enforcement will be sorely missed by the administration, the Congress and by the American people.●

HATE CRIME

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, last Tuesday in Marblehead, MA, the Temple Emanu-el Synagogue was desecrated with swastikas and Nazi slogans. The response of Marblehead citizens was commendable. Sunday, 1,400 marchers took to the streets to protest the unconscionable act of vandalism.

What happend in Marblehead, however, was not an isolated incident. Last September, in a similar occurrence, teenagers spray-painted swastikas on the walls of a rabbinical institute in Brooklyn, NY. Not content with mere defacement of property, they then proceeded to set fire to the building.

In November, in Portland, OR, three skinheads clubbed an Ethiopian immigrant to death with a baseball bat in front of his apartment.

In February of this year, a black woman who moved into an all-white neighorhood in Cordele, GA, had a cross burned on her lawn and, 2 days later her house burned to the ground.

In March of this year, an "Aryan Woodstock" was held in Napa County, CA.

In July of this year, skinheads screaming "Kill the faggot!" beat a gay man unconscious in Laguna Beach, CA.

These are only a sampling of the types of crimes directed toward minorities across the United States.

There is an added frightening dimension to this rash of hate in that it is not solely the product of anomalous individuals. Many of the events I have described are the work of groups whose sole mission is the promulgation of such violent intolerance—groups such as the skinheads, the White Aryan Resistance, and the order which openly pledge allegiance to the dogmas of Nazi Germany.

America went to war to fight this sort of racism in 1941. Over 176,000 Americans gave their lives in Europe in the belief that all people have a right to freedom and justice.

That is why it is hard to believe that almost 50 years later America should still be faced with this same sickness—only at home. It belies the truths central to our Nation, and cheapens the sacrifices we have met to defend them. The gaunt faces of the men and women brought out of Hitler's concentration camps should tell us too clearly the consequences of such a betrayal.

And that was the message of the people of Marblehead—that this hatred is intolerable. It undermines the fabric of our society. In the words of Franklin Delano Roosevelt:

> We are a nation of many nationalities, many races, many religions—bound together by a single unity, the unity of freedom and equality. Whoever seeks to set one nationality against another, seeks to degrade all nationalities. Whoever seeks to set one race against another seeks to enslave all races. Whoever seeks to set one one religion against another, seeks to destroy all religion.

One of the great virtues of this Nation is its guarantee of the basic rights of its citizens. It is in the nature of protecting these rights that we must allow a voice to prejudice and intolerance, but it is also our interest to make plain the sickness of this voice. The people of Marblehead did exactly this. Their example is one well worth following.●

SOUTH AFRICA: VENDA "HOMELAND" SUFFERS MASS ARRESTS AND CHURCH LEADERS DETAINED

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I want to draw attention to a very difficult and serious situation in South Africa. It concerns the so-called "homeland" of Venda, an area in the far northern Transvaal of South Africa.

Tensions in this area have been mounting for some time. Residents have increasingly protested the corrupt and harsh rule of traditional chiefs and headmen, and have been concerned about mysterious ritual murders that have allegedly involved government officials. Last August, students in the area successfully campaigned for a "stayaway" to protest police reluctance to investigate the killings.

Now the South African Government is trying to push a celebration of the 10th anniversary of the independence of Venda, a move that is widely opposed by residents in the far northern Transvaal. On July 17 of this year, students called a meeting—which drew 10,000 supporters—to protest the mysterious murder of a school teacher, Mukosi Mavhina, and to protest homeland rule and the upcoming independence celebrations. Just a week before, students leaving a commemoration service for Mr. Mavhina were attacked by police, whipped with sjamboks—oxhide whips—and some were detained.

Equally disturbing are the numbers of religious leaders who have been detained. The Northern Transvaal Churchworkers Conference presented a petition to the State President and other government officials about the crisis, the text of which follows my statement. I am very concerned about the welfare of these church leaders and others who have been detained. Among them are:

The Reverend Mbulaheni P. Phosiwa, acting dean of Devhula Circuit, Evangelical Lutheran Church of South Africa, member of the organizing committee of the Confessing Fellowship—a Christian ecumenical antiapartheid group—who I understand has already been hospitalized as a result of this detention;

The Reverend William Sihlangu—Lutheran pastor, director of Buester Church Center;

The Reverend O.T. Malindi—Church of Christ pastor, organizer of the Confessing Fellowship, United Democratic Front Northern Transvaal Vice President;

The Reverend Nkhangweleni Rannzwa—pastor, Evangelical Lutheran Church, member of the organizing committee of the Confessing Fellowship;

Mr. Solomon Tshintangano—treasurer of the Confessing Fellowship, leader or several Lutheran Youth groups;

Mr. George Phadagi—antiapartheid activist;

Mr. Tshifhiwa Maumela—executive member of the Confessing Fellowship and an editor of the group's magazine;

Justice Gundo Lidovho—public education director of the Mulweli Counselling Center [a recently established legal aid center]; and,

Aifheli Mukwevho—member of the Confessing Fellowship, and member of the editorial committee of the group's magazine;

Tshilidzi MMbadi—treasurer of Matanda Lutheran Church;

David Mphigalale—exmember of the banned Venda Independent Progressive Party;

Phanuel Mutobvu—antiapartheid activist;

Michael Nevari—high school student;

Bethuel Mulaudzi—student;

Edward Malindi; and David Netshivhale.

The serious situation in this area is not at all a cause for celebration. Homeland rule and other tools of apartheid are not supported by the majority of people living in South Africa. Moreover, the international community has unequivocally expressed its strong objection to South African Government's system of apartheid and its attempt to legitimize independence for homelands it has created to further divide and separate South Africa's people.

I strongly urge the South African Government to release all those who are detained, to leave the people—and particularly children—free from harassment, intimidation, assault, and detention, and to investigate unsolved cases.

NORTHERN TRANSVAAL CHURCHWORKERS CONFERENCE PETITION

Petition to be presented to the State President, Minister of Justice, the Chief Justice of Venda and the Commissioner of Police.

We, the churchworkers gathered here at Mbilwi Luthern Church on the 25 July 1989 in an emergency meeting called upon because of the crisis in our area, are greatly disturbed by the following observations.

1. During the same time last year, there was a crisis with similar causes as the current one and we tried to make representations which were not heeded.

2. The police once more seem to be failing to do justice to the murder and suspected murder cases with the result that people mistrust them and opt to carry out searches and investigations themselves.

3. While the police have shown responsible restraint at other places, they have not done so consistently. They have harassed the youths through assaulting and detaining them. The list of those detained include very young children.

4. The government, being fully aware that many people are not in favour of the 10th anniversary celebrations of independence because they are not in favour of the homeland system, continue to force people not only to participate in the celebrations but to pay for them.

We therefore would like to address the following pleas to the President, the Minister of Justice, the Chief Justice and the Commissioner of Police in the name of peace to:

1. Order the police to:

1.1 Stop harassing, detaining and assaulting our people particularly school children—this will make it possible for school children to return to classes without fear of being harassed and intimidated.

1.2 Make concerted efforts in investigating cases which people are dissatisfied about.

1.3 Drop the charges on those who have been arrested for their participation in the current attempts to get to the root causes of the problems, after realizing the incompetence of the police in investigating the cases.

1.4 Order the total withdrawal of the soldiers and police from villages and townships.

We pray that God grants you the wisdom to head our call towards the resolution of the crisis that has engulfed our area.

PRESS STATEMENT

1. We, the Far-Northern Transvaal Churchworkers Conference met on 25 July 1989 at Mbilwi Lutheran Church, Sibass. The meeting was prompted by the situation of crisis which prevails in Venda at this time.

2. The continuing crisis resulted from the deaths of three people in different places all of which occurred in mysterious circumstances.

3. It is these circumstances which gave rise to schools boycotts and general state of tension throughout Venda. In reaction to these boycotts many students have been ejembukked by the police and some were arrested and detained and others charged with public violence and incitement. Some of those detained are as young as 12 years old.

4. We resolved in the meeting to issue a petition to the government. Amongst other demands, the call to stop police brutality and detention of children.

5. Since during the crisis our people showed opposition to the planned 10th anniversary celebration of the homeland independence, we extend a call to the authorities to contribute toward a climate of peace by stopping all the programmers associated with independence celebrations.

6. We also resolved that another meeting take place on Sunday the 30th July 1989 at Mbilwi Lutheran Church, Mbilwi at 14h00.

7. An invitation is extended to all people concerned with the prevailing situations in Venda. The meeting is intended to create a forum where people share experiences and to find solutions for the future.●

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the first budget scorekeeping report for fiscal year 1990, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 308(B) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report was prepared consistent with standard scorekeeping conventions. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Budget Act.

This report shows that current level spending is under the budget resolution by $465.3 biilon in budget authority, and under the budget resolution by $268.6 billion in outlays. Current level is under the revenue floor by $5.8 billion.

The report follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, August 4, 1989.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached report shows the effect of congressional action on the budget for fiscal year 1990 and is current through August 3 1989. The estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of the 1990 concurrent resolution on the budget (H. Con. Res. 106). This report is submitted under section 308(b) and in aid of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended, and meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of section 5 and Senate Concurrent Resolution 32, the 1986 first concurrent resolution on the budget.

This is my first report for fiscal year 1990.

Sincerely,

ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Director.

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE ARTS CONTROVERSY

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, as one Senator who was deeply involved in the creation of the National Endowment for the Arts and as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Education, Arts and Humanities, I am distressed that the current debate over endowment grant-making is being waged largely in ignorance of what our Government endorsed as law almost 25 years ago. The establishment of the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities was not done in a vacuum. Exhaustive congressional hearings were held as early as 1963 to hear from a broad range of witnesses whose ideas were carefully distilled into the landmark legislation that was ultimately signed into law by President Johnson in 1965.

Concern over Government interference in artistic decisionmaking was raised frequently throughout the hearing process by both Government officials and public citizens. It was widely understood that any Federal control would stifle the arts and defeat the purpose of the entire endeavor which was to encourage the reawakening and growth of America's cultural vitality. The unanimous conclusion was that such interference be strictly avoided.

President Johnson echoed these concerns in the following statement conveyed to the Congress in 1965:

We fully recognize that no government can call artistic excellence into existence. It must flow from the quality of the society and the good fortune of the nation. Nor should any government seek to restrict the freedom of the artists to pursue his calling in his own way. Freedom is an essential condition for the artist, and in proportion as freedom is diminished so is the prospect of artistic achievement.

We incorporated these cautions directly into the legislation in an unequivocal paragraph stating that:

In the administration of this Act no department, agency, officer, or employee of the United States shall exercise any direction, supervision, or control over the policy determination, personnel, or curriculum, or the administration or operation of any school or other non-federal agency, institution, organization, or association.

Dr. Barnaby Keeney, who had been chairman of the Commission on the Humanities, said in his report to Congress on the need for a Federal humanities program:

A government which gives no support at all to humane values is careless of its own destiny, but that government which gives too much support—and seeks to acquire influence—may be more dangerous still. . . . It is the conviction of this Commission that the independence of the proposed Foundation's Board will be the best safeguard against interference.

My colleagues and I wrote further in the Senate report accompanying the legislation that:

It is the intent of the committee that in the administration of this act there be given the fullest attention to freedom of artistic and humanistic expression . . . conformity for its own sake is not to be encouraged, and that no undue preference should be given to any particular style or school of thought or expression. Nor is innovation for its own sake to be favored. The standard should be artistic and humanistic excellence.

Over the years both Endowments have been remarkably faithful to this mandate. Financial support, while limited, has been stretched to reach as many American citizens as possible and has enriched their lives in immeasurable ways. The system of peer panel review has proven itself to be durable and effective. It may be an imperfect system but no one can deny what a beneficial effect it has had on our cultural lives. The one concern I have in this regard is an impression held by many that Endowment grants are not as broad-based as they should be. A safeguard here is to ensure that peer panelists are rotated frequently and are representative of all sectors in any given discipline.

The current controversy is especially troubling because of the extremes involved. The extreme nature of Mr. Serrano's and Mr. Mapplethorpe's work, has led to an equally extreme "solution" proposed by Senator HELMS. I found their artwork deeply offensive so it comes as no surprise to me that large numbers of people are similarly offended. The result is a situation that has the very real potential to seriously undermine an agency that is so vital to the continued cultural development of our country.

Before the Congress hastily adopts the Helms solution, should we not step back and consider what such a move will mean? Should we not seek a careful review of Endowment procedures in an effort to gain greater accountability of Federal grants? I urge a reasoned approach that shows an understanding of the original legislative intent for a Federal arts support program.

In this regard, I have made a formal request to the Acting Chairman of the Arts Endowment that the National Council on the Arts undertake a full-scale review of grant procedures and report to me on their findings. Their conclusions will be incorporated into the Endowment's reauthorization process within which any necessary changes to the statute can be formalized.

This process will also afford us the opportunity to explore the questions: Should there be limits on what the Endowment supports with the taxpayer's money? Can we continue to justify spending funds on art that a majority of people may not ever appreciate and some of which is truly offensive? These are valid questions and are ones which the Congress, as steward of the public's money, has the legitimate responsibility to discuss. Balancing the desirability for a climate of artisitic freedom with responsiveness to the taxpayer is a challenge that we should accept.

It is my hope that the Arts Council will reaffirm the Endowment's congressional mandate to support artistic excellence and make any needed changes in procedures so as to assure Congress and the public that funds are being spent responsibly. If this is done with conviction and discipline, I would be reluctant to take further steps to alter a unique system that requires flexibility in order to function effectively. ●

TRIBUTE TO AMBASSADOR JAMSHEED MARKER OF PAKISTAN

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, recently, Pakistan's former Ambassador to the United States, Jamsheed K.A. Marker, returned to private life. Ambassador Marker represented Pakistan with distinction during some of the most critical years in United States-Pakistani relations. His presence here in Washington will certainly be missed.

The events that have confronted United States-Pakistani relations since Jamsheed Marker arrived as the Ambassador to the United States in late 1986 are mind-boggling: the renewal of security assistance for Pakistan, concerns over the Pervez smuggling case, a rise in Soviet-sponsored attacks and terrorism against Pakistan, Prime Minister Junejo's urgent request for AWACS, Congressional concerns with the Geneva accords on Afghanistan and the Soviet withdrawal, the tragic death of President Zia and Ambassador Raphel, and the election of President Ishaq Khan and Prime Minister Bhutto. These are not minor issues Mr. President, but issues that have shaped the course of history.

When I first met Ambassador Marker upon his arrival to the United States in 1986, he already faced a full agenda. His first year in Washington coincided with Congressional review of the follow-on security assistance package for Pakistan. President Reagan, consistent with his commitment to Pakistan's security and independence, requested authority for a 6-year aid package to Pakistan. At the time, Pakistan was being bombarded daily by Soviet-inspired cross border raids from Afghanistan, leaving hundreds of innocent civilians dead. Terrorism within Pakistan surpassed that of any other nation in the world.

In Congress, there were numerous concerns about Pakistan's nuclear program. Many prominent Democrats were calling for an end to all assistance, and, in my view, unfairly blaming Pakistan. But Ambassador Marker effectively assuaged the concerns of many Senators, and articulately impressed upon members, how a cessation of assistance would weaken United States objectives in Southwest Asia, not strengthen them. The pursuasiveness of that argument, resulted in bipartisan support for the restoration of a vigorous security assistance package to Pakistan. I remain convinced, that a failure on our part to follow-through with our commitments, would have had a devastating impact on the security of South Asia.

On numerous occasions over the past 2½ years I met with Ambassador Marker, to express my concerns or solicit his views. The issues were difficult—nuclear proliferation, progress toward democracy in Pakistan, the future of Afghanistan—to name a few. We did not always see eye to eye. But I was always impressed with his candor, integrity, and willingness to convey my concerns to Islamabad.

We are indeed fortunate that President Zia selected Jamsheed Marker for his important post at such a critical time. Jamsheed is perhaps Pakistan's most experienced ambassador—having served a number of important posts including the Soviet Union, Canada, Japan, West Germany, and France, before coming to the United States. It is a tribute to his talent and dedication, that as he leaves Washington, United States-Pakistani relations are stronger than perhaps at any time in history.

I understand that Jamsheed and his delightful wife Arnaz will remain in the United States as private citizens, while he completes a book on the security of South Asia over the past decade. A success story in which he played no minor role.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to welcome to the United States Pakistan's new ambassador, Air Chief Marshall Zulfiqar Ali Khan. I have already had the pleasure of meeting with him, and I wish him the very best during his tenure here in the United States.

Mr. President, I ask that a profile of Ambassador Marker from the New York Times on September 1, 1988, be printed in the RECORD.

The profile follows:

[From the New York Times, Sept. 1, 1988]

LINCHPIN OF U.S.-PAKISTAN ALLIANCE

(By Robert Pear)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—Take a strategically situated country that receives large amounts of economic and military aid from the United States, that is developing the ingredients for a nuclear bomb and that is next door to a country torn by civil war for the last eight years.

What kind of envoy does such a country, in this case, Pakistan, send to Washington?

Jamsheed K.A. Marker, the Ambassador of Pakistan, is described as tough, shrewd and cultivated by State Department officials and members of Congress.

Of all the diplomats in Washington, few work so intimately with the Reagan Administration as Mr. Marker. He has helped forge a joint strategy with the United States in one of the great geopolitical battles of the 1980's, the effort to expel the Soviet Army from Afghanistan. In the process, he has dramatically strengthened relations between Pakistan and the United States, American officials say.

In 23 years of diplomatic service, Mr. Marker has served as ambassador to 15 countries, including Ghana, Rumania, the Soviet Union, Canada, East Germany, West Germany, Japan and France.

"He has been everywhere and knows everybody, not just Helmut Schmidt and François Mitterrand and senior Soviet officials, but literary and cultural figures as well," said Robert A. Peck, a State Department official with 20 years' experience in South Asian affairs.

Mr. Marker said he talks to State Department officials "almost every working day" and meets at least twice a week with officials from the State Department, the Pentagon, the National Security Council or the Central Intelligence Agency. "Our relationship has never been closer," he said.

A MINORITY IN HIS HOMELAND

The relationship, never a romance, was born of mutual need and strategic necessity. Tensions between Washington and Islamabad appeared to increase in the last few months. American officials expressed concern about Pakistan's nuclear program and also asserted that the country was not making enough progress toward democracy. Mr. Maker sought to allay such concerns.

Unlike most Pakistanis, Mr. Marker is not a Moslem, but a Parsee, a member of a Zoroastrian sect descended from refugees who fled Persia centuries ago. His family, like many Parsees, was active in business and commerce, and before he became Ambassador, Mr. Marker worked in family-owned shipping and pharmaceutical companies in Baluchistan. He was also a radio commentator on cricket matches and is a keen fan of the opera, often attending festivals in Bayreuth, West Germany, and Salzburg, Austria. He speaks English, French, German, Russian, Urdu and Gujarati.

His appointment as Ambassador to the United States in 1986 stirred a bit of controversy in Pakistan. People asked how President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq could name a non-Moslem to represent and Islamic country that was striving to bring its own laws into conformity with the tenets of Islam.

Mr. Marker said his selection "shows the tolerance that exists in Islam, as practiced in the Islamic Republic of Pakistan."

Amid the continual rivalry between India and Pakistan, Mr. Marker has won many friends here for his country. Representative Charles Wilson, Democrat of Texas, said, "I have bottomless admiration for the intrepidness with which the Pakistani people have endured Soviet pressure and intimidation, and made it possible for us to prevail over the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan."

Senator Gordon J. Humphrey, Republican of New Hampshire, said Mr. Marker was "a superbly effective, very smooth and self-assured diplomat, a real heavyweight." He said the Ambassador "played a major role in smoothing out the bumps in U.S.-Pakistani relations," especially disputes over Pakistan's nuclear program.

CONDUIT FOR WEAPONS

Pakistan has been the main conduit for American weapons delivered to the Afghan guerrillas, and it has provided a temporary home for more than 3 million Afghan refugees.

"What we did in Afghanistan had a motivation of self-preservation, no doubt," Mr. Marker said. "We saw the danger to Pakistan immediately following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in 1979. We could have tackled the problem diplomatically, tried to negotiate an agreement with the Soviet Union. That would have been the easy solution, and in the short term it would have bought us temporary security.

"But that was never a serious option for Pakistan. There was an instinctive feeling of revulsion at the Soviet action, a spontaneous sense of abhorrence that manifested itself in Pakistan's public policy."

Mr. Marker said that Pakistan's refugee policy was a model for other nations. "If the affluent countries and democracies of Western Europe and the United states had shown even half the compassion that impoverished, embattled Pakistan has shown now, much of the damage of the Holocaust might have been avoided," he said.

NUCLEAR BOMB AND REFUGEES

Born 65 years ago in Hyderabad, in south central India, he was educated at the Doon School, in Dehra Dun, an elite boarding school attended by many of India's future leaders, including Rajiv Gandhi, who is now Prime Minister. Mr. Marker also graduated from Forman Christian College in Lahore, where he studied economics.

Mr. Marker recalled that "we were in the doghouse with the United States in 1979-80," mainly because of American concerns that Pakistan was trying to develop nuclear weapons. He resents the suggestion that Pakistan stood up to the Soviet Union to secure more American aid.

"In fact," he said, "we stood up to the Soviets as a matter of principle before the first aid from the United States for the mujahedeen (Afghan guerrillas). We did what we did as a matter of principle, to prevent a superpower from behaving in such a manner—and, even more important, as a matter of Islamic brotherhood."

TWO VIEWS OF INDIA

Pakistani officials deny that Pakistan was or is trying to build a nuclear bomb. American officials say, however, there is strong evidence that Pakistan has all the components needed to assemble such a weapon. Some members of Congress, alarmed at the evidence, have tried to reduce American aid to Islamabad. Mr. Marker, working with State Department officials, has helped thwart those efforts through a combination of gentle persuasion and aggressive lobbying.

The Pakistani envoy said he had "good personal relations" with India's Ambassador to the United States, P.K. Kaul, whom he described as "a very pleasant gentleman." But he combined this compliment with a verbal thrust, saying that India, because of its economic and political ties to the Soviet Union, had taken "a pusillanimous position" on the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, abstaining on United Nations resolutions to condemn the invasion and welcoming the Afghan President in May with a 21-gun salute.

Mr. Marker met his wife, Arnaz Minwalla, in New York, where she was in the hotel business. Her family owns what is, in effect, the grand hotel of Karachi. "She is his equal as a diplomat," said a family friend, "They are a real team."

After President Zia was killed in a plane crash two weeks ago, the Pakistani Embassy received hundreds of letters of condolence from Americans who admired the Pakistani leader. Mr. Marker answered them all, sending handwritten notes in response to many. He also attended a condolence ceremony held at the mosque here by Afghans grateful for President Zia's support in their struggle.

INTERAGENCY COMMITTEE FOR COMPUTER SUPPORT OF HANDICAPPED EMPLOYEES

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the General Services Administration's Interagency Committee for Computer Support of Handicapped Employees was formed in 1984 to address policy issues relating to Federal employees with disabilities. The Interagency Committee is a consortium of agencies and departments of the Federal Government, which has now reached 25 in number. Though this group has only received minimal direct funding, it has been coordinating work that has an enormous spinoff effect throughout the government and, indeed, into the private and international sectors.

In the past, the Interagency Committee has received funding only for one full-time equivalent [FTE] staff and minimal costs. These funds have not exceeded $50,000. As a result, most of the committee's work has been done by volunteers. The reliance on volunteerism, however, has not provided the continuity and stability necessary for the central functioning of the committee. The responsibilitites of this committee have been growing as the use and role of computers in the daily operations of government increase and as efforts increase to provide equal employment opportunities to persons with disabilities.

The Interagency Committee for Computer Support of Handicapped Employees requires increased funding for fiscal year 1990 in order to address the increasing number of important issues which it faces. For fiscal year 1990, the OMB and the House Appropriations Subcommittee have already approved $124,297,000 for the general management and administration appropriations in GSA. It seems that these funds include sufficient latitude to more than cover the costs of an effectively functioning Interagency Committee. Thus, in the Treasury, Postal Service, and general government appropriations bill, I tried to secure the following language:

GSA is directed to provide $300,000 from the General Management and Administration Appropriation and six full-time equivalent [FTE] staff to fund and staff the Interagency Committee for Computer Support of Handicapped Employees in fiscal year 1990.

Unfortunately, this language was not secured. Apparently, GSA sent a report to the Subcommittee on the Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government which made its level of funding seem sufficient for the needs of the committee. As a result, no funding was earmarked for the committee from the GSA general management and administration's funding in the bill.

While I understand that GSA would like to be able to control its own budget, I would hope that GSA will meet the requests of this committee. The responsibilities of this committee are important enough to thousands of disabled Federal workers that it fully warrants the funding which it has requested. With additional funding, the Interagency Committee can be even more effective than it has been in the past.●

NEWSPAPER CARRIERS RECOGNIZED

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, October 14, 1989, has been set aside by the International Circulation Managers Association [ICMA] as the date to honor newspaper carriers. International Newspaper Carrier Day gives recognition to the hundreds of thousands of newspaper carriers who daily deliver the news to citizens across this country and the free world. They are truly on the frontline for first amendment rights and the disseminators of the freedom of the press.

Chairman Joseph J. Bial, from the Plain Dealer in Cleveland, OH, has stated that this year's theme honoring our newspaper carriers is "The Real News Anchors."

Let us all recognize the importance of the real news anchors, the newspaper carriers who so faithfully deliver the daily news. With that in mind, let us observe Saturday, October 14, 1989, as International Newspaper Carrier Day.●

NATIONAL VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATIONS WEEK

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 103 designating the week of February 18 through 24, 1990, as "National Visiting Nurse Associations Week." I cannot overstate the importance of this joint resolution which will focus attention on the growing importance of, and need for, home health care.

While the general population has only recently come to appreciate the tremendous advantages associated with home health care services, the visiting nurse associations [VNA's] across the country have been providing such services for over 100 years. They originated as the District Nurse Association of Buffalo, NY, in 1885, and they are now the oldest continuously operated home nurse associations.

Trained professionals and community volunteers from visiting nurse associations care for roughly 1 million Americans each year. The VNA's provide these people with a diversity of services such as neonatal care, hospice services, physical therapy, and home IV therapy.

Thanks to the visiting nurse associations nationwide, we have made great strides in these and other, related areas of home care. In recognition of their efforts, I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this praiseworthy joint resolution.●

MOBILE SUBSCRIBER EQUIPMENT

● Mr. BOND. Mr. President, over the past few weeks several statements have appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD regarding the Army's Mobile Subscriber Equipment [MSE] procurement. Specifically, these statements relate to the intention of GTE and Thomson-CSF to initiate MSE radio production at Wilcox Electric in Kansas City, MO. Unfortunately, a sound business decision is being complicated by other considerations. Thus, I believe several important points require clarification.

The Army MSE contract was awarded to GTE Government Systems Corporation in December 1985. When the request for proposal for the MSE program was released to industry for quotation as a Non-Developmental Item [NDI] acquisition, only two systems meeting the functional specifications existed, both of them heavily dependent on foreign vendors. Thomson-CSF, a French company teamed with GTE to bid MSE and became the largest subcontractor of a total of 32. GTE's and Thomson-CSF's bid was by far the lowest bid.

Because the contract was solicited as an NDI and the two competing contractors were both offering foreign developed systems, the solicitation contained a special economic acquisition provision [SEAP]. The purpose of the SEAP clause was to encourage and assure that the winning offeror would expend the maximum possible amount of dollars in the United States, thereby benefiting the American workforce.

Both of the competing offerors submitted their own percentage goals to meet this requirement. The GTE contract states that 76.5 percent of the total cost expenditures must be incurred within the United States. GTE's compliance with that clause is evaluated semiannually and should they be found in noncompliance, the clause contains an option for significant payment withholding.

After contract award in 1985, Thomson-CSF contracted with NavCom Defense Electronics, a division of Gould located in El Monte, CA, for the production of MSE-related components. Gould was subsequently purchased by Nippon Mining of Japan. Eventually, in mid-1988, the management of NavCom purchased the division in a leveraged management buyout. At that time, Thomson-CSF negotiated a contract with NavCom to produce MSE radio components for option years 1 and 2 only. Thomson-CSF has, and fully intends to continue, total compliance with the provisions of this contract with NavCom.

Early this year, following extended negotiations with NavCom, Thomson-CSF selected Wilcox Electric, its American subsidiary, for production of option years 3 through 6 MSE radio production. Wilcox has been operating in the State of Missouri for more than 50 years. It currently manufactures air traffic control systems for the FAA and aviation industry, as well as ground radar, navigation and landing systems for the Defense Department. At present, GTE and Thomson-CSF in accordance with U.S. procurement regulations are in the process of requesting Government approval for initiating production at Wilcox.

Thus, Mr. President, the facts are these. First, Thomson-CSF is not discontinuing its radio production subcontract with NavCom Defense Electronics or in any way abrogating its current agreement with NavCom. As I noted, that contract is for option years 1 and 2 only, and Thomson-CSF fully intends to honor the contractual obligations contained therein. For the remaining option years, Thomson-CSF will contract with its American subsidiary, Wilcox Electric, for the production of necessary radios.

To suggest, as some have, that this decision will have far-reaching ramifications on our Nation's economy in general, as well as a deleterious effect on our national security, is absolutely false. Not a single American job will be lost to our Nation's economy as a result of this decision. In fact, a significant number of jobs, possibly as many as 300, will be created in the Kansas City area.

Assertions have been made that Wilcox is not a DOD contractor and that the facility in Kansas City is little more than an empty building. This is not true, infact, Wilcox is a DOD contractor with three active contracts having a combined value in excess of $7 million, with options which will increase over $30 million. Furthermore, Wilcox has already begun the acquisition of equipment, the reorganization of the factory floor, and training of employees necessary to establish production in Kansas City and meet the Army's MSE production schedule in a cost efficient manner.

The suggestion has been made that because Wilcox is a subsidiary of Thomson Corp. of America which is a subsidiary of Thomson-CSF of France it will not meet the SEAP incorporated in the Army/GTE contract designed to encourage GTE and its subcontractors to maximize the work performed in the United States. Wilcox most certainly meets the SEAP requirement. The company is incorporated and operates in the United States as does it's immediate parent. Furthermore, the intent of the provision, to create jobs for U.S. workers, clearly will be fulfilled by the employment of the American workers living in the Kansas City area. Furthermore, production of the equipment at Wilcox meets the test of expenditures being made in the United States to create jobs for Americans. The Army agrees, recently stating "the fact that Wilcox is owned by a foreign parent company does not disqualify them as a U.S. production source for the purposes of SEAP compliance."

Although Wilcox is in fact owned by Thomson Corp. of America which in turn is owned by Thomson-CSF of France, the employees of Wilcox are my constituents. The jobs created by initiating MSE radio production at Wilcox will go to Missouri workers and the capital investment and economic expansion will occur in the United States, not in France.

Unlike some foreign acquisitions of American firms, the technology transfer which has taken place with Thomson-CSF's purchase of Wilcox has flowed from France to the United States. Thomson-CSF has provided the capital and technology to make Wilcox a significant competitor in the field of defense and aviation technology. The clear result has been, and will continue to be, additional jobs and economic growth in the Kansas City area.

Mr. President, the decision to initiate MSE radio production at Wilcox has nothing to do with lack of patriotism on the part of GTE as some have suggested. It has nothing to do with France's denial of an overflight for the attack on Libya. Furthermore, there has not been duress or some undue influence placed by Thomson-CSF on GTE to make this decision. The charges to the contrary are unfortunate political pandering and blatant misrepresentations.

Mr. President, the decision to initiate MSE radio production at Wilcox for option years 3 through 6 of the program was simply a business decision based on sound economic principles. This is not part of a grand scheme or conspiracy to takeover the productive capacity of the United States. Thomson-CSF from the very beginning, has taken every action possible to ensure they comply with the SEAP requirements of the MSE contract. In spite of difficulties encountered with Gould and NavCom, Thomson-CSF has maintained their delivery schedules of the radios and will continue to do so.

The decision to initiate production at Wilcox is a business matter, nothing more and nothing less. Congress should allow GTE and Thomson-CSF to continue to ensure that the MSE program remains on schedule and on budget and not be drawn by false charges to make a political entry into economic competition among American workers.●

MEDICARE PRESCRIPTION DRUG UTILIZATION REVIEW

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise today to focus the Senate's attention on what I view as the critical, hidden benefit of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988—the drug safety program established as part of the act's new prescription drug benefit. As one of the principal authors of the prescription drug program, I remain firmly committed to seeing its full and effective implementation.

Each year, millions of older Americans run the risk of illness, depression or even death because they are taking too many or the wrong combination of prescription drugs. Each year, more than 250,000 of these elderly patients need to be hospitalized for adverse drug reactions or their side effects.

Knowing this, we built safeguards in the catastrophic law to protect Medicare beneficiaries from potentially lethal combinations or adverse reactions to prescription drugs. The law requires that a comprehensive tracking system, or drug utilization review, be put into place that gives pharmacists the means of identifying potentially adverse drug interactions each time a Medicare patient asks to have a prescription filled.

Once fully implemented, nearly 27 percent of all Medicare beneficiaries, or 9 million individuals, will receive an average benefit of $672 each year under the new prescription drug program. One hundred percent of all beneficiaries will be protected under the drug safety program and potentially spared from unintended, but life-threatening side effects. Simply put, Mr. President, Medicare's drug safety program can save both lives and dollars by preventing hospitalization or other medical treatments.

Regrettably, the Health care Financing Administration [HCFA] is proceeding down a track in implementing the drug safety program that, if not altered, will undermine congressional intent. As confirmed by the recent report of the General Accounting Office [GAO], HCFA's plans for drug review are severely limited and will only allow for the identification of a fraction of drug interactions that endanger human lives.

Mr. President, it was out of concern over implementation that Senator WILSON and I introduced legislation, the Drug Utilization Review Act of 1989 (S. 859), to make certain that a complete and comprehensive system of drug utilization review is created, with adequate confidentiality protections for patients and providers alike. This same legislation has been introduced in the House (H.R. 2677) by Representative SNOWE.

It was also out of this concern that I, together with Senator WILSON and Senator PRYOR, have repeatedly urged that HCFA take a comprehensive approach to drug review in their final request for proposals [RFP] for the administration of Medicare's new drug benefit. To date, none of our many letters to the Acting HCFA Administrator or the Secretary have been answered. I request, Mr. President, that copies of these letters and S. 859 be included in the RECORD.

This initial concern on my part elevated to outrage 2 weeks ago when HCFA refused to wait a mere 24 hours before releasing their final request for proposals—so that we might all have a chance to review the findings of the GAO's study.

It appears, Mr. President, that congressional intent and congressional intervention have fallen on deaf ears. I, therefore, am prepared to press for the legislative reforms offered by S. 859 and H.R. 2677 as part of reconciliation this year. I also remain willing to work with HCFA in finding administrative approaches that address the limitations cited by the GAO.

Mr. President, I thank my colleagues for this opportunity to share my concerns and urge their support of S. 859.

The letters and S. 859 follow:

U.S. SENATE,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING,
Washington, DC, June 1, 1989.

LOUIS SULLIVAN, M.D.,
Secretary, Department of Health and Human Services, Washington, DC.

DEAR DR. SULLIVAN: As promised at this morning's Finance hearing, I am pleased to provide you with the attached copy of S. 859, "The Drug Utilization Review Act of 1989", which was introduced by Senator Wilson and myself on April 19, 1989.

The purpose of our bill is to clarify two very important requirements of the drug utilization review (DUR) program required by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. These are, (1) to insure that Medicare's DUR system is at least as effective and efficient as the computerized systems that already exist in many of the nation's pharmacies and hospitals; and (2) to insure adequate safeguards for privacy and confidentiality concerning beneficiary-specific data reposited in the Medicare DUR systems.

As the orginal sponsor of the catastrophic drug amendment, I believe this bill will strengthen the Department's ability to implement a comprehensive DUR program to protect beneficiaries from adverse drug interactions, protect the Medicare program from unnecessary costs, and protect providers and patients alike from loss of confidentiality.

I welcome your views and any recommended improvements to this legislation, which is currently undergoing technical revision. Should you wish to further discuss this legislation, do not hesitate to contact me or have your staff contact Dr. Joseph Lieberman of my staff at 224-1467.

Thank you for your interest in this important matter.

Sincerely,

JOHN HEINZ,
Ranking Minority Member.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 30, 1989.

Mr. LOUIS B. HAYS,
Acting Administrator, Health Care Financing Administration, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. HAYS: We are writing in regard to the Draft Request for Proposal for the Medicare Catastrophic Outpatient Prescription Drug Bill Program. As sponsors of legislation to improve the drug utilization review (DUR) system to be established under the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act (MCCA), we are particularly interested in HCFA's Request For Proposal (RFP) as it relates to drug utilization review.

The MCCA requires the Department of Health and Human Services to establish a drug utilization review system that identifies, as written in the conference report (H. Rept. 100-661): (i) instances or patterns of unnecessary or inappropriate prescribing or dispensing practices for covered outpatient drugs; (ii) instances or patterns of substandard care with respect to such drugs; and (iii) potential adverse reactions.

The DUR system mandated by the MCCA reflects congressional concern with the growing problem of mismedication among the nation's older population. The congressional mandate further reflects a commitment to establish a comprehensive drug review system to save the elderly from needless pain and suffering and to save the Medicare program from unnecessary costs. In our view, the draft RFP falls far short of congressional intent concerning DUR.

Specifically, we have serious concerns and would appreciate your response regarding the following:

1. The need to provide protections against a full range of potential drug interactions.

. The importance of taking advantage of existing technology.

3. The need to provide protection of data.

On the first point, the evidence in support of the technological feasibility of a comprehensive, nationwide DUR system is compelling. As you are no doubt aware, the General Accounting Office recently issued a report analyzing the attributes of DUR systems operating throughout the country. The GAO report found that existing systems have the ability to identify adverse drug reactions that may result from interactions other than simply drug-to-drug interactions addressed in the draft RFP. We refer here to the interaction of the prescribed drug with one or several other drugs being used by the beneficiary; the interaction of the prescribed drug with a known allergy presented by the beneficiary; the interaction of the prescribed drug with a known physical condition or illness presented by the beneficiary; drug abuses; incorrect dosages; and under, over, and misutilization of the prescribed drug.

We are extremely concerned that the draft RFP excludes many of the above attributes that are vital to a meaningful and effective DUR system. The weight of evidence that these variables are essential to improving the quality of care provided the elderly and reducing costs is significant. However, despite this recognition and the expectation of expanding DUR beyond drug-to-drug interactions, as indicated by the RFP's note of "enhancements for future phase-in," as well as the existence of technology with comprehensive DUR capabilities, the DUR system proposed in the draft RFP is extremely limited. In our view, it would be extremely costly and time-consuming to include additional capabiiities at a later date; such variables should be included from the outset by the RFP.

A second concern relates to HCFA's seeming reluctance to take advantage of existing DUR systems. It would appear that HCFA intends to develop, test and implement a DUR system from scratch by January 1, 1991. As you no doubt are aware, however, systems exist that are in operation and have been tested. The Department of Defense, for example, has operated a DUR system since 1981 in the San Diego area and is currently testing a worldwide system. In light of the importance of DUR to the health and well-being of seniors, we would appreciate learning of HCFA's rationale for not taking advantage of such systems' particularly given the potential for this approach to delay DUR implementation as called for by Congress.

Finally, the draft RFP fails to adequately address the issue of data ownership. A chief concern of ours is that beneficiary-specific data acquired through the Medicare DUR system be afforded adequate safeguards for privacy and confidentiality. It is essential that data acquired by pharmacists and physicians be held in confidence and not disclosed. This requirement must preclude data from being accessed, used or sold for any purpose unrelated to the beneficiary's health care. Such confidentiality protections are necessary to prevent the unauthorized dissemination of information to a third party and to ensure that potentially sensitive medical information cannot be traced back to the beneficiary.

In short, we are concerned that the DUR system, as proposed in the draft RFP, will slow the development and implementation of an effective and efficient DUR system that can protect the elderly from the consequences of mismedication, can contain Medicare program costs associated with unnecessary prescriptions, and can ensure the confidentiality and privacy of beneficiaries.

We look forward to learning how HCFA intends to address these concerns in the final RFP and to working with HCFA to establish a comprehensive and effective Medicare DUR program. Should you have any questions or comments, please feel free to contact Kim Belshe with Senator Wilson's office at 224-5422.

Sincerely,

PETE WILSON.
DAVID PRYOR.
JOHN HEINZ.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, July 12, 1989.

LOUIS W. SULLIVAN, M.D.,
Secretary, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Washington, DC.

DEAR DR. SULLIVAN: We are writing to express our deep concerns regarding the Health Care Financing Administration's (HCFA) failure to follow congressional intent in developing the drug utilization review (DUR) component Medicare's outpatient prescription drug benefit. The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act (MCCA) requires the Department of Health and Human Services to establish a program to identify instances or patterns of inappropriate prescribing or dispensing practices and substandard care for covered outpatient drugs and to monitor for potential adverse reactions.

We urge you, as the Health and Human Services Secretary, and as a physician, to take an immediate personal interest in this matter, as HCFA's current plans for the prospetive DUR system are seriously flawed and fail to provide for quality of care and economy in Medicare's new drug benefit. The level of protection offered in HCFA's draft request for proposal (RFP) is inadequate to meet the needs of older Americans for professional screening of their prescriptions before they are dispensed.

As leaders of the House and Senate Aging Committees, we maintain that Medicare's 33 million beneficiaries are deserving of protections against drug-induced adverse reactions which are at least equal to those routinely provided by already existing prospective electronic point-of-sale DUR systems that have been operating for years in both the government and private sectors. HCFA's draft RFP provisions for a computerized DUR provides only a fraction of what existing systems can do to save Medicare and its beneficiaries from the costly consequences of adverse drug reactions. These consequences include the human costs of discomfort and disorientation, pain, suffering and even death, in addition to the unnecessary expenditure of billions of dollars on preventable hospitalizations and nursing home placements.

For example, HCFA has chosen to screen only 225 pairs of drugs for potentially severe adverse drug interactions, when existing prospective DUR systems include computerized screening for many thousands of potentially dangerous drug combinations. For the top 25 drugs commonly prescribed for the elderly, only about 10 percent of the known potentially severe adverse interaction drug pairs would be detected by HCFA's proposed system. Furthermore, the proposed system ignores other standard components of currently operational DUR systems such as drug to allergy, cross-sensitivity and drug to disease precautions which can be critical in preventing significant morbidity and mortality in the elderly population.

Similar concerns have been expressed by a number of organizations in response to HCFA's May, 1989, draft RFP. For instance, the American Society of Hospital Pharmacists (ASHP) stated in its comments that it was "extremely concerned about the incomplete and inaccurate information" included in the lists and tables for therapeutic duplicates, severe potential drug interactions and drugs with significant adverse effects if the maximum daily dosage is exceeded. Indeed, ASHP recommended that the maximum daily dosage item be deleted from the draft RFP as "the information contained in it is very dangerous to Medicare beneficiaries." The American Association of Retired Persons (AARP), in its comments, stated that the "DUR specifications as described in the draft RFP fall far short of Congress' mark."

We are also concerned that HCFA appears to be giving only superficial attention to the development of a comprehensive prospective DUR system as integral to the Medicare prescription drug benefit. Indeed, one high official has publicly characterized these essential protections as "bells and whistles" which Medicare cannot afford to implement initially. We maintain that a cost-effective comprehensive DUR system should and can be designed and planned for from the very outset. We also question how thoroughly HCFA has evaluated the existing technology in the private sector which can be adapted to provide comprehensive Medicare patient medication profiles at little or no additional cost or response time. Because of our concern that HCFA was not proceeding according to congressional intent in implementing the DUR, several of us recently introduced in the Senate and House the "Drug Utilization Review Act of 1989" to ensure that Medicare beneficiaries would not be short-changed with second-class drug safety.

Therefore, we urgently request that you delay HCFA's finalizing of the RFP until you have reviewed a soon-to-be published report on this matter by the U.S. General Accounting Office. Furthermore, we recommend that you initiate an inquiry into HCFA's rationale for providing Medicare beneficiaries with only a minimal, substandard DUR system and to review whether comments on the draft RFP are being sufficiently taken into account in HCFA's redrafting of the final RFP. We would very much appreciate receiving a report on your findings at the conclusion of your inquiry.

Thank you for your assistance and cooperation on this vital matter.

Sincerely,

OLYMPIA J. SNOWE.

U.S. SENATE,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING,
Washington, DC, July 20, 1989.

Hon. LOUIS SULLIVAN, M.D.
Secretary, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Washington, DC.

Dear Dr. SULLIVAN: We are writing to express our frustration with the Department's failure to take advantage of existing state-of-the-art drug safety monitoring systems in its implementation of the Drug Utilization Review provisions of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. With this letter, we are forwarding to you for review and comment the enclosed General Accounting Office report. We would also like to take this opportunity to formalize and urge your positive response to our request, initially conveyed by staff to Messrs. Kavanaugh and Walker on July 12, that the RFP be amended to take into account the concerns documented by GAO.

Moreover, we feel compelled by the present impasse to seek your further assistance. We would appreciate your instructing appropriate officials of the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) to deliver to the Committee office by July 31 copies of any and all documents pertaining to review and evaluation of existing drug utilization review systems in the public and/or private sectors. These documents should include any and all memoranda, letters, and draft reports on this subject which are reposited in written or electronic form in HCFA's offices.

Thank you for your assistance with this important matter.

JOHN HEINZ.
PETE WILSON.

S. 859

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Drug Utilization Review Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. DRUG UTILIZATION REVIEW SYSTEM ESTABLISHED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1842(o)(4) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(o)(4)) is amended—

(1) by striking "electronic system" and inserting in lieu thereof "electronic system including a 'Drug Utilization Review System' as described in section 1834(c)(9)"; and

(2) by striking "carriers and participating pharmacies" and inserting in lieu thereof "carriers, participating pharmacies, pharmacists and dispensing physicians as described in section 1834(c)(9) (including those who dispense by mail)".

(b) PROVISIONS.—Section 1834(c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(c)) is amended by redesignating paragraph (9) as paragraph (10) and by inserting after paragraph (8) the following new paragraph:

"(9) DRUG UTILIZATION REVIEW SYSTEM.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Drug Utilization Review System (hereafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'system') established under section 1842(o)(4) and described in this paragraph shall for each covered outpatient drug prescribed to an individual eligible for benefits under this title (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as a beneficiary) identify potential adverse drug reactions that may result from—

"(i) the interaction of the prescribed drug with one or several other drugs being used by the beneficiary;

"(ii) the interaction of the prescribed drug with a known allergy presented by the beneficiary;

"(iii) the interaction of the prescribed drug with a known physical condition or illness presented by the beneficiary;

"(iv) drug abuses;

"(v) incorrect dosages; and

"(vi) under, over, and misutilization of the prescribed drug.

"(B) BENEFICIARY DISCLOSURE.—No beneficiary shall be required to disclose information under this paragraph as a condition of receipt of benefits under this title.

"(C) ACCESS AND INFORMATION.—The system shall provide participating pharmacies (as described in section 1842(o)(1)) pharmacists and dispensing physicians (as described in this paragraph) prompt 24-hour electronic access to a medication profile for each beneficiary for whom such participating pharmacy, pharmacists or participating physician prescribe a covered outpatient drug. Such medication profile shall provide for each beneficiary—

"(i) a full listing of information pertinent to drug utilization review of all covered drugs (including drug name, dosages, quantities, methods of administration, last date dispensed, the identity and location of the prescribing physician or dentist, and the identity and location of the dispensing pharmacy) prescribed to the beneficiary within the preceding 180-day period; and

"(ii) information, when appropriate, pertaining to the potential for a beneficiary's drug regimen to produce an adverse drug reaction, as described in subparagraph (A), if the current regimen were to be continued, or if the drug regimen were to be changed in a manner specified by the treating physician. Such information regarding the potential for adverse drug reactions shall be based upon the standards for appropriate prescribing of covered outpatient drugs developed and established by the Secretary pursuant to paragraph (5) of this subsection.

"(D) AGREEMENT OF PARTICIPATING PHARMACIES, PHARMACISTS, AND DISPENSING PHYSICIANS.—Prior to allowing a participating pharmacy, pharmacist or dispensing physician access to the system the Secretary shall enter into an agreement with each participating pharmacy, pharmacist or dispensing physician governing access to the system by each participating pharmacy, pharmacist or dispensing physician. Each such agreement entered into between the Secretary and a participating pharmacy, pharmacist or dispensing physician shall provide that—"(i) no beneficiary shall be required to disclose information under this paragraph as a condition of receipt of benefits;

"(ii) the participating pharmacy, pharmacist or dispensing physician shall not access the medication profile of any beneficiary unless the beneficiary (or a person legally empowered under State law to make health care decisions on behalf of such beneficiary) has specifically authorized such access;

"(iii) each such authorization must be obtained from the beneficiary without any coercion or threat of denial of service;

"(iv) any data acquired by a participating pharmacy, pharmacist or dispensing physician shall be held in confidence and not disclosed to any person, other than the beneficiary, except in such cases where consultations between the participating pharmacy, pharmacist or dispensing physician and other health care professionals and representatives of providers involved in the beneficiary's health care are medically necessary;

"(v) the participating pharmacy, pharmacist or dispensing physician may be allowed to access the system only for the limited purposes described in this section; and

"(vi) each beneficiary shall receive written notice of the requirements of subsection (c).

The Secretary shall provide for participating pharmacies, pharmacists and dispensing physicians access to the system according to the provisions of this paragraph beginning January 1, 1991.

"(E) PROHIBITION OF DISCLOSURE.—It shall be unlawful for any person to disclose any information contained in the medication profile of any beneficiary as described in this paragraph, other than as authorized under this paragraph. Any person violating the provisions of this paragraph shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both. Any medication profile of any beneficiary compiled and maintained under this paragraph shall be considered privileged information under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and therefore not subject to subpoena or discovery proceedings in a civil action.

"(F)(i) For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'dispensing physician' means—

"(I)(aa) an entity which is authorized under State law to dispense outpatient drugs covered under this title; and

"(bb) which is owned, in part or in whole, by a physician or group of physicians; or

"(II) a physician who is authorized under State law to dispense outpatient drugs covered under this title; and

"(III) an entity or physician described in subparagraph (A) or (B) which or who has entered into an agreement with the Secretary under this paragraph.

"(ii) For purposes of this paragraph the term 'pharmacist' means a pharmacy which is authorized under State law to dispense outpatient drugs covered under this title and which has entered into an agreement with the Secretary under this paragraph.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1834(c)(5)(A) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(c)(5)(AA)) is amended—

(1) by striking "reactions" at the end of clause (iii) and by inserting in lieu thereof "reactions as described in paragraph (9); and"; and

(2) by adding at the end of clause (iii) the following new clause:

"(iv) the need for a study, and a design for an expansion of the Drug Utilization Review System established under section 1842(o)(4).".

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS AND EXPENDITURES.—(1) There are authorized to be appropriated from the Federal Catastrophic Drug Insurance Trust Fund such sums as are necessary to establish and to maintain the Drug Utilization Review Sytem described in this section.

(2) There are further authorized from the Federal Catastrophic Drug Insurance Trust Fund such sums as are necessary to allow no fewer than 10,000 participating pharmacies, pharmacists and dispensing physicians to access the Drug Utilization Review System in the first fiscal years for which such access is authorized.

(e) STUDY AND REPORT.—(1) The Secretary shall conduct a study examining the efficacy of, and propose a design for an expansion of the Drug Utilization Review System as described in this section, that shall include all medicare eligible outpatients who are inpatients, and that shall include in the system, information on over-the-counter drugs and biologicals.

(2) The Secretary shall submit a report containing the findings of the study conducted under paragraph (1) to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the House Committee on Ways and Means by no later than October 1, 1992.

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall become effective upon the date of enactment of this Act.●

THE UNWILLING ENEMY OF THE OTHER

● Mr. GORE. Mr. President, recently, I was looking through some boxes of books in my office, to see what to keep. In the process, I came across a book called "The Mars Project: Journeys Beyond the Cold War," written by our colleague SPARK MATSUNAGA in 1985. You know, we are always exposed to so much information and argument over policy, that we sometimes forget the moment when even quite important ideas become part of our own conception. Holding SPARK's book in my hand, I was reminded of how important his thoughts were to become as part of my own thinking.

To illustrate, let me read from the last page of the book:

The chief differences between the Space Age and previous ages of civilization are in the unprecedented size, scope, and lead times of its Space Age activities, a global perspective of the targets (the moon in its entirety, Mars, asteroids, giant orbiting structures), and a globalistic approach to the task that organizes the human and material resources of our planet for a coordinated advance into the cosmos. Our human species will rise to the challenge, and begin to reap its benefits, when perceptions and policies are adjusted to accept those differences. Only then will we experience the full potential of the Space Age as a force for constructive change.

The period of transition from the cold war to the Space Age will begin with renewed space cooperation between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. in a broad international framework, governed by goals and procedures that point beyond the cold war toward democratic space. We can initiate that transition today by mobilizing worldwide support for an International Space Year in 1992, highlighted by a number of coordinated manned and unmanned missions. In preparation for the International Space Year, beside stepped-up scientific exchanges and planning, U.S. and Soviet negotiators might resume where they left off in 1978 and arrange a series of complementary shuttle-Salyut missions, joined by the European Spacelab. They would be followed, in 1992, by the construction of U.S. and U.S.S.R. space stations with communications and docking compatibilities and with participation from other nations. The space stations would be designed to serve as launch platforms for coordinated missions deeper into space and for assembling materials for large orbiting industrial facilities. At some point near the turn of the century—sooner or later, depending on the international climate—manned rocket ships would leave space-station launchpads on a coordinated mission to Mars. They would set up a permanent base. Supply ships with fresh crews would follow. As the years passed, the men and women of the Mars project would report exciting new discoveries. Perhaps one of their discoveries, springing from a seed that an earlier generation dared to plant, would be a triumphant awareness of their common humanity.

It was in these pages where, for the first time, I encountered the notion that we and the Soviets needed to embark upon a common enterprise whose emotional and political symbolism would contribute to the healing of the ideological and power-political rivalries which have made each nation the unwilling enemy of the other for so long.

Let me also note that since the foreward for this book was signed in November 1985, just 8 months after Gorbachev's accession to power, its drafting had to have taken place well before anyone could have known what this event was going to mean for United States-Soviet relations. This was, in other words, not a mere recasting of well known events, but an act of political vision, illuminated by generosity of spirit.

I learned from this book, and am happy to have been able to salute its author, if a little belatedly. Time has vindicated Senator MATSUNAGA's insight, and, hopefully, at some future point, his recommendation that joint United States-Soviet activities in space will be carried out shall be realized, along with this vision of the consequences for our relations and for the peace of the world.

As we approach the international space year in 1992, it is worth remembering that SPARK MATSUNAGA was the originator of this idea.●

THE PRESIDENT'S CLEAN AIR BILL

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, stewardship of the environment has a long tradition of bipartisanship. Most of our landmark environmental statutes were crafted by Democratically controlled Congresses and signed by Republican Presidents.

To his great credit, President Bush has drawn on that tradition and lent the leadership of his office to help break the deadlock in Congress which has thwarted all clean air legislation for more than 10 years.

Yesterday, I joined many Senators as a cosponsor of the President's clean air legislation. This legislation is the first comprehensive clean air package to be advanced by an administration this decade. The fact that this bill even exists is significant and perhaps historic. The Executive is once again a player in the clean air debate, a debate which will likely end in enactment of legislation during the course of this Congress.

I was therefore somewhat surprised at the rather harsh criticism of this proposal from some Democratic Members. There is no doubt that the scope of this proposal is ambitious. As many cosponsors will undoubtedly point out, this legislation does not contain provisions with which every Member will agree. I take exception with certain provisions.

However, the President's proposal, especially with regard to the acid rain control provisions, represent a good faith, credible effort to advance the clean air debate. Moreover, when presenting the bill at the White House last week, the President expressed his desire to "break the deadlock on this issue. It is time to cooperate for clean air by passing a new Clean Air Act this year." A New York Times editorial on July 25 correctly characterized the situation. While taking exception with some aspects of the President's bill, the paper said:

> Even so, his proposals represent an important departure from years of White House indifference. They will force industry to think creatively about new technologies. And they challenge Congress to end years of stalemate.

So, the harsh rhetoric is really misplaced. Indeed, it is the kind of rhetoric which has polarized this issue for so long and prevented any meaningful action to protect the public's health and the Nation's environment.

As a member of the Committee on Environment and Public Works, I am pleased to join the ranking Republican, Senator CHAFEE, in sponsoring this legislation. I hope that the committee can present a clean air bill to the Senate in relatively short order. I expect that the committee's product will differ in important ways from the President's proposal. Nonetheless, I hope that all members will recognize the importance of the President's efforts to advance the cause of cleaner air.●

SENATE DISASTER LEGISLATION

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, two nights ago, the Senate passed legislation to provide disaster payments for those who have suffered from natural disasters in 1989. That bill was good in that it provided benefits for both program and nonprogram crops. However, I am concerned about the treatment of nonprogram crops under the drought legislation passed last night. I know that there are some who are saying that we should not provide benefits for nonprogram crops. I don't agree.

Producers of program and nonprogram crops have not been discriminated against in the way they have suffered from natural disasters, and they should not be discriminated against in the way they receive benefits. Simply put, a loss is a loss. It does not matter if the crop loss is corn, or if it is blueberries—it is still a loss of expected income, a loss of money. Because the losses are equal, the benefits to help farmers cope with this loss should be equal for every crop.

In 1986, when natural disasters caused extensive damage to crops, we passed legislation that gave disaster payments to producers of program and nonprogram crops on an equal basis. In 1988, when drought had a severe impact on much of the Nation's crops, we again passed legislation to give disaster payments to producers of both program and nonprogram crops on an equal basis.

The legislation passed by the Senate provides benefits for producers of program and nonprogram crops, which is good, but it does so on an unequal basis. Producers of program crops with crop insurance only have to meet a loss threshold of 35 percent to be eligible for benefits. Producers of program crops without crop insurance only have to meet a loss threshold of 40 percent. Producers of nonprogram crops, however, have to meet a loss threshold of 50 percent, regardless of whether or not they have crop insurance. This uneven and discriminatory treatment is disturbing.

I have sent a letter to Senator LEAHY, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, expressing these concerns and urging him in conference to follow the approach in the disaster legislation passed by the House of Representatives with respect to the determination of crop losses.●

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF FLINT UAW LOCAL 599

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the United Auto Worker's Local Union 599 from my hometown of Flint, MI. This month marks the 50th anniversary of Local 599's official charter.

Since its formation, Local 599 has been one of the most progressive locals in the United States. It has been at the forefront of advancement in the areas of civil rights, plant safety, and equal employment opportunities. Acting as one cohesive unit, the local has made the security and well-being of their workers a top priority. They have been very active with the issues of workers' compensation, child care, job security, equal pay for equal work, parental leave, and an increase in minimum wage—just to name a few.

Local 599 has been a vital part of the Flint community for years. They have worked on numerous civic programs and have spurred many individuals into community involvement. The motto of "think globally, act locally" is not just a cliche to them, it is a way of life.

They will celebrate their golden anniversary on August 19 and 20 in Flint. The festivities will include a 5-kilometer race, a car show, a family picnic, and other special events. These activities serve as a symbol of the community involvement and high quality of life important to the people of Flint Local 599.

I applaud the many accomplishments of Local 599 and wish them a happy and joyous golden anniversary celebration. I would ask that my colleagues join me in this special tribute. Please accept my best wishes for another 50 years of success.●

ITALIAN GOVERNMENT CRACKDOWN ON MISSILE PROLIFERATION

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to praise the Italian Government's commitment to fulfilling its obligations under the missile technology control regime. Recent reports in the Italian press indicate that the Italian courts and security service are cracking down on trafficking in missile technology. As reported by the ANSA, the Italian news service, on July 31, 1989, nine missile experts and technicians who formerly worked for the Fiat Group's SNIA Co., are under investigations for creating front companies to transfer missile technology in violation of Italian laws and regulations.

The revelations in this case are particularly noteworthy because they underline the international nature of the missile proliferation problem. The people implicated in this case had put together 6 companies in Italy and worked together with 13 other foreign companies to manufacture missile parts. According to the article, one of those companies was in West Germany, a signatory of the MTCR; one was in Switzerland; and another was in Monaco. Neither Switzerland nor Monaco are MCTR adherents.

The technology involved in this case was intended for the Condor II, a project to convert Argentina's Condor rocket into a surface-to-surface ballistic missile capable of carrying nuclear warheads. Argentina has been working together with Egypt and Iraq to develop a ballistic missile.

I am pleased to now learn that the Italian authorities have cracked down on this problem, in line with their commitments under the missile technology control regime. I also wish to note that this case is a success story for the level of international cooperation envisioned in the MCTR. According to the ANSA report, the Italian authorities broke this case with the assistance of the Israeli, United States, British, and German Governments. This case further points out the need to broaden participation in the MTCR to include countries like Switzerland and Monaco. This is one element of the comprehensive strategy for dealing with missile proliferation contained in S. 1227, a bill I have introduced and which currently has 19 cosponsors. I urge my colleagues to take a look at the many cases like this that are out there. The problem is urgent. We need to move forward on this critical issue, and I am pleased that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has agreed to hold hearings for an orderly markup and reporting of a bill on missile proliferation. S. 1227 provides a sound basis for the markup process.

Mr. President, I ask to have this article printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

MISSILE EXPERTS IMPLICATED IN ILLEGAL ARMS DEALS

ROME, July 31.—Nine Italians have been implicated in an international ring which trafficked in military technology for the "Condor 2" project, new land-to-land missiles capable of carrying nuclear warheads and which are being built in Argentina.

The nine are missile experts and technicians who formerly worked for the Fiat Group's Snia Company. Rome judges have them under investigation on charges of illegal arms dealing.

After having taken part in the development of "Condor 1," a rocket commissioned in 1981 by Argentina for weather purposes, the nine employees left Snia to create six companies (3 in Rome and 3 in Lazio) and to transform the rocket into a ballistics missile, earning big profits for themselves in doing so, according to the Milan paper Il Giornale Sunday.

Egypt and Iraq were both interested in the "Condor 2" program, according to both Il Giornale and Corriere Della Sera. Through an intricate web of contracts, the six companies worked with 13 other foreign companies involved in the manufacture of missile parts. One of the companies was in West Germany, another in Switzerland, and another in Monaco.

The missile components were passed off as mechanical parts and, having got past Argentina's customs points, were gathered together at Cordoba where they were assembled.

Il Giornale wrote that the "Condor 2" project was born of a secret accord signed in 1984 between Egypt, Argentina, and Iraq and allowed the three nations to develop, in just a few years, a rocket capable of carrying an atomic warhead.

The paper said that it was the Italian military secret service, SISMI, which cracked open the case, after an investigation started in 1987 following tips from Israeli, U.S., British and German secret services.●

THE SUPREME COURT AND "SAFE" ABORTIONS

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, the media and various legal scholars have spent a great deal of time over the last month analyzing the Supreme Court's ruling in Webster versus Reproductive Health Services. In that case, as I suppose everyone knows, the Court sustained a Missouri law which imposed substantial restrictions on State subsidies for abortions, but stopped short of reversing Roe versus Wade.

Four of the justices seem to favor modifying—and perhaps reversing—Roe. Many analysts of Webster have speculated on what would happen if the Court were to allow States to criminalize abortion. Abortion rights activists and many of their allies in the media believe that they know the answer—many women would procure illegal abortions, with grave consequences for their health and well-being.

Those who have advanced this argument commonly assert that, prior to the Court's 1973 ruling, thousands of women died at the hands of illegal abortionists. After Roe, so the story goes, abortions became "safe"—for women, that is, not for their babies.

This argument is not supported by the facts. According to the Centers for Disease Control, the number of women who died from both legal and illegal abortions in the year before Roe is 39. Each of these deaths constitutes a great tragedy. But the CDC statistics soundly refute the assertion that Roe ended an era during which maternal deaths from abortion abounded.

Mr. President, I would like to focus my remarks today on what has happened—and what is happening—to women now that abortion is legally available. Did making abortion legal make it safe? I believe that it did not. Many women have been injured and some have died as a consequence of their "safe, legal" abortions. Ironically, the advocates of abortion, the very people who profess concern about the well-being of women, have been the most vocal opponents of State efforts to protect women who procure abortions from pain, illness and death.

This opposition to health and safety regulations is nowhere more apparent than in Turnock versus Ragsdale, a case that the Supreme Court will consider during its next term.

In that case, the Court will hear a challenge to regulations that the State of Illinois has imposed on abortion clinics for the past 10 years. These regulations are designed to regulate the conditions under which abortions are performed. Remarkably, pro-abortionists oppose these regulations, which neither discourage abortions nor provide legal protection for unborn children. They are designed to protect maternal health, something that one would think "pro-choicers" would want to do.

Nevertheless, they oppose these regulations, and they have brought their case to the Supreme Court. Mr. President, I find this remarkable, especially when I reflect on the terrible abuses, first exposed in a series of articles in the Chicago Sun-Times, that prompted the Illinois General Assembly to call for these regulations more than 10 years ago.

The Sun-Times series, which appeared in the fall of 1978, was entitled, "The Abortion Profiters." Reporters for the Sun-Times and the Better Government Association conducted an undercover investigation of several abortion clinics on Chicago's Michigan Avenue. Mr. President, allow me to read a summary of what these investigators found, a summary which appeared in the November 12, 1978, edition of the Sun-Times.

Dozens of abortion procedures performed on women who were not pregnant. [At one of the clinics, an investigator counted 81 abortions over a period of 2 months that were performed on women who were not pregnant. That represented about 15 percent of the caseload over that period.]

An alarming number of women who, because of unsterile conditions and haphazard clinic care, suffered debilitating cramps, massive infections and such severe internal damage that all their reproductive organs had to be removed.

Incompetent and unqualified doctors, including moonlighting residents, medical apprentices and at least one physician who has lost his license in one State and faces revocation here.

Doctors who callously perform abortions in an excruciating 2 minutes, when they should properly take 10 to 15 minutes, and doctors who don't even wait for pain-killing anesthetics to take effect.

Referral services that, for a fee, send women to a disreputable Detroit abortionist, whose dog, to one couple's horror, accompanied the nurse into the operating room and lapped blood from the floor.

Clinics that either fail to order critical postoperative pathology reports, ignore the results, or mix up the specimens.

Dangerously shoddy record keeping by aides who falsify records of patients' vital signs and who scramble or lose results of crucial lab tests.

Counselors who are paid not to counsel but to sell abortions with sophisticated pitches and deceptive promises.

Mr. President, the Sun-Times series graphically demonstrated that legal abortions are not necessarily safe abortions. Recall that, in the year before Roe was issued, some 39 women across the Nation died as a result of both legal and illegal abortions. According to medical records obtained by the Sun-Times, a dozen women died in Illinois alone over a period of less than 5 years as a result of their abortions in "safe, legal" clinics. Decriminalizing abortion did not make it safe for these women.

Why did these deaths occur? For one thing, abortion is a surgical procedure and all surgery carries certain risks. Making abortion legal cannot eliminate these risks. So long as abortions are performed, some women will die.

But some of these deaths also occurred because the abortions, though legal, were done under unsafe conditions. The Sun-Times, for example, discussed one clinic in which physicians, who were paid on the basis of the number of abortions they performed, had abortion "races."

In staff meetings at the Loop Mediclinic, employees complain that they can't keep up with the doctors' frenzied pace. "The doctors race each other," said a former Mediclinic nurse. "Especially on Saturdays, they compete to see who can get the most patients done."

Doctors there, and in at least two other clinics, are paid by the abortion. They reduce their patients to a row of pencil marks on their surgical suits. At the end of the day, they count the pencil marks to find out what they're owed."

Once the abortions were completed, patients were often hustled out of recovery rooms before they were physically able to leave. The Sun-Times series cited several examples, including that of a 25-year-old rape victim who:

* * * waited from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. for her abortion. * * * When she finally saw the doctor, it was for just 4 minutes—the time he took to perform the abortion.

"I was very weak and woozy in the recovery room," she recalled. "I was lying there about 15 minutes when the lady said, 'You aren't going to get any better sitting there sulking. Get up and get dressed.' "

"I couldn't stand. I had to lie down on the dressing room floor for another half-hour." Six weeks later, her private physician told her she was still pregnant.

Presurgical care at many Chicago clinics was also substandard, the Sun-Times found. Clinic staff invented pulses, blood pressures and temperatures because there was not enough time to check vital signs. Nonmedical staff were often assigned jobs for which they had no qualifications. Two of the investigative reporters, who had worked undercover for several of Chicago's abortion clinics, wrote:

Four of Chicago's abortion clinics gave us jobs we were unqualified to hold and tasks we were untrained to perform. The clinics asked us to do everything but perform the abortions. They wanted us to remove IV's, administer injections, give psychological counseling, and assist in surgery. * * *

Although other investigators * * * refused tasks they were untrained for, we discovered that, in some cases, we were more qualified to work in abortion clinics than those we worked beside.

The abortions themselves were often performed under unsanitary conditions.

Sterile conditions * * * are not easy to maintain when doctors are shuttling 90 women in and out of as few as two procedure rooms a day. In one clinic, the procedure rooms were cleaned between operations by wiping up the blood with wet Kleenex. * * *

Even the doctors don't have time to clean up themselves in some clinics. Investigator Mindy Trossman watched Dr. Arnold Bickham go from one abortion to the next at his Water Tower clinic without washing his hands or donning sterile gloves.

Now I should point out, Mr. President, that the Sun-Times has a pro-abortion editorial policy. The articles in the "Abortion Profiteers" series were accompanied by editorials in praise of legalized abortion and by a daily note to readers, which stated that "safe and compassionate abortion care is available in the Chicago area." The note went on to list phone numbers of three Chicago-based abortion referral services, which readers were encouraged to call. The Abortion Profiteers is not some piece of propaganda churned out by abortion opponents.

Nor were the government agencies that looked into these abuses on a crusade against abortions. Gov. James Thompson, in announcing the appointment of a task force to crack down on some of the seedier abortion clinics, reaffirmed his support for legal abortion. "I have vetoed bills that would drive women underground [for illegal abortions] again and I have to be sure that what we have above ground is operating right," he said. "We either need better enforcement of our present laws and regulations or our present laws and regulations are inadequate."

The General Assembly's Subcommittee on Health, which also looked into the activities of abortion clinics, reaffirmed its support for legal abortions in a report that included a number of recommendations. Its report, for example, criticized "the General Assembly's continuous attempts to overrule the courts and interfere with the right of women to obtain medical [i.e., abortion] services."

Mr. President, the goal of the subcommittee, of the Governor, of the people who wrote the State regulations, of the newspaper that first disclosed these abuses was not to stop abortions, but to stop these atrocities. None of these groups advocated reversal of Roe. None of them supported closing down all the abortion clinics in the State or making abortions more costly or difficult to obtain. Instead they advocated regulatory and enforcement reforms designed to require that abortionists treat their clients as human beings, rather than as so many cattle.

For example, the regulations require that abortions be performed in licensed clinics and that these clinics meet minimal physical plant conditions. They also prohibit kickbacks to counselors who refer women for abortions.

I find it remarkable that these regulations, which were designed to protect women who procure abortions, instigated by a subcommittee that was hostile to the aims of the prolife movement, written by State employees who were in no way trying to make it harder to procure abortions, are being challenged by people who say that they want "safe, legal" abortions.

Mr. President, the abortion controversy has been with us for nearly two decades and it will continue to be with us for some time to come. The Supreme Court will rule next year on the validity of these regulations, State legislatures will debate various abortion-related proposals, and this body will, no doubt, have some discussions about abortion when we return from recess.

But in the midst of all this debate and discussion and controversy, let us be clear that, while Roe versus Wade made abortion legal, it did not make abortion safe. A practice that damages women, kills their babies and diminishes our regard for human life must be brought to an end.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the following nominations: Calendar Nos. 255, 287, 288, 289, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320 and 321, Air Force promotions and all nominations placed on the Secretary's desk in the Foreign Service.

I further ask unanimous consent that the nominees be confirmed en bloc; that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read; that the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, en bloc; that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action; and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

Linda J. Fisher, of Ohio, to be Assistant Administrator for Toxic Substances of the Environmental Protection Agency.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Sherrie Patrice Marshall, of North Carolina, to be a Member of the Federal Communications Commission for the remainder of the term expiring June 30, 1992.

Andrew Camp Barrett, of Illinois, to be a Member of the Federal Communications Commission for the term expiring June 30, 1990.

Alfred C. Sikes, of Missouri, to be a Member of the Federal Communications Commission for a term of five years from July 1, 1988.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Morris Dempson Busby, of Virginia, a Career Member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, for the rank of Ambassador in his capacity as Coordinator for Counter Terrorism.

Richard A. Clarke, of Virginia, to be an Assistant Secretary of State.

Julia Chang Block, of the District of Columbia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Kingdom of Nepal.

Arthur W. Fort, of Virginia, to be an Assistant Secretary of State.

Raymond Charles Ewing, of Virginia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Ghana.

Michael G. Sotirhos, of the District of Columbia, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Greece.

Alexander Fletcher Watson, of Massachusetts, a Career Member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, to be the Deputy Representative of the Untied States of America to the United Nations, with the rank and status of Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary.

Richard Anthony Moore, of the District of Columbia, to be Ambassador Extraodinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Ireland.

William Lacy Swing, of North Carolina, a Career Member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Career Minister, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of South Africa.

Howard K. Walker, of New Jersey, a Career Member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of Americe to the Democratic Republic of Madagascar and to serve concurrently and without additional compensation as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Federal and Islamic Republic of the Comoros.

Sheldon J. Krys, of Maryland, a Career Member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, to be Assistant Secretary of State for Diplomatic Security.

Loret Miller Ruppe, of Maryland, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Norway.

Raymond G. H. Seitz, of Texas, a Career Member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class on Minister-Counselor, to be an Assistant Secretary of State.

U.S. INFORMATION AGENCY

Henry E. Hockeimer, of Michigan, to be an Associate Director of the United States Information Agency.

NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE SECRETARY'S DESK IN THE FOREIGN SERVICE

Foreign Service nominations beginning Allen Lee Sessoms, and ending Karen Leigh Ware (minus One Name), which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the Congressional Record of July 20, 1989.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF SHERRIE P. MARSHALL

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the nomination of Miss Sherrie Marshall to the Federal Communications Commission.

Sherrie is a North Carolinian. She grew up in Durham and was graduated from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and the university's law school

Miss Marshall has always had an interest in the political process and government service. At age 13, she was a page in the North Carolina General Assembly, in the days when Republican members could have caucused in a phone booth.

Mr. President, Sherrie Marshall is extraordinarily well qualified to serve on the FCC. She has served in the legislative and the executive branches. She worked as minority counsel for elections to the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

She has served as a special assistant to the President for legislative affairs. She has also held the important job of associate counsel to the President.

Mr. President, many Senators already know Sherrie Marshall and have worked with her when she was the Director of the Office of Legislative Affairs at the FCC.

She did a superb job there. She handled complex and difficult issues in a professional and fair manner. Her FCC experience will be an asset.

Miss Marshall was a partner in the firm of Wiley, Rein, & Fielding, where she gained the reputation of being a skilled and competent practitioner.

In summation, Sherrie Marshall is an outstanding candidate for the FCC. She has experience and integrity. I am proud of her and I know her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Marshall, are proud of her.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATIONS TO THE FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to express my opposition to the three nominees to the Federal Communications Commission now on the Executive Calendar for consideration by the Senate before we complete our work this week.

This opposition is not personal— I have no doubt that these individuals, Mr. Sikes, Mr. Barrett, and Ms. Marshall, are honorable and decent individuals. They come recommended by several of our distinguished colleagues from their home States, and their backgrounds reflect considerable personal experience in the communications field.

My opposition is based on the belief that these nominees represent a continuation of the FCC's indifference to its public interest mandate, an indifference borne out of the deregulatory zeal characterized by Reagan-Bush ideology and the FCC tenure of Chairmen Mark Fowler and Dennis Patrick.

For the past 8 years we have witnessed an almost total dismantling of the Federal commitment to commonsense regulation of scarce broadcast spectrum. We have even witnessed the FCC abandon reasonable oversight in such areas as children's television and media concentration.

We have seen an alarming trend in radio and television away from standards and toward more and more violent, explicit programming content during family viewing and listening hours. Programming that is suggestive or explicit in its violence toward women and children is particularly on the rise. Yet, we see an FCC apparently determined to eliminate its watchdog role as the final public recourse to these abuses of the airwaves.

Of course, most local broadcasters exercise sound judgment about what goes out over their system. But a growing number of others do not. These are businesses that enjoy a Government-granted monopoly to operate over scarce broadcast spectrum, yet many of them seem to thumb their noses at public concern about programming.

The FCC has a role in curbing this outrageous trend, but it has done little. I am deeply concerned that the three nominees now before the Senate may offer little more than a continuation of the status quo, the Fowler-Patrick-Reagan-Bush mentality of letting the marketplace allow some broadcasters to exploit young minds and ignore community standards for the pure sake of ratings and profits.

I would hope that the nominees before us would bring a new attitude—a public conscience—to an agency that has all but ignored its congressional mandate. But their confirmation testimony before the Commerce Committee earlier this week produced little to assure me that such a new attitude will prevail.

To amplify that concern, the committee heard from three profamily witnesses who strongly opposed these nominations because they are convinced that the Reagan administration's FCC abandoned the public interest and that the Bush administration's FCC has plans for little more than business as usual. Moreover, the administration even refused to give these representatives of profamily organizations a simple audience to press their case for a heightened consciousness at the FCC.

In addition, there are other communications policy concerns that require swift and strong FCC action.

As a few conglomerate cable companies grow more and more powerful, and aggressively move to stifle competition, the FCC has gleefully declared that all is well in an industry that is rife with anticompetitive and anticonsumer behavior.

I believe the FCC should be more aggressive in looking into the cable industry's behavior, but I am not confident these nominees share that concern, expressed by so many of our colleagues in the Congress.

So Mr. President, I want to cast my vote against these nominees as a strong symbolic expression of opposition to the way business is done at the FCC, at the continuing disregard this administration seems to hold for the public interest standard we have honored for more than 50 years as the backbone of communications policy.

FCC COMMISSIONER OFFERS CLARIFICATION OF REMARKS

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this past Monday the Communications Subcommittee of the Senate Commerce Committee held hearings on the Federal Communications Commission nominations.

All of the nominees were asked to state positions on enforcing the laws against the broadcast of indecent material.

One nominee, Andrew Barrett, caused considerable concern when he stated that "there is a market for indecency" and the FCC's role is merely to decide "what the law will allow us to tolerate."

Mr. President, I felt Mr. Barrett should have an opportunity to clarify his remarks and his position if he wished to do so. He told me that he would vigorously enforce the law against the broadcast of indecent material. He said he would use the laws to the "fullest extent to limit the broadcast of indecent material."

Subsequently, Mr. Barrett wrote to Senator HOLLINGS, chairman of the Commerce Committee. In his letter, Mr. Barrett recognizes that "a critical function of the FCC" is to prevent the broadcast of obscene and indecent material.

It is heartening that Mr. Barrett clarified his position on the issue of indecent broadcasts. I ask unanimous consent that the text of Mr. Barrett's letter and a Washington Times article be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ILLINOIS COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Chicago, IL, August 2, 1989.

Hon. ERNEST L. HOLLINGS,
Chairman, Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HOLLINGS: During the confirmation process, a major area of concern raised by Members of the Committee has been the indecent programming broadcast over the airwaves. I would like to take this opportunity to make my position on this issue clear for the record.

I personally abhor the indecency and obscenity that pervades our society today. There is no question that preventing obscene and indecent broadcasts is a critical function of the FCC. The spectrum is a scarce resource, and the FCC has the obligation to ensure that those individuals granted the privilege to broadcast over that spectrum set the highest standards for decency.

I pledge that if confirmed as an FCC Commissioner, I will do everything in my power under the law to ensure that licensees across the nation broadcast programs that comport with the highest moral standards of our society.

I am available to discuss this issue with you in more detail at your convenience.

Sincerely yours,

ANDREW C. BARRETT,
Commissioner.

[From the Washington Times, Aug. 2, 1989]

SENATE COMMITTEE APPROVES BUSH'S THREE NOMINEES FOR FCC

The Senate Committee yesterday voted 15-2 to approve President Bush's three nominees for the Federal Communications Commission and sent the appointments to the floor for expected speedy confirmation.

Committee Chairman Ernest F. Hollings, South Carolina Democrat, said he expected the full Senate to vote on the nominations of Alfred C. Sikes, Sherrie P. Marshall and Andrew C. Barrett before the scheduled beginning of the congressional recess on Friday.

Democratic Sens. Albert Gore of Tennessee and John Rockefeller of West Virginia cast the dissenting votes.

The vote came one day after a hearing that was dominated by the issues of sex and violence on the airwaves.

Mr. Gore said he voted against the nomination as a symbolic protest of eight years of free-market deregulation of the communications industry under the Reagan administration. He said he believed the new nominees would continue the Reagan-era philosophy.

Mr. Hollings, Mr. Gore and others hit hard on TV indecency, noting that until Congress stepped in to ban all indecent TV programs in 1988, the FCC had established a "safe harbor" for such shows from midnight to 6 a.m. when children were presumed not to be watching.

"Garbage is garbage regardless of the time of day," Mr. Hollings said.

Mr. Barrett sparked a confrontation with Mr. Gore when he said he abhorred indecent programming, but said the FCC must recognize "there is a market for indecency" and the agency's role is to decide "what the law will allow us to tolerate."

Americans, Mr. Gore responded, are "sick and tired of what's going on."

Mr. Sikes said he would vigorously attack obsence material on the airwaves, but that the Supreme Court has proscribed much of Congress' power in the area of free speech and indecency.

The FCC last year tried to implement the 24-hour ban on indecent programming, but broadcasters and civil rights groups challenged it on constitutional grounds. A federal appeals court on January stayed imposition of the law.

Mr. Hollings and other committee members expressed hope that relations between the FCC and Congress would improve after eight years of battles with a commission headed by outgoing Chairman Dennis R. Patrick and his predecessor, Mark S. Fowler.

Because of his displeasure with Mr. Patrick's policies, Mr. Hollings had refused for more than a year to hold hearings on other nominees to fill two vacancies on the five-member FCC. Mr. Patrick will step down when Mr. Sikes is confirmed.

Mr. Sikes, a self-described moderate, is the assistant secretary of commerce for communications and information, a former broadcaster and a longtime political ally of Sen. John Danforth, Missouri Republican, a member of the committee.

Mr. Barrett is a member of the Illinois Commerce Commission, and Ms. Marshall is a lawyer and former legislative aide to Mr. Patrick.

The nominees face a host of important issues, such as the government role in fostering international competitiveness in areas such as high-definition television; further deregulation of the telephone industry; re-regulating cable television, and assignment of the airwaves to competing businesses such as cellular telephones and direct broadcast satellites.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF ALFRED C. SIKES

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the Senate has before it today for confirmation the nomination of Alfred C. Sikes to the Federal Communications Commission. If Mr. Sikes is confirmed, he will serve as President Bush's FCC Chairman. In my view the President could not have selected a more capable public servant to direct the important work of the Commission.

I have known Al Sikes for more than 20 years. He is hard working, he is disciplined, and he is very highly regarded. As I said at this nomination hearing earlier this week, supporting Al Sikes for a leadership role in our Federal Government has been one of the great joys I've had since joining the U.S. Senate.

Al Sikes will carry out his responsibilities vigorously. Since 1986, he has served as Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Communications and Information. In that post, he has been the principal communications advisor to President Reagan and now to President Bush.

Prior to coming to Washington, DC, he was successful in the private sector as the owner of Sikes & Associates, a broadcast management and media consulting firm. During the 1970's, he served the State of Missouri with distinction in several capacities: assistant attorney general; director of the department of consumer affairs, regulation, and licensing; and director of the department of commu.. ity affairs.

Mr. President, Al Sikes has been close to me in public service, in my political life, and as a cherished friend. He is truly the best of public servants. He knows communications with an astute view of both the commercial sector and the Government sector. He has a strong and wonderful family—I know that his wife, Marty, and daughters, Debbie, Christy and Marcia, could not be more proud.

I am honored to support the President's magnificent choice for Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE SECRETARY'S DESK

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, when the Committee on Foreign Relations considered the FSO promotion list on August 3, 1989, there were 181 names on the list that had been submitted for consideration.

Normally, the committee consideration of such lists is noncontroversial, with the committee almost always approving the list of promotions recommended by the administration as submitted. However, an important exception to that general rule took place during the committee deliberations. The basis for that exception deserves the special attention of the Senate and of the administration.

During committee consideration, the chairman moved to strike the name of Mr. Timothy C. Brown of Nevada, a move which I supported. Mr. Brown had been recommended for promotion as a career member of the Senior Foreign Service of the United States of America, class of counselor. This is one of the highest rankings in the Foreign Service, reserved for outstanding members of the service who have achieved special distinction.

It was brought to the committee's attention that Mr. Brown had been the subject of an audit during his tenure in Martinique. In summary, the Office of Inspector General within the State Department concluded that Mr. Brown was involved in: First, using Government funds to purchase a satellite dish over the objections of the Department; second, making approximately $17,000 worth of personal phone calls charged to the Federal Government; third, misusing travel funds; and fourth, removing silverware from his residence. In a settlement with the Department, Mr. Brown reimbursed approximately $24,000.

However, Mr. President, repayment alone does not clear the record when such abuses occur, and the Department needs to make a record of such cases in the individual's personnel file, a record which was not made in this case.

Despite the fact that the Inspector General recommended disciplinary action against the Foreign Service officer, we find that within 6 months he is instead recommended for a promotion.

Further troubling is that in the settlement reached with the Department, State Department officials appear to have conspired with Mr. Brown to conceal his actions both from those within the Department and from the Congress. They even agreed not to inform the Congress of this officer's violations and preagreed on the exact statement that the Department would make if they received a congressional inquiry about it.

Specifically, in a settlement with the Department agreed to by George S. Vest, Director General of the Foreign Service, and Mr. Brown, it was agreed:

> The parties agree that they will keep all terms of this Agreement and the fact of settlement confidential. With the single exception specified in paragraph 10, infra, the parties shall respond to any and all questions about the Debt Collection Act matter and this Agreement by stating in substance: The case has been resolved or dismissed to the mutual satisfaction of both parties, and we cannot comment further about it.

The agreement even goes so far as to oppose to absolve Mr. Brown by agreeing not to make any "criminal, civil, or other referral of the Debt Collection Act matter to any law enforcement, regulatory, or administrative agency * * * or to any congressional inquiry of investigation." This guarantee was made despite a specific memorandum from the Inspector General, Sherman M. Funk, to Director General Vest which concluded that his "actions have been particularly egregious, and accordingly I recommend you take appropriate disciplinary action against Mr. Brown." Mr. Funk also noted, "A determination was made not to bring criminal charges in these matters, in favor of appropriate administrative action by the Department."

Further disconcerting is that paragraph 10, referred to above puts the Department of State in the position of conspiring with Mr. Brown and his attorney to impede a congressional investigation by notifying them of any congressional inquiry and allowing time to plot together on what should be the response. Paragraph 10 states:

If a congressional inquiry or investigation is made into the Debt Collection Act matter, the State Department agrees to notify Mr. Brown and counsel for Mr. Brown thereof, and to provide them with adequate opportunity to confer with the State Department about the Department's response to such an inquiry or investigation.

Indeed, under the agreement, Mr. Brown's personnel file was to be expunged of any reference to these violations. In other words, those within the Department who were responsible for determining Mr. Brown's promotion in all likelihood did not have access to or knowledge of the information about Mr. Brown's tenure in Martinique which the Inspector General considered worthy of disciplinary action. Instead he was recommended for a promotion.

By consenting to the expunging of this episode from the record, the officer involved is given an unfair advantage over other officers who have not been involved in abuses at their posts.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the agreement entered into be printed at the conclusion of these remarks together with two memoranda from the Inspector General, Sherman M. Funk, to Director General of the Foreign Service, George S. Vest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I shall be discussing this issue with the proposed nominee to succeed Mr. Vest, Ambassador Edward Joseph Perkins. The Senate needs to know whether other agreements have been entered into by the Department which attempt to conceal information on cases of this nature and the extent of such agreements, if they exist. I certainly hope that this is a single exception, because this episode raises issues more serious than the specific misdeeds of the Foreign Service Officer involved.

Are some within the Department of State conspiring to conceal misdeeds of their colleagues from appropriate legislative and executive oversight?

Are some within the Department attempting to circumvent the Debt Collection Act? Are they attempting to circumvent the proper oversight and recommendations of the Inspector General?

And are there attempts being made to thwart legitimate congressional inquiries into the performance of the career Foreign Service?

These are some of the issues that I hope to raise with Ambassador Perkins, and I trust will result in improved reputation for the career Foreign Service.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RELEASE AND SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT: DEBT COLLECTION ACT MATTER

This Release and Settlement Agreement ("the Agreement") is made and entered into between the United States Department of State ("the State Department") [1] and Timothy C. Brown (SS No. 530-20-9761), to compromise and settle fully the State Department's claims for repayment identified in the April 19, 1988 letter (plus attachment—other than any potential claim mentioned exclusively in the "Limited Official Use" attachment) from Melvin L. Hines (Associate Comptroller, Office of Financial Operations) to Mr. Brown and the issues raised in Mr. Brown's August 23, 1988 Petition for a Hearing on the Existence and Amount of Alleged Indebtedness (pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5514 and 5 C.F.R. § 550.1104(e)) (hereafter collectively the "Debt Collection Act matter"). The Debt Collection Act matter is currently pending before Administrative Law Judge Hugh J. Dolan of the United States Department of Commerce (In the Matter of Timothy C. Brown, Petitioner, Docket No. 802-212).

Whereas Mr. Brown continues to deny all allegations made by the State Department in Mr. Hines' April 19, 1988 letter (and in all underlying documents); and

Whereas the parties wish to settle the Debt Collection Act matter in toto and for all times without litigation;

Now therefore, in consideration of and to effect the mutual promises made herein, and subject to the terms and conditions hereof, it is agreed by and between the parties hereto that:

1. The State Department agrees that, upon the execution of this Agreement, it shall formally withdraw Mr. Hines' April 19, 1988 letter (and any and all supporting documents), and the State Department shall execute and stipulate to the filing of a dismissal of the Debt Collection Act matter with prejudice (as set forth in Exhibit 1), with each party to bear its own costs.

2. Mr. Brown agrees that, upon the execution of this Agreement, his August 23, 1988 Petition shall be formally withdrawn, and Mr. Brown shall execute and stipulate to the filing of a dismissal of the Debt Collection Act matter with prejudice (as set forth in Exhibit 1), with each party to bear its own costs.

3. Mr. Brown agrees, upon the execution of this Agreement, to pay $17,500 (according to the schedule in Paragraph 5, infra) to the State Department in settlement of all telephone costs relating to the Debt Collection Act matter.

5. The total amounts referenced in Paragraphs 3 and 4, supra, (and 6% interest on said amounts, such interest to accrue beginning on the effective date of the Agreement), shall be paid to the State Department over a three (3) year period, commencing as soon as practical after the date of this Agreement, in up to 78 payments. Said payments shall consist of equal deductions from each of Mr. Brown's bi-weekly pay checks during said period, in the amount of $250.00 per pay check. These deductions shall be made by the State Department pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5514(a)(1), which provides: "The amount deducted for any period may not exceed 15 percent of disposable pay, except that a greater percentage may be deducted upon the written consent of the individual involved." 5 U.S.C. § 5514(a)(4)(A) defines " 'disposable pay' " as "that part of pay of any individual remaining after the deduction from those earnings of any amounts required by law to be withheld." If for any reason Mr. Brown separates from the State Department prior to the expiration of the three (3) year payment period (e.g., involuntarily, voluntarily, or by death), the balances (if any) of the total amounts remaining at the time of his separation will immediately become due. In the event Mr. Brown dies prior to the expiration of the three (3) year payment period, Mr. Brown agrees that his estate shall have the option to make a lump sum payment (if necessary), or in the alternative to direct the State Department to deduct from Mr. Brown's retirement fund contributions such amount (if necessary), to satisfy any balances remaining on the total amounts referenced in Paragraphs 3 and 4, supra.

6. The parties hereby stipulate that the "parabolic television antenna" referred to in Mr. Hines' April 19, 1988 letter consists of the television/antenna/receiver system ("the equipment") presently installed at the residence of the United States Consulate in Martinque. It is the intention and agreement of the parties that the equipment shall be sold at present-day, fair-market value, and that the amount realized through such sale shall be credited against the balance of the payments due from Mr. Brown under Paragraph 4, supra. The State Department agrees to attempt in good faith to sell the equipment at present-day, fair market value, and to credit Mr. Brown with the proceeds of that transaction. Mr. Brown agrees that the State Department has the option to purchase the equipment for itself at an agreed-upon price. No sale (whether to the State Department or to any other person) shall occur until the parties hereto have stipulated as to the present-day, fair-market value of the equipment (as established by a mutually agreed upon appraiser or by an otherwise mutually acceptable method of valuation). Mr. Brown shall be credited in the amount of the sale price for the equipment, less reasonable costs incurred by the State Department in its sale or purchase of the equipment (including reasonable appraisal and/or equipment removal costs, if necessary).

7. Mr. Brown, for himself, his successors, and assigns, on the one hand, and the State Department on the other hand, do hereby now and forever mutually release each other, jointly and severally, of and from any claims, demands, actions, or causes of action of every kind, nature, and description, known or unknown, choate or inchoate, which the State Department now has, has ever had, or may have against Mr. Brown, his successors, and assigns, or which Mr. Brown now has, has ever had, or may have against the State Department, limited to the Debt Collection Act matter.

8. The execution of this Agreement and the undertakings performed herein shall in nowise constitute an admission by Mr. Brown, his successors, or assigns, of any of the claims and/or allegations made by the State Department in the Debt Collection Act matter.

9. The parties agree that they will keep all terms of this Agreement and the fact of settlement confidential. With the single exception specified in paragraph 10, infra, the parties shall respond to any and all questions about the Debt Collection Act matter and this Agreement by stating in substance: "The case has been resolved or dismissed to the mutual satisfaction of both parties, and we cannot comment further about it." Any further disclosure concerning the Debt Collection Act matter or its settlement by either party after the date of this Agreement shall be deemed a breach of the Agreement. The parties agree that should either party, or any agent, servant, or employee of either party, breach the confidentiality provision of this Agreement by releasing any false or misleading information concerning the terms of this Agreement, the non-breaching party shall have the right to correct publicly any such false or misleading statements without such correction being considered a breach of the confidentiality provision of this Agreement.

10. If a congressional inquiry or investigation is made into the Debt Collection Act matter, the State Department agrees to notify Mr. Brown and counsel for Mr. Brown thereof, and to provide them with adequate opportunity to confer with the State Department about the Department's response to such an inquiry or investigation.

11. The parties further expressly agree and acknowledge that this Agreement is in full accord and satisfaction of the disputed Debt Collection Act matter; that this Agreement is entered into solely for the purpose of resolving the instant dispute between the parties; that the provisions of this Agreement constitute a fair, reasonable, and adequate settlement and determination of their rights and obligations; and that they have entered into this Agreement freely and voluntarily after consultation with counsel. The fact of settlement is not to be considered as an admission against either party in any proceeding, including but not limited to any criminal, civil, regulatory, or administrative proceeding, and shall not be considered or portrayed by either party as an admission in any congressional inquiry or investigation.

12. The parties hereto expressly understand and agree that all provisions and terms of this Agreement are contractual and shall survive the execution of the dismissal referred to herein and shall continue in full force and effect thereafter.

13. The State Department agrees to expunge Mr. Brown's Personnel File in toto with regard to the Debt Collection Act matter, including but not limited to, the removal of all documents and/or notations from Mr. Brown's Personnel File (and/or from any other State Department files relating to this matter) suggesting or alleging misconduct by Mr. Brown.

14. The State Department agrees that, to the exent of the State Department's authority, the Debt Collection Act matter (including but not limited to any and all underlying documents, reports, statements, notations, investigative data, and related files suggesting or alleging misconduct by Mr. Brown relating to the debt Collection Act matter) and settlement thereof shall have no direct, or indirect, adverse effect whatsoever on Mr. Brown's career, employment status, promotion or retention possibilities within the foreign service, and/or pension, retirement, and/or other benefits due Mr. Brown. The State Department agrees to take no disciplinary action whatsoever against Mr. Brown as prescribed in 3 F.A.M. § 760 by reason of the Debt Collection Act matter, and agrees further that any pending or imminent disciplinary action relating to the Debt Collection Act matter shall be terminated forthwith in accordance with 3 F.A.M. § 760.

15. At the specific request of the State Department the Inspector General has agreed to include in Mr. Brown's file in the State Department's Office of the Inspector General, a document, which reflects that, although the Debt Collection Act matter was brought against Mr. Brown by the State Department, the dispute was amicably resolved without any admissions by him as to culpability and/or liability regarding the State Department's allegations against Mr. Brown.

16. The State Department warrants and agrees that it will not hereafter make any criminal, civil, or other referral of the Debt Collection Act matter to any law enforcement, regulatory, or administrative agency (including but not limited to the United States Department of Justice), or to any congressional inquiry or investigation; and that, in the event any law enforcement, regulatory, or administrative agency, or any congressional inquiry or investigation, indicates any interest in prosecuting, sanctioning, or seeking any redress whatsoever from Mr. Brown for any issues arising from the Debt Collection Act matter, the State Department shall make a firm recommendation to any such agency, inquiry, or investigation that no direct or indirect action be taken against Mr. Brown whatsoever.

17. This Agreement constitutes the entire understanding between the parties, supercedes any and all prior negotiations and agreements of the parties, and shall not be modified except in writing.

18. This Agreement shall be executed in two counterparts, each of which shall be an original but both of which together shall constitute one executed agreement. In this regard, each party shall execute a separate signature page, and only upon the mutual exchange of each party's respective signature page shall this Agreement become effective.

TIMOTHY C. BROWN.

U.S. Department of State:

By: George S. Vest (Director General of the Foreign Service).

By: Melvin L. Hines (Associate Comptroller).

MEMORANDUM

To: M/DGP Mr. George S. Vest.
From: OIG Sherman M. Funk.
Subject: Timothy C. Brown, Former Principal Officer, American Consulate Martinique, OIG Case No. 86-211.

On January 12, 1989, I advised Mr. Larry E. Williamson of your staff that we had closed our investigation of Mr. Brown as it related to certain telephone charges and the purchase of a satellite antenna.

I wish to bring to your attention certain other matters with respect to Mr. Brown's tour at Fort-de-France, Martinique.

"In December 1986, the Office of Policy and Program Reveiw (S/PPR) conducted an inspection of the Consulate General in Martinique. During the inspection, misuse of Official Residence Expenses (ORE) by Mr. Brown was documented. The misuse concerned $543.53 in inappropriate travel charges to ORE for the travel of domestic servants employed by Mr. Brown. It was also determined during the inspection that Mr. Brown charged the United States Government $268.31 for an unauthorized educational travel trip for a member of his family. It was recommended that Mr. Brown make restitution of these amounts and he subsequently reimbursed the United States Government.

"Following Mr. Brown's departure, allegations were received that a set of silverware, charged to the inventory of Mr. Brown's residence in Martinique, was missing. A subsequent investigation was initiated and Mr. Brown returned the missing silverware, after being interviewed by OIG special agents.

"These issues were all discussed with the Department of Justice. A determination was made not to bring criminal charges in these matters, in favor of appropriate administrative action by the Department."

Although Mr. Brown has made necessary reimbursement of the funds and returned the silverware, his actions demonstrate a pattern of activity and apparent disregard for the policies, rules and regulations of the Department of State. Mr. Brown's actions have been particularly egregious, and accordingly I recommend you take appropriate disciplinary action against Mr. Brown.

Please inform me of any actions you propose to take in this matter. Should you have any questions or need further information, please contact Mr. Randolph M. West, III, Assistant Inspector General for Investigations, at 647-8790.

MARCH 15, 1989.

MEMORANDUM

To: M/DGP Mr. George S. Vest.
From: OIG Sherman M. Funk.
Subject: Timothy C. Brown, OIG Case No. 86-211.

This memorandum is in response to your request of March 10, 1989, for a detailed account of the circumstances surrounding the silverware missing from Martinique, which was ultimately discovered in Mr. Brown's possession.

The earliest documentation in our files relating to the missing silverware is a June 1987 cable from Martinique to A/FBO. This cable indicates that an inventory conducted in mid-May 1987 revealed the silverware to be missing and recommended that the Department contact Mr. Brown, to "shed some light" on the matter. On June 23, 1987 the information was forwarded to OIG by A/FBO. During this period of time, however, the controversy concerning the other events in Martinique was in the process of being settled and the issue of the silverware was held in abeyance. There is no indication in our files that Mr. Brown was ever contacted by anyone in the Department about this matter until late 1938, when he was questioned about it by this office.

In August 1988, attempts were initiated to contact Mr. Brown and interview him about the silverware. OIG agents offered to travel to Honduras for this purpose, but Mr. Brown retained counsel and would not agree to an interview, unless his attorney was present. Various scheduling conflicts between OIG, Mr. Brown, and his attorney prevented the interview from taking place until December 8, 1988, in Washington, DC.

On that date, Mr. Brown was interviewed by OIG agents, in the presence of his attorney. He denied any knowledge regarding the missing silverware. In closing, he was asked to consult with his wife, in an effort to determine if she may have any information regarding the missing items.

On December 15, 1988, Mr. Brown was again interviewed in the office of the OIG. He stated that subsequent to the December 8th interview, he returned to Honduras and reviewed the contents of boxes of household effects shipped to Honduras from Martinique, but never unpacked. Among these boxes were several containing items from his office in Martinique. In one of these, he discovered the missing silverware. He could not explain why the silverware was packed with office items, rather than with items from the residence.

He turned the missing silverware over to OIG agents at that time, along with numerous photographs he took of the various boxes in which the silverware was discovered. OIG, in turn, returned the silverware to FBO.

I am enclosing copies of the Information of Record Forms which document the two interviews of Mr. Brown. I hope this information is sufficient for your needs. If you have further questions regarding this matter, please do not hesitate to contact Mr. William N. Crane, Investigations Division Director, at 663-1650.

NOMINATION OF LORET MILLER RUPPE TO BE AMBASSADOR TO NORWAY

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I worked very closely with Loret over the last 8 years during her tenure as Peace Corps Director. Those years can be best described as an important time of revitalization and expansion for the Peace Corps. Lotet's hard word, dedication, and inspirational leadership were the key to bringing the Peace Corps to the high level of visibility and support it enjoys today. She brought incredible energy, enthusiasm, and creativity to what she called "the best job in Washinton." In all of her efforts she combined great skill and talent with a deep concern for the impoverished peoples of the world and a firm commitment to world peace.

As a long-time advocate and ardent supporter of the Peace Corps, I have been extremely impressed with Loret's ability to lead the agency and to reach out to the people who are so important to the Peace Corps. This includes the volunteers and the Peace Corps staff of course. It also includes congressional supporters like myself, the leaders of host countries and of the countries with an interest in receiving volunteers, and the people of the countries the Peace Corps serves around the world.

Under her leadership, the Peace Corps has been invited either to begin or resume programs in nine countries. Loret was instrumental in the bold initiative to send the first volunteers into China—a move which would have been a monumental step for the Peace Corps but became impossible for tragic reasons far beyond her and the Peace Corps' control.

Loret Ruppe, a talented innovator, constantly pushed for the development of programs responsive to current needs—such as creative new programs dealing with food systems in Africa, small enterprise development, child and maternal health, and natural resource conservation and education.

Mr. President, the sound, forward-looking programs and solid base of support with which Loret left the Peace Corps are a great legacy for her successor, Paul Coverdell, and all who will follow her. I can think of no finer tribute to pay to her tenure as Peace Corps Director than to say she was indeed a worthy successor to Sargent Shriver.

It is hard to imagine better qualifications than Loret Ruppe's for an ambassador from our great Nation. Would that all our ambassadors had her skill, experience, and great sensitivity to the cultures and prerogatives of other sovereign nations. Her success in working so hard for international understanding and world peace and her effective leadership of an organization dedicated to those goals make her eminently qualified to be the President's representative abroad.

Mr. President, Loret Ruppe is a person of integrity, competence, compassion, and commitment. She is also a loving, kind, genuine human being, I am confident she will be a great success as Ambassador of the United States to Norway.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—NOMINATIONS DURING RECESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate, all nominations are automatically returned to the President during recess lasting longer than 30 days. The August recess will be 32 days. However, in my continued effort to process the President's nominees as efficiently as possible, I will request unanimous consent that all of the pending nominees remain in status quo with only three nominations returned to the President.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all nominations received by the Senate remain in status quo, notwithstanding the provisions of rule XXXI, paragraph 6, with the following exceptions: Department of Energy, Diane K. Morales; Department of State, Frederick M. Bush; U.S. District Court, Vaughn R. Walker.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

AUTHORIZING SENATE TO RECEIVE A JOINT RESOLUTION FROM THE HOUSE RELATIVE TO HAND ENROLLMENT OF H.R. 1278

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate stands in recess or adjournment, it be authorized to receive a joint resolution from the House relative to the hand enrollment of H.R. 1278, and when received, it be deemed to have been read a third time, passed, and the motion to reconsider laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJUSTMENT OR CHANGE IN STATUS OF CERTAIN CHINESE NATIONALS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar Order No. 201, H.R. 2712, a bill to facilitate the adjustment in the status of certain Chinese nationals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2712) to facilitate the adjustment or change of status of Chinese nationals in the United States by waiving the 2-year foreign residence requirement for "J" nonimmigrants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 697

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator KENNEDY, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL] for Mr. KENNEDY, proposes an amendment numbered 697.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Emergency Chinese Immigration Relief Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. STATUS OF CERTAIN NATIONALS OF THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA.

(a) WAIVER OF FOREIGN RESIDENCE REQUIREMENT FOR "J" NONIMMIGRANTS.—The 2-year home country residency and physical presence period requirement under section 212(e) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(e)) shall not apply in the case of any national of the People's Republic of China who is present in the United States on the date of the enactment of this Act (or who would have been present in the United States but for a brief, casual, and innocent departure from the United States), who is otherwise eligible for adjustment of status under the Immigration and Nationality Act during the period of time referred to in subsection (d), and who would otherwise be subject to that 2-year home residence requirement because of having had the status of a nonimmigrant described in section 101(a)(15)(J) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15(J)).

(b) PRESUMPTION OF CONTINUOUS RESIDENCE FOR CERTAIN PRC NATIONALS.—For purposes of any adjustment of status under section 245 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1255) or any change of status under section 248 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1258) in the case of an alien who is a national of the People's Republic of China and who, as of June 5, 1989, was present in the United States in the lawful status of a nonimmigrant (or who would have been present in the United States in the status but for a brief, casual, and innocent departure from the United States), such an alien shall be considered as having continued to maintain lawful status as such a nonimmigrant (and to have maintained continuously a lawful status) for the period described in subsection (d).

(c) EMPLOYMENT AUTHORIZATION.—Any national of the People's Republic of China described in subsection (b) who, as of June 5, 1989, was present in the United States in the lawful status of a nonimmigrant described in subparagraph (F), (J), or (M) of section 101(a)(15) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (or who would have been present in the United States in the status but for a brief, casual, and innocent departure from the United States) shall be granted authorization to engage in employment in the United States and shall be provided with an "employment authorized" endorsement or other appropriate work permit during the period described in subsection (d).

(d) DURATION OF STATUS.—The period of time referred to in subsections (b), (c), and (e) is the period during which the Attorney General has in effect a deferral of enforced departure for nationals of the People's Republic of China.

(e) NOTIFICATION.—In the case of any national of the People's Republic of China who is eligible for deferral of enforced departure pursuant to a directive of the Attorney General during the period described in subsection (d) and whose authorized period of stay as a nonimmigrant has expired, the Attorney General shall, instead of initiating deportation proceedings against the alien (including the service of an order to show cause) during the period described in subsection (d), issue to the alien a notice of expiration of nonimmigrant status. Such notice shall be nonadversarial in nature and shall contain an explanation of the options available to such nationals under the directive of the Attorney General and under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

(f) CHINESE FLEEING COERCIVE POPULATION CONTROL POLICIES.—

(1) Pursuant to paragraph (42)(A) of section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(42)(A)), all adjudicators of asylum or refugee status shall give fullest possible consideration to applications from nationals of the People's Republic of China who express a fear of persecution upon return to that country because they refuse to abort a pregnancy or resist surgical sterilization in violation of Chinese Communist Party directives on population, if such refusal is undertaken with full awareness of the urgent priority assigned to such directives by all levels of the Chinese government, and full awareness of the severe consequences which may be imposed for violation of such directives.

(2) In view of the urgent priority assigned to the "one couple, one child" policy by high level Chinese Communist Party officials and local party cadres at all levels, as well as the severe consequences commonly imposed for violations of that policy, which are regarded as "political dissent," refusal to abort or to be sterilized, as described in subsection (a) of this section, shall be viewed as an act of political defiance justifying a "well-founded fear of persecution" sufficient to establish refugee status under paragraph (42)(A) of section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(42)(A)).

(3) All other factors which may contribute to a determination of asylum or refugee status in such cases are to be given additional weight by asylum and refugee ajudicators, such factors including, but not limited to, overt political activities while in the United States or third countries, membership in an ethnic or religious minority, family background and history, or suspicion of "counterrevolutionary" activities by Chinese Communist Party officials.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to necessitate a grant of asylum or refugee status to any individual who is ineligible for admission to the United States under section 212(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)).

(5) The Secretary of State and the Attorney General shall, within 30 days of enactment of this section, promulgate regulations and guidelines to carry out the provisions of this section.

(6) Nothing in this section shall be construed as—

(A) Shifting the burden of providing, in each individual case, facts sufficient to establish a claim of asylum or refugee status as described in subsection (a) of this section, from any person making such claim of asylum or refugee status to the Attorney General; or

(B) Requiring the Attorney General to disprove such claim in the absence of proof of facts sufficient to establish a claim of refugee or asylum status as described in subsection (a) of this section by any person making such claim.

(7) The number of persons receiving political asylum status solely because of the provisions of this section shall not exceed 1,000 in any fiscal year.

(8) The Attorney General shall not be obligated to grant political asylum to any person claiming to qualify under subsection (a) if the Attorney General proves by clear and convincing evidence that such person has claimed such status solely for the purposes of evading the immigration laws of the United States.

(9) The provisions of this section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act, and notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (e) of this section or any other provision of law, all adjudicators of asylum or refugee status shall apply the provisions of this section to every case, administrative or judicial proceeding, or appeal that is pending on the date of enactment of this Act, and to any claim that arises on or after such date of enactment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 697) was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, 3 weeks ago, as part of our immigration reform package, the Senate adopted provisions to protect Chinese students from deportation for the next 4 years. This language, which was sponsored by the two leaders and augmented by the Senator from Washington and others, generously allowed the students to remain in the United States permanently if after that time it was still unsafe for them to return to China.

Mr. President, the Nation was shocked when the Peoples Liberation Army stormed Tiananmen Square and brutally subdued those who stood bravely for the cause of freedom.

That action made necessary the steps which the President has taken to allow Chinese students to remain here and the additional immigration protections adopted by the Senate last month. And events in China in recent days—the arrests of prodemocracy demonstrators and the harrassment of students and their families—continue to move the American people and continue to suggest the need for offering protections under our immigration laws.

Both the House and the Senate have now debated various ways of protecting the students for the long term—to provide them with the assurances they need to get on with their lives.

The determination of Congress to assist and protect the students is unquestionable, and all Chinese students in America should be reassured by that commitment. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Affairs, I will continue to work with members on both sides over the coming weeks to develop a common formula for such protection.

But I believe it is important that we get to the President this week, for his signature, those legal steps urgently needed now to protect those students.

The bill before us is just the first step, Mr. President. I have every expectation that further action will be taken after the coming recess.

Our actions today will assure Chinese students of three important protections:

First, that those who are here on exchange visitor programs—those on so-called J-visas—can adjust to other immigration statuses for which they are eligible, but without the usual requirement that they first spend 2 years back home.

Second, that if they participate in the Attorney General's program—that is, if they accept his "extended deferred departure"—they will still be eligible to apply for other more permanent visa programs. Under current law, this would not be possible.

Finally, that they are clearly eligible for employment authorization. Current law, along with the Attorney General's program, provides such authorization in most instances. This simply clarifies the right to work, as so many of the students have lost their government's support payments and need a means of income.

It has also come to my attention that the passports of some students will be expiring soon, and may not be renewed by the Chinese Government. Where that is the case, let me just say that it is our intent that procedures be established which will allow the students to adjust or continue their status without a valid passport.

Mr. President, I believe these preliminary actions by the Senate, which I hope will be speedily accepted by the House, will provide the students with the immediate assurances they need to go ahead and accept the terms of the Attorney General's program while longer term measures are debated.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I rise to state my views on this legislation that our Senate leaders, Senators MITCHELL and DOLE, are promoting to grant relief to Chinese students before the Congress goes into recess for the month of August.

This legislation would provide temporary relief for those Chinese students who now enjoy the generous grant of deferred departure given to them by President Bush and Attorney General Thornburgh. It would waive the 2-year return requirement for those students holding "J" visas, if an immigrant visa would otherwise be available to a student but for that return requirement. It would consider all Chinese nonimmigrants to be in a legal immigration status while the grant of deferred departure is pending, so that if a route to adjustment is available to them, they will not be prevented from adjusting simply because their nonimmigrant visa has expired. It would clarify that employment authorization is available to these students, even though such authorization can already be granted under current law. Finally, it would require the Attorney General to send "notices of visa expiration" to persons entering the deferred departure program, instead of actual deportation notices, while the Attorney General continues to withhold the deportation of Chinese nationals.

I believe that this legislation provides appropriate temporary relief for Chinese students and other Chinese nonimmigrants. Congress will return in September, and there will be plenty of time then to address any proposals for more long-term relief. This legislation does not prejudice any such later efforts.

I commend the efforts of Senator MITCHELL and Senator DOLE to respond to the concerns of the Chinese students in a responsible, generous, and reasonable manner.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I am pleased to support H.R. 2712, as amended by the Emergency Chinese Immigration Relief Act of 1989. But frankly, I am also disappointed that our amendment to the House bill does not provide more assistance for America's Chinese guests. I am disappointed because the Senate is, in effect, retreating—at least for the moment—from the position it took in July.

On July 11, the Senate unanimously passed the Mitchell-Dole amendment to S. 358, the Immigration Act. That amendment, which I helped shape, would afford Chinese students in the United States a safe haven until 1992. One day later, on July 12, the Senate recognized the need to go even further. We unanimously agreed to an amendment sponsored by Senator GORTON and myself that would extend protection until 1993 and permit Chinese students to become permanent residents in 1995.

By contrast, H.R. 2712, as amended, will give Chinese nationals legal status only for as long as the Attorney General defers their departure. This means they will be sheltered until June 5, 1990. Of course, the administration could extend the deferred departure program beyond 1990, but there is no assurance that it will. The Bush administration has gone out of its way not to "offend" the butchers of Beijing. The same administration that currently shrinks from imposing sanctions against China could decide, down the road, that United States-China relations are jeopardized by deferred departure.

So we need to codify protection by statute, and we must revisit this issue before next June. I am committed to seeing that Chinese nationals receive long-term security. And the leadership assures me that we will not forget our Chinese guests if H.R. 2712 is enacted. In exchange for half a loaf now, I am told, we will provide a full loaf when Congress returns in the fall.

Still, despite its shortcomings, the amended H.R. 2712 deserves to be passed and signed by the President. It represents bipartisan, humanitarian legislation that will allay some of the fears of our Chinese guests. It sends a message—to Chinese nationals here and to the government in Beijing—that China's best and brightest can remain in the United States while China is choked by repression and tyranny.

Mr. President, I recognize that H.R. 2712 is not the final word on this important subject. Nor should it be. Many Members of Congress wish to establish a lasting framework for dealing with crises like that facing the Chinese. But to quote a July 31 editorial from the Washington Post:

> While it is desirable to set up a framework for handling all situations requiring temporary protection for aliens here, legislation to help the Chinese students, who are in need of immediate reassurance, should not be allowed to get bogged down in a broader debate.

Our immediate obligation is clear. The Chinese Government violently suppressed nonviolent calls for greater freedom. The military gunned down hundreds of civilians. At least 32 people have been executed since the crackdown, according to official sources. And Chinese in this country, by exercising American freedoms to protest the massacre in Tiananmen Square, have endangered their own lives. The United States has a duty to shelter these Chinese beyond next June—until the political situation in their homeland improves.

H.R. 2712, as amended, will provide short-term aid and ensure that no Chinese national is caught short by a visa expiration between now and next fall, when Congress takes up the question again. It is our last chance to send the President legislation before recess. For now, half a loaf is better than none.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, this bill before us represents a good and compassionate first step to help our Chinese visitors who are unable to return home. As one of the parties who negotiated this compromise agreement, I wish to make clear the bases upon which those of us who had proposed to do more accepted this bill as an interim measure.

Over 30,000 of the Chinese students who are in the United States, arrived on J-1 exchange visas. With this legislation, these students will not be required to return home before they can apply for another U.S. visa. Further, if these students change or adjust to other than "J" visa status within the specified duration, they will no longer be subject to the 2-year foreign residency requirement, including any future application of the requirement to adjustments to permanent residence status.

This bill also grants to all Chinese students the authority to seek employment. Work authorization is necessary, because scholarships and other sources of funds may be exhausted or overstrained due to the unexpected extension of their stay here.

I also understand that these benefits will remain available to Chinese students whose passports may expire in the future and not be extended by the Chinese Government.

The Chinese Government continues to detain and arrest those suspected of participation in the prodemocracy movement. Recently, the Chinese public security bureau detained Mr. Yang Wei, a former University of Arizona graduate student who in 1987 was the first returning student to have been arrested for his early prodemocracy activities. China's most prominent female journalist, Ms. Dai Quing, has been arrested for her outspoken prodemocracy views.

I have received reports that the Chinese Government is trying to undermine and discourage the prodemocracy activities of Chinese students in the United States and abroad as well. Chinese students, and even American supporters, are being harassed and intimidated by Chinese embassy and consular officials. Students have been warned that their activities in the United States could jeopardize their futures, or the futures of their families in China.

Further, Chinese nationals wishing to extend their passports must first sign a statement supporting the official position of the Chinese Government. these students are not the victims of Chinese political oppression; they are the targets of it.

This bill is an important first step to help the Chinese students in our country. These measures were among the recommendations that I sent in a letter to the President during the first week following the Tiananmen Square massacre.

I am especially pleased that we are able to have taken this step before the August recess. With the cooperation of the House and the White House, we will add a small but significant degree of security to the Chinese students whose lives have been unsettled by tumultuous events which occurred halfway across the world.

We must not stop and pat ourselves on the back just yet, however. There is much work still to be done. I am convinced that we must provide the Chinese students with full assurances that they are welcome to remain safely in the United States for so long as they may need. In this stronghold of liberty and compassion, the Chinese students should not be forced to lie in endless fear for their role in supporting freedom and democracy. I am confident that through the continued leadership of Chinese students around the world, these values once again will be embraced openly by China and her people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read a third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

So the bill (H.R. 2712), as amended, was passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

S. 1370—INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 1370 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MOUSE RESEARCH FACILITY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 197, S. 1390, a bill to authorize funds for the construction of a mouse research laboratory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1390) to authorize funds to be appropriated for the construction of a mouse research laboratory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1390) to authorize funds to be appropriated for the construction of a mouse research laboratory facility, which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. CONSTRUCTION OF MOUSE RESEARCH LABORATORY.

(a) I GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Director of the National Institutes of Health, shall provide a single grant, through a competitive application process, to a public or private non-profit entity to enable such entity to construct a facility for the development, production, and distribution of inbred and mutant mice that are to be used to address the critical shortage of such mice for biomedical research.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 to carry out subsection (a).

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I rise to support legislation sponsored by Senators KENNEDY and HATCH, the chairman and ranking member of the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, which will provide emergency relief in response to a serious crisis in the research community. This is an issue that is vital to the future of research for many life-threatening diseases.

In May, an extensive fire destroyed over 500,000 research mice at the Jackson Laboratory in Bar Harbor, ME—this country's premier mouse-breeding laboratory and supplier of genetically directed mice.

When the fire occurred, most of us underestimated the effect of the loss to medical science. In fact, many thought that either capacity could be easily taken up by other suppliers of mice or the recovery period should be rapid without Federal assistance.

Unfortunately, this is not the case. While the Jackson Lab supplies 20 percent of all mice nationwide, it is the only supplier of the rare and exotic strains of mice needed in so many critical studies modeling human diseases.

All indications from the biomedical research community point to a severe shortage of mice for certain disease-oriented research. The Senate has received hundreds of letters from all over the country imploring us to seek a remedy in the appropriations process.

Many of these studies tend to be the immunologic research endeavors; so important right now in AIDS research. The August issue of Discover magazine, has a cover story entitled, "The Human Mouse," which describes the important use of mice in AIDS research. I ask unanimous consent to have a copy of this article, printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[See exhibit 1.]

Mr. MITCHELL. The Jackcon Lab is unique in the word, as it breeds over 1,700 specially inbred and mutant mice. Because of genetic drift concerns, researchers cannot just shift to another supplier.

In a July 17 letter to me from Dr. Wyngaarden, Director of NIH, he states:

The destruction of the 500,000 mice in the Jackson Laboratory fire clearly represents the loss of an extremely important national resource. Indeed, this loss is currently creating very serious problems for research scientists all over the world.

Dr. Wyngaarden goes on to say:

We at NIH are pleased that thanks to wise contingency planning on the part of the Jackson Laboratory staff, no strains of mice were completely wiped out, so that it will be possible for the Laboratory to replenish its supply. The speed with which this replenishment can be accomplished is critically important.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the full text of Dr. Wyngaarden's letter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[See exhibit 2.]

Mr. MITCHELL. Twenty percent of the inbred and mutant mice used in this country are supplied by the Jackson Lab. The fire destroyed at least 50 percent of the lab's production capacity, which effectively reduces the national supply of these special mice by 10 percent. Again, while some other suppliers may help out; the predominance of their intramural immunology studies will be drastically affected. Other health problems affected are cancer, diabetes, arthritis, and neurological illnesses.

I am deeply concerned that we maintain our national preeminence in biomedical research. The fire may have happened in Maine, but the affect is felt in every State. Over 11,000 separate laboratories; including virtually every medical school, university, many independent research facilities, and major governmental laboratories are affected.

Senators KENNEDY and HATCH gave their bipartian support to a one-time authorization bill that would aid the recovery process. The bill was passed out of committee on August 2.

The bill permits use of public funds for open procurement for the purpose of maintaining the supply of research animals. If another laboratory can gear up better and faster than Jackson, they have a chance at these funds.

I am seeking the full $25 million that Jackson needs immediately to ensure full recovery of supply within 2 years. The total fire damage was over $40 million, but insurance and private philanthropy will cover the rest. Private fundraising could never meet all of their needs, and would come too late to stave off serious mouse shortages.

Almost $1 billion in biomedical efforts are in jeopardy; we must act quickly to restore the breeding capacity that was lost in the fire at Jackson Lab. I urge my colleagues to join with us in this important effort.

EXHIBIT 1

[From Discover, August 1989]

THE HUMAN MOUSE

(By Geoffrey Montgomery)

One night in January 1987, while driving home along the interstate, Mike McCune came up with a crazy scheme to transplant a human immune system into a mouse. He was heading north, toward San Francisco, where for the past five years he had worked as a doctor at San Francisco General Hospital. There McCune had seen patient after patient, many of them young men his own age, succumb to the ravages of AIDS. Their immune systems shattered by an enigmatic virus, they struggled in vain against an onslaught of opportunistic diseases.

Most died of pneumonia caused by Pneumocystis carinii, a protozoan that normally lives quite harmlessly in the hothouse environment of the lungs. In McCune's patients the microbe had grown uncontrollably, filling their lungs with suffocating foam. He had watched helplessly as they lay hunched forward on their hospital beds, taking short, shallow breaths, until their gasping ceased altogether.

Now, in 1987, as a postdoctoral fellow in immunology at Stanford, McCune was spending the bulk of his time trying to find answers to the AIDS mystery in the laboratory. His work was going well; he had recently discovered a step in the virus's development that is crucial to its ability to infect human immune cells. Yet this laboratory research, McCune felt, led to a dead end. Test tubes could never tell him what was happening to the complex network of immune cells circulating through an AIDS patient's body. They couldn't tell him how the virus caused such massive and disastrous destruction of the T cells, the key orchestrators of the immune response. What he needed was an animal model, a living system in which the virus's assault could be exhaustively analyzed and then, with luck, countered by experimental drugs or vaccines.

But what animal? So far only chimpanzees had been infected with the AIDS virus. Unlike humans, however, they did not become ill; moreover the use of this endangered animal would be controversial to say the least.

Mice would be nice, McCune thought. They were immunology's favorite creatures—small, fast breeding, and easy to handle in large numbers. Unfortunately, a mouse's immune cells could not be penetrated by the AIDS virus. McCune's task seemed impossible. To have a model with all the properties he needed, he would have to get hold of an amalgam beast no less fantastic than the lion-goat-serpent Chimera of Greek myth.

But as he sped along the empty highway, past the black shapes of the hills to the west, the dilemma began to dissolve. A spectacularly simple plan was taking shape in his mind. He recalled that other researchers had found mutant strains of mice that were genetically unable to make their own immune system. Why not transplant an immune system into them—a human immune system?

During the remainder of his ride McCune quickly outlined the transplantation procedure, the series of experiments he would perform with the AIDS virus and antiviral drugs. Shortly afterward he presented his plan to his Stanford colleagues. Their reaction was not exactly encouraging. "They didn't think it would work," says McCune. "In fact, they thought it was a pretty crazy idea."

Today, at the end of a hallway at SyStemix, the biotech firm that McCune cofounded last year, lies a sterile room with shelves of cages full of mice. Before passing through the tightly sealed door, one has to don a surgical mask, cap, gown, and gloves. The precaution is necessary because all the mice on one side of the room have no immune system—they have all been born with SCID, which stands for severe combined immunodeficiency.

"If these mice were placed out in the open," says McCune, "most would develop Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia." Like similarly afflicted AIDS patients, they too would soon be hunched over, taking short, shallow breaths until, eventually, they'd simply stop breathing. So vulnerable are they that even in this sterile, isolated environment, their water bottles are kept filled with antibiotics—antibiotics very much like the ones that are now used to prevent Pneumocystis pneumonia in AIDS patients.

Across the room, scurrying happily through the pine shavings in their cages, are another set of white mice that belong to the same immunodeficient strain. Yet, although these animals receive no antibiotics, they can be kept in the open for 15 months and still remain free of pneumonia. Unlike their roommates, these mice have been given an immune system that can apparently defend them—which is rather remarkable considering the immune system inside them is human.

McCune's crazy idea has led to a revolutionary event in medical history. For not only has he created his chimeric mouse, he has gone on to show that it can be a useful model for studying AIDS. Last December McCune and his colleagues confirmed that a group of SCID-hu (for human) mice had been infected with HIV, the AIDS virus, and that the virus had reproduced and spread within the mice's human immune cells.

Now, in a high-security laboratory at SyStemix, McCune's group is studying more than 100 of these HIV-infected mice to see if they, like humans, will go on to develop disease. "The major question is whether the mice will actually get AIDS," says Irving Weissman, a developmental immunologist at Stanford School of Medicine, in whose lab McCune made the first SCID-hu animals. Will these mice, whose human immune cells apparently protect them from Pneumocystis pneumonia and other opportunistic infections, once again get such infections—as AIDS patients do—after being attacked by HIV?

Weissman thinks it's possible, even probable, that they will. "But at the very least," he says, "we've shown that these mice will be a good model for initial infection by the virus. And it is the events immediately following infection about which we know the least."

Weissman discovered for himself how little was known early in 1986, when he was asked to write a report on the development of AIDS for the National Academy of Science's commission on the growing epidemic. "When I came back from the first of the commission's meetings," he recalls, "I said to the people in the lab, 'We don't know anything. From the moment of contact, we don't know where the virus goes, where it spreads, in which organs it eliminates immune cells, or how this elimination occurs. And we'll never know, because we can't—and shouldn't—invade the human body at those early points after infection.' I said we had to find some relevant animal model."

McCune had come to the same conclusion. At the time he was the only one in Weissman's lab actively working on HIV. "He was also caring for AIDS patients, was committed to them," says Weissman. "And he was just hot about developing an animal model for the disease."

Weissman wanted to use a laboratory mouse, but that idea presented immediate problems. In humans, HIV gains entry to immune cells by attaching to a receptor on their surface, a protein called CD4. Mouse cells don't have this protein receptor and are therefore uninfectible. To get around the problem, Weissman came up with an extremely complicated plan that involved manipulating the genes of both the virus and the mouse so that the virus could bind to the cellular surface and thus get its foot in the door.

"Frankly, I didn't think his scheme would work," says McCune. "And I wasn't eager to spend my postdoctoral career pursuing it."

Then came that night McCune hit upon a mouse scheme of his own, while driving along an empty highway. Earlier in the day he had drawn up a list of conditions that his ideal AIDS animal model would have to meet. First, the animal would be a rat or mouse. Second, the virus used would be straight HIV, not a virus with altered genes. And third, the immune cells that the virus infected would not be mouse cells but human.

Reconciling the first and third conditions, however, seemed to require putting a human immune system inside a rodent—a biological contradiction if ever there was one. Because if you were to place human immune organs inside a mouse, the human immune cells would attack their rodent host, while the mouse's immune cells would attack the human grafts. You'd get immunological war.

But McCune, as he drove, thought he saw a way this war might be circumvented. He was thinking about a paper by the late British biologist Peter Medawar, when the implications of Medawar's findings began to take on the rough outlines of a brave new mouse.

During World War II Medawar had tried to find a way to save the lives of Royal Air Force men whose planes had been shot down. Often half their skin had been burned away, and their only hope for survival was a skin graft. Yet Medawar, like others before him, found that within a week the skin grafts were rejected. All the transplanted skin shriveled up and fell from the dying bodies like flakes of dust.

Medawar soon demonstrated that organ rejection was simply the immune system doing its duty. "Paradoxical though it may seem," Medawar once said "the rejection of a graft is essentially the body curing itself of the graft." The body's immune system recognizes the graft as foreign tissue and attacks the invader as it would a germ.

But in a classic 1953 paper Medawar announced the discovery of a secret passage through this immunological fortress. If an embryonic mouse were given cells from another mouse, strain, its developing immune system could somehow learn to recognize as "self" both its own tissue and the foreign cells.

"Meadawar's paper suggested that if I wanted to put human immune cells into a mouse," says McCune, "I should use fetal tissue. Because fetal immune cells can be taught to see foreign tissue—in this case the mouse—as self."

As embryonic human immune cells develop, they mature into all the different cells of the immune system, including the white blood cells known as T cells. T cells are the ones that discern self from nonself and thus cause transplant rejection. They are the quarterbacks of the human immune system—and the prime target of the AIDS virus.

These immune cells are called I cells because they mature in the thymus, the gland beneath the breastbone. In 1978, 25 years after Medawar's original finding, another classic paper showed that the fetal thymus is actually the "school" in which T cells learn to recognize cells tagged with foreign labels. "This second paper," says McCune, "suggested that I would also need to implant a human fetal thymus into the mouse if I wanted to get mature human T cells that could recognize the mouse's body as self. And I had to have T cells, because to make the mouse a valid AIDS model, I had to infect its T cells with the virus."

The scheme McCune conceived during his nighttime commute was based on these fundamental principles. He would transplant human embryonic immune cells, taken from an aborted fetus, into an immunodeficient mouse. Because it lacked an immune system of its own, the mouse would be unable to reject the fetal transplant. Further, McCune would transplant into this immunodeficient mouse a human fetal thymus. The human immune cells, he hoped, would home to this human thymus, mature into T cells, and become educated to recognize the mouse as self. If everything worked according to plan, McCune would get a rodent with a fully functioning human immune system.

At this point, of course, McCune's mouse was still only a vision—the creation of a mind let loose, freewheeling after long hours of laboratory work. Whether the dream would ever materialize was quite another matter. Nobel Laureate geneticist François Jacob recently wrote that science can be divided into two realms: day science and night science. "Day science employs reasoning that meshes like gears," he claimed. It solves a tightly linked series of small puzzles through established experimental methods. Night science, in contract, is the stuff of intuitive leaps and meanderings—such as those by which, say, a human-mouse chimera is conceived while driving home. In night science, wrote Jacob, "plans for experiments have barely taken form. Thought proceeds along sinuous paths, tortuous streets, most often blind alleys . . . in quest of a sign, of a wink, of an unforeseen connection."

For McCune, that sign appeared out of the darkness as he was scanning a recent review of some 30 different strains of immunodeficient mice, searching for one that could serve as a host for his immune system transplant. The second strain listed was SCID. Those mice, he read, lacked the two major arms of the immune system. They made neither the T cells, which coordinate the immune response against foreign invaders, nor the white blood cells called B cells, which produce antibodies to neutralize them. But it was a sentence further down that hit McCune with the unforeseen connection: SCID mice, he read, often die of Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia—the same opportunistic lung infection that had killed so many of his AIDS patients.

Immediately a scheme crystallized in McCune's mind, one that would allow him to create alternating stages of immunodeficiency and immunocompetence in these mice. Call it flip-flop scheme.

"The SCID mouse presumably was immunodeficient and died of Pneumocystis pneumonia because it lacked its own T cells," says McCune, his voice recalling the excitement of that moment. This was the "flip" immunodeficient state. "The question immediately was: If you were to put a human fetal thymus and immune cells into the mouse, would it be protected against Pneumocystis?" Flop—the mouse was now immunocompetent. "If you were then to infect these T cells with HIV, shouldn't the mouse once again get Pneumocystis—just like an AIDS patient?" Flip—the mouse was once again immunodeficient. "And if that was the case—if the mouse was rendered immunodeficient by the AIDS virus—could you then give the mouse drugs, knock out the HIV, and return the mouse to a state where it would again be immunocompetent, and once again resistant to Pneumocystis?" The final flop. "Crazy, right?" says McCune.

Indeed, that was precisely Weissman's reaction. "Go ahead and try," he told McCune. "But I bet you it doesn't work."

"I bet you it does," replied McCune. As was usual in the Weissman lab, the wager was a bottle of wine.

McCune's first step was to get 21 SCID mice from Leonard Shultz, who had written the article reviewing the various immunodeficient strains. The next was to begin constructing the animals' immune system, and for this he needed a fetal liver—the organ where immature immune cells are made in the fetus—and a thymus to induce a functional population of T cells. He also planned to add lymph nodes, the tiny organs to which T cells migrate and where they interact with other immune cells.

McCune had cleared his experiment with the Stanford Human Use Committee, and he was satisfied in his own mind that his use of tissue from aborted fetuses was ethical. "Everyone has their own personal views about abortion," he says. "But I didn't think that the use of fetal tissue in these experiments would in any way encourage women to have abortions. It was a question of whether already aborted tissue could be used for a potentially beneficial biomedical purpose." (Indeed, as his project proceeded, McCune consulted his uncle, a Catholic priest and theologian, and was relieved that he agreed with this view.)

With the help of his wife, an obstetrician, McCune had been able to find the proper channels for obtaining the fetal tissue. But extracting the tiny thymus gland proved to be maddeningly difficult—the gland was so minuscule that he couldn't even find it. The project seemed doomed before it had even started. Noting the look of utter dejection on McCune's face, a co-worker, Hideto Kaneshima, inquired what was wrong. "You have to talk to my wife," said Kaneshima when McCune explained the problem. "She's an expert on fetal thymus." Indeed, his wife, Reiko Namikawa, had spent her entire career studying T cell development in the thymus; and she happened to be taking a sabbatical at Stanford.

A fledgling research team was beginning to assemble. The three young scientists—McCune, Kaneshima, and Namikawa—were soon joined by Miriam Lieberman, an experienced mouse microsurgeon. Lieberman showed them how the fetal thymus could be grafted under the capsulelike membrane surrounding a mouse's kidney. Together, the four transplanted both fetal thymuses and the even tinier lymph nodes into 11 adult SCID mice, reserving the other 10 mice in the colony for use as controls. A week later, they injected fetal immune cells into the experimental mice, hoping that, as in humans, the immature cells would home in on the thymus, develop into mature human T cells, and circulate to the lymph nodes.

Initially, though, the results were not encouraging. "The mice were not doing well," says McCune. Actually, the animals looked as if they might die—which was what Weissman had expected all along.

His pessimism was based on the outcome of similar transplantation attempts in the 1950s and 1960s. At that time many attempts had been made to reconstruct a normal mouse's immune system by first killing all its immune cells with X-rays, then injecting it with human immune cells. But none of the attempts worked. "Fortunately Mike was completely ignorant of these studies," says Weissman. "So his mind wasn't poisoned by this history of failure."

"If I had known about these experiments before I started, I probably never would have tried SCID-hu," agrees McCune. As it was, right after the transplants he had been extremely discouraged by the mice's sick state. But two weeks or so after surgery the mice started doing better. And they were not simply convalescing from surgery and returning to their former SCID state. For shortly after the SCID-hu mice began to improve, the control mice began to die—apparently of Pneumocystis pneumonia. Although both groups were being kept out in the open, the SCID-hu mice were healthy. Not one was getting pneumonia. "That," says McCune, "was our first indication that the experiment was working."

Subsequent study confirmed that the mice were indeed hosting human T cells which were living quite compatibly with the animal's own tissues. Furthermore, to the researchers' delight, they found evidence of two other important immune system cells. Inside the engrafted lymph nodes, human B cells were obediently producing human antibodies. And to top it off, the mice hosted human macrophages—the other major target, along with T cells, of AIDS virus attack. McCune and company had created a mouse with a genuine human immune system.

Weissman paid off his wager with a bottle of quite moderately priced sparkling white wine. McCune, no wine connoisseur anyway, rounded up a few friends to help him drink his winnings—and then got on with his work.

"Clearly, the next step was to try to infect SCID-hu with the AIDS virus," says McCune. And so, with utmost care, virus that had been cloned from the blood of an AIDS patient was injected into the mice. During the next eight weeks the virus spread throughout the thymus and lymph nodes. Highly specific molecular probes showed that it was actively replicating. For the first time HIV infection had been accomplished in an organism other than humans or chimpanzees.

Because university safety regulations prevented him from continuing his research with HIV-infected animals at Stanford, in early 1988 McCune, along with Weissman, Caltech molecular biologist Leroy Hood, and Nobel-winning molecular biologist David Baltimore, began the search for funds to start a private research firm. In March they were approached by a consortium of venture capitalists who gave them a $10 million guarantee. "As one of the venture capitalists said," McCune recalls, "it was an offer we couldn't refuse." SyStemix, McCune's new biotech firm, was born.

The SyStemix researchers are now engaged in three major SCID-hu projects. "First," says Kaneshima, who moved from Stanford to join his colleague, "we are trying to make the perfect SCID-hu." Immune cells have a limited life span, and in the human body they are continually replaced. By refining their original transplantation procedure, the researchers have already managed to give their mice a self-renewing supply of T cells. Now, with a view toward testing vaccines, the group is exploring ways to increase the B cell population in the mice. A vaccine works by stimulating the B cells to make antibodies that neutralize a particular virus. If these mice are to be useful for testing AIDS vaccines, they must have B cells capable of making specific and abundant antibodies to HIV.

The second major project is the study of just how the virus damages the immune system. The very first description of AIDS in 1981 identified what has become the hallmark of the disease—the steady decline of T cells in the bloodstream. Yet, says McCune, precisely how HIV kills so many T cells remains murky. Originally AIDS was pictured as resulting from a simple series of search-and-destroy missions, in which the virus infected a T cell, replicated several hundredfold, burst open the cell, and then went on to attack more T cells. Yet blood studies of AIDS patients have found the virus actively replicating in only one in 100,000 T cells.

How else does the virus wreak its havoc, and where, if not in the bloodstream? It's now known that the HIV can infect other immune system cells, such as the scavenging macrophages, and they may serve as a reservoir for the virus. It's also known that an infected T cell can fuse with many uninfected cells to form one giant cell—another mechanism that may account for the disappearance of T cells in AIDS patients. McCune has found such cell conglomerates in the SCID-hu mice's infected lymph nodes.

In fact, McCune suspects that the lymph nodes may play a crucial part in the development of AIDS. Swollen nodes are one of the earliest signs of infection in humans, he notes. "And lymph nodes are ideal places for the virus to spread—they contain different classes of immune cells that are constantly shaking hands with one another." Are most T cells destroyed in these lymphatic pockets? Does the virus disrupt the delicate communications network between the various immune cells it infects? "These are all questions that are very difficult to address in cell culture dishes," says McCune "That's why you need a living model."

The search for suitable models for AIDS has intensified in recent years with researchers trying a variety of approaches and animals, including other mouse models. Malcolm Martin of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Disease has inserted the entire set of HIV genes into the cells of normal mice; Donald Mosier of the Medical Biology Institute at La Jolla has injected immunodeficient mice with mature, rather than fetal, human immune cells. Yet McCune's SCID-hu mouse remains unique in having an immune system with both human immune cells and organs—a human immune system that can constantly renew itself and live in symbiosis with foreign mouse tissue. "SCID-hu could be a much more complete animal model for AIDS," says Martin. "Because Mike has all the components of a human immune system in his mouse, he has the potential of studying the entire life cycle of the AIDS virus."

This is risky work, however. The SCID-hu studies will involve administering HIV to a plethora of little rodents, and there is always the danger that a mouse might move in an experimenter's hand just as he is injecting it with a needle full of deadly virus. Not surprisingly, then, McCune believes that new laboratory procedures will have to be developed.

"We joke about building a SCID-hu ICU," he says. "In a hospital intensive care unit, you can inject a drug into an indwelling catheter, for instance, and use monitors to continually assess what that drug is doing. We need something like this before we can do full-scale drug screening in a safe way."

The third major project under way at SyStemix is the search for what can be called the Holy Grail of immunology—the human stem cell that gives rise to all the cells of the blood, including the immune system. Last year Weissman's lab managed to isolate the stem cell of the mouse—in itself a milestone in immunological research.

SCID-hu is the perfect vehicle for the task, says Weissman. The SyStemix researchers plan to inject "candidates" for the human stem cell into the mouse and then see which gives rise to a total human blood system. Identifying the human stem cell would have enormous implications for our understanding of blood and immune system development. Moreover, the work on stem cell development relates directly to McCune's work on HIV. Weissman's research suggests that the early immune cells that develop into human T cells may temporarily display the CD4 receptor that the AIDS virus binds to. Thus, the virus may cause the massive depletion of T cells seen in AIDS not only by killing mature T cells but by preventing new T cells from ever developing.

McCune's flip-flop scheme is still less than half complete. He has been able to convert SCID mice from an immunodeficient to an immunocompetent state. But will infection by the AIDS virus flip the mice back to their vulnerable state so that they will once again be subject to Pneumocystis pneumonia? And if so, can experimental AIDS drugs flip such HIV-infected mice back to immuno-competence?

"So far, each stage of Mike's scheme has worked," says Weissman. "But he's extremely cautious, to the point of appearing pessimistic, when he talks about how far we can take SCID-hu. After his seminars I've heard people come out saying, 'Well, they've tried to see whether the mice get AIDS after HIV infection, and they don't.' But that's not true at all. We haven't had time to even test that yet."

Still, while McCune bends over backward not to substitute hope and hype for hard facts, he has at least two tangible reminders of how far his crazy idea has already come. SyStemix now houses 800 small white SCID-hu mice. And on a bookshelf in his office, its $3.99 price tag intact, sits the empty bottle from the wine that he won by making his chimeric mouse a reality—by ushering night science into the light of day.

"If you formulate a wild-ass experiment that you don't expect to work," says McCune now, "and you calculate nonetheless what would happen if it were to work, and that does happen—then you have to be pretty amazed."

Night has fallen, and McCune is driving from Stanford to San Francisco amid the rush of commuting cars. It is the same route on which he thought of his SCID-hu mice two years before. The afternoon's clouds have cleared, and McCune is now riding down memory lane under a star-pocked sky. He is in an expansive mood, and he talks enthusiastically about his work, about the chance to finally begin a rational line of attack against the disease that so bewildered him and his colleagues at San Francisco General.

"Before AIDS," says McCune, "people in the hospital didn't really talk about death as inevitable. We always had anecdotes about the miraculous procedures we performed—for instance, to keep somebody with severe liver disease alive. But there was never an anecdote about anyone recovering from AIDS." As a young resident, he recalls, he asked a patient with advanced Pneumocystis pneumonia whether he wished to be revived if his heart stopped. There was nothing else he could offer him. "I had to say, "You have a disease we know very little about. What do you want us to do if you can't breathe tomorrow?" I guess it was this experience that committed me to doing AIDS research.

What would he do with SCID-hu if there were no mysterious human viruses lurking, no AIDS epidemic?

"Look at T cell function and development, definitely. The whole issue of how a T cell learns to distinguish self from nonself is such a fascinating phenomenon, and to this day no one knows how it works. If we can show that the human T cells are functional in this mouse—and that's still a big if," he adds with characteristic caution—"we'll have a nice system in which to study the problem. Then we may be able to apply this knowledge to autoimmune diseases." In autoimmune diseases, such as lupus and rheumatoid arthritis, the immune system comes to regard some of the body's own tissue as nonself, as a foreign invader to be destroyed. "The field's still quite a quagmire," says McCune. "Henry Kunkel, who died a few years ago and whom I worked for as a graduate student at Rockefeller University, spent his whole life trying to understand autoimmune disorders."

McCune turns off the freeway at the first exit to San Francisco, where he still works a half-day a week caring for patients in San Francisco General's AIDS clinic. Before going home, he needs to make a stop in the northern part of the city, in an area that's unfamiliar to him.

As McCune emerges from the exit, he does not seem quite sure where it has led him. He drives down a dark, quiet street, surrounded by low buildings that in the evening gloom appear abandoned. While he pulls up to a red light he listens to the question being put to him: Given all the experiments to be done, is he going to spend the rest of his scientific life with his mice?

McCune laughs, a little distractedly. He's looking around for a street sign. "Yeah, sure—I guess I will be spending my life with these mice." He laughs again, and then his caution re-emerges. "That is, if we can get the experiments we're doing now to work. Then we can go on." He is still looking for a street sign. "Where the hell are we?" he mutters. The light turns green, and McCune eases the car forward.

"Oh well," he says, gathering speed now, his eyes back on the road before him. "We'll get there somehow."

EXHIBIT 2

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF HEALTH,
Bethesda, MD, July 17, 1989.

Hon. GEORGE J. MITCHELL,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MITCHELL: Thank you for your letter of June 7 inquiring about the impact on the Nation's biomedical research activities of the May 10 fire at The Jackson Laboratory in Bar Harbor, Maine.

The destruction of the 500,000 mice in The Jackson Laboratory fire clearly represents the loss of an extremely important national resource. Indeed, this loss is currently creating very serious problems for research scientists all over the world. The Jackson Laboratory maintains approximately 1,700 different strains of mice and ships 2-3 million animals each year to some 11,000 research laboratories. As noted in your letter, roughly 20 percent of the genetically defined mice used in U.S. laboratories comes from The Jackson Laboratory.

The investment by NIH in bimoedical research involving mice is, as one might expect, quite substantial. In FY 1988, for example, NIH provided approximately $1.4 billion for the support of research projects using mice. These studies are being performed at universities and medical schools throughout the country. Of these funds, roughly $200 million supports research projects affected by The Jackson Laboratory fire. In addition, it is estimated that approximately 170,000 mice each year are supplied by The Jackson Laboratory for studies done by NIH intramural scientists.

We feel that the lack of availability of many unique strains of mice normally provided by The Jackson Laboratory will cause delays in research by investigators at universities, biotechnology companies, and pharmaceutical firms. These studies are important in the development of new methods for the diagnosis, treatment and prevention of a wide range of human disorders, such as muscular dystrophy, cancer, heart disease, diabetes, and AIDS.

We at NIH are pleased that thanks to wise contingency planning on the part of The Jackson Laboratory staff, no strains of mice were completely wiped out, so that it will be possible for the Laboratory to replenish its supply. The speed with which this replenishment can be accomplished is critically important. We understand that the Special Emergency Fund for Natural Disasters is being considered as a way to address the issue.

I have sent your colleague, Senator William Cohen, an identical letter. If I can be of any further assistance, please let me know.

Sincerely yours,
JAMES B. WYNGAARDEN, M.D.,
Director.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (S. 1390), as amended, was passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONSTRUCTION OF MOUSE RESEARCH LABORATORY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Director of the National Institutes of Health, shall provide a single grant, through a competitive application process, to a public or private nonprofit entity to enable such entity to construct a facility for the development, production, and distribution of inbred and mutant mice that are to be used to address the critical shortage of such mice for biomedical research.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 to carry out subsection (a).

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I was going to ask for a rollcall but instead I will move to table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

WAIVER OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF LAW FOR ANNUITANTS INVOLVED IN CARRYING OUT THE 1990 DECENNIAL CENSUS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 158, H.R. 1860, providing a temporary appointment for Federal annuitants to assist with the 1990 census.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Bill (H.R. 1860) to provide that a Federal annuitant of former member of a uniformed service who returns to Government service, under a temporary appointment, to assist in carrying out the 1990 decennial census of population shall be exempt from certain provisions of title 5, United States Code, relating to offsets from pay and other benefits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, today the Senate will unanimously agree to send H.R. 1860 to the White House for the President's signature. This legislation will enable the Census Bureau to meet some of their manpower problems in the upcoming 1990 census by hiring more Federal retiree's.

Military, postal, and civil service retiree's will be allowed to return to Government service and assist in the 1990 census without suffering reductions in their retirement benefits. This narrow exemption to the requirements that individuals who return to service be subject to offsets to their retirement pay and benefits will remove a disincentive and encourage this talented and capable pool of individuals to help out in next year's census.

H.R. 1860 is identical to S. 1450, legislation I introduced in the Senate earlier this week. Senators BINGAMAN, SARBANES, RUDMAN, ROTH, DECONCINI, SANFORD, BOREN, BURDICK, and MIKULSKI join me in sponsoring this bill.

H.R. 1860 is sponsored by Congressman SAWYER, a member of my Ohio delegation and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Census and Population of the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. I want to particularly compliment him on his work to enact this legislation.

Mr. President, in less than 1 year, our Nation will conduct its Twenty-first Decennial Census. To accomplish this enormous task, a temporary work force of 480,000 employees will be required. The Census Bureau will recruit and train these temporary employees. If the Bureau is unable to meet its staff requirements, the data collected during 1990 will be not as reliable or accurate as it should.

An accurate and complete census is absolutely vital. Not only is reapportionment dependent on an accurate count, but many of our Nation's means of effectively targeting assistance to the needy depend on an accurate census. The Census Bureau needs to be able to fill these 480,000 temporary positions in an expeditious and efficient manner.

A significant portion of the 480,000 will serve as enumerators and visit the homes from which the initial questionnaire was not returned by mail. The job of the enumerator is not always an easy one. Often they must go into unfamiliar and unfriendly areas to gather data. Considerable "people skills" are necessary to count the population in some parts of the country where individuals fear and resent representatives of the Federal Government who ask questions.

In hearings before Congressman SAWYER, the Census Bureau recounted the difficulties the Bureau expects with filling these positions. Turnover and areas of low unemployment present particular problems.

The legislation the Senate passes today will help the Census Bureau overcome these problems by expanding the pool of eligible and capable Federal retiree's who can fill these positions. The legislation is budget neutral. The General Accounting Office, the National Association of Retired Federal Employees, and the Retired Officers Association join the Census Bureau in endorsing the measure as a constructive step.

Mr. President, this bill merits the expedited attention the Senate is giving it. If the Census Bureau is to take advantage of the law it must move quickly in the next few months to adjust its hiring practices and get the word out to Federal retirees that the disincentive for their participation in the census no longer exists.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of this legislation to allow Federal retirees to work on the 1990 census without a reduction in their annuities. In a few short months, the Census Bureau will face an enormous task—conducting the 1990 Decennial Census as required under the Constitution. The Census Bureau estimates that it will count about 250 million people and about 106 million housing units, about 94 million occupied and 12 million vacant units. There will also be a census in Puerto Rico of about 1.1 million housing units.

To carry out this task, the Census Bureau will hire about 565,000 people, some of whom will do more than one job. About 1.6 million people will be tested for temporary jobs, and more than 300,000 people will be employed during peak census-taking activities.

One of the best potential labor pools for census workers consists of Federal retirees. These are competent, eager workers who understand the importance of the census. It is estimated that this potential labor pool may be as large as 2 million persons.

However, current law would require that these retirees would have to take an offsetting reduction in their Federal retirement benefits if they return to work for the Federal Government. This is a high price to pay for a temporary job helping out on the census.

The legislation before us today would provide a one-time exemption to this rule. It is only for those who will be employed on the 1990 census and only if they are employed for no longer than 6 months.

I believe that this legislation is an appropriate and limited exemption to current law. It will greatly help the Census Bureau meet its personnel requirements to carry out the very important task of the 1990 census. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 1860) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 231 "NATIONAL LIBRARY CARD SIGN-UP MONTH"; HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 253 "NATIONAL PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE DAY"

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration en bloc of the following joint resolutions: House Joint Resolution 321 and House Joint Resolution 253, that they be read a third time and passed, and that the motion to reconsider the votes by which they were agreed to be laid on the table en bloc and that their preambles were appropriate to agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL LIBRARY CARD SIGN-UP MONTH

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 231) designating September 1989 as "National Libary Card Sign-Up Month," was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE DAY

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 253) designating September 8, 1989 as "National Pledge of Allegiance Day," was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 102—INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 102 designated "National Library Card Sign-up Month," be discharged from the Senate Judiciary Committee and then be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMENDATION OF THE CITIZENS OF THE SIOUX CITY, IA TRI-STATE AREA

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 379, a joint resolution commending the citizens of Sioux City, IA, and the tri-State area for their lifesaving services to the passengers and crew of United flight 232.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the joint resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 379) commending the citizens of Sioux City, Iowa, tri-State area for their heroism and spirit of volunteerism in selflessly providing assistance and life-saving services to the passengers and crew of United Airlines Flight 232.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am happy to support this joint resolution commending the citizens of Sioux City, IA, and the tri-state area for their assistance and extraordinary response to the crash of United flight 232 on July 19, 1989.

The Senate last week adopted a similar joint resolution which I offered in tribute to the heroic and generous efforts of the many people of Sioux City and Woodbury County, and of surrounding communities in Iowa, Nebraska, and South Dakota. Because of their skill, experience, coordination, preparedness, and generosity, there were as many as 185 survivors. That is truly remarkable.

By the time flight 232 crashed, there were firefighters and police, National Guard units, and local rescue vehicles on the scene. The call went out to all of Iowa—and all of Iowa responded.

It's no surprise. Iowa is a place where people still care about their neighbors and answer the call of duty without a second thought.

The relief operation that was integral in saving so many lives should be mirrored on a national level. Sioux City stands today as a hallmark—a tribute not only to a well-orchestrated emergency program—but to a way of life.

I am so proud of the efforts of the people of Sioux City and Woodbury County that I wrote an article about them which appeared today in USA Today. I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SIOUX CITY SHOWS "ME" DECADE IS DEAD

(By Tom Harkin)

More than lives were saved by the rescuers who rushed to the crash of United Flight 232 near Sioux City.

They may have helped to restore a nation's belief in its own basic goodness.

For nine years, we Americans have been scolded for our selfishness and greed.

The '80s have been branded the "me" decade, with the conspicuous consumption of the Ivan Boeskys, the Michael Milkins and the Donald Trumps paraded as proof.

It's a bum rap on America. Sioux City's response to a horrible airline catastrophe shows we're far more than a collection of selfish interests.

The rescuers were called heroes, and they surely deserve the title. But the volunteers and medical professionals from Iowa and neighboring states who worked round the clock weren't seeking laurels.

They were ordinary Americans who saw a critical need and did what they could.

When hospital blood supplies ran low, donors responded so quickly that, inside of three hours, an estimated five months of blood inventory was collected.

When Sioux City ambulances were overloaded, small towns from miles around rushed their emergency units to the scene.

When hotels were filled, Sioux City's residents opened up their homes to the survivors.

National Guard and Red Cross units, state troopers, social workers, doctors and nurses—all told, more than 1,000 citizens contributed to the saving of 185 passengers' lives.

The United crash produced hundreds of tales of individual heroics.

But only the joint effort of a tightly coordinated group was able to save so many lives.

Maybe it's time to usher in the "we" decade.

Uncommon valor in extraordinary circumstances is an American tradition.

It shows what we're made of, what makes this nation still admired around the globe.

Believing in our own potential, we will be better armed to tackle the big problems our society faces, like the horrible spread of drugs.

And to the radicals who spit and stomp with contempt on our flag and the nation it represents, Sioux City offers our strongest rebuke.

Basic American values don't change with the passing of the decades.

Long after the headlines have vanished, the heroism in Sioux City will endure as a reminder of what this country is really all about.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, last week the Senate agreed to Senate Resolution 157 which commended the citizens of Sioux City and surrounding areas for their hard work in assisting those involved with the tragic crash of United flight 232 on July 19, 1989.

Congressman FRED GRANDY from Sioux City, recognized that there was one problem with our approach, it did not include the President in the process. Therefore, Congressman GRANDY introduced House Joint Resolution 379.

The citizens of Sioux City and surrounding areas did an incredible job in handling this tragedy and crisis. As Congressman TOM TAUKE recognized by recommending to Transportation Secretary Skinner that the Sioux City effort be used as a role model for other emergency preparation planning and efforts, these Sioux City area citizens deserve more than our thanks; they deserve our utmost recognition and praise.

Therefore, Congressman GRANDY introduced House Joint Resolution 379 in order that our recognition and thanks to the Sioux City area citizens include that of President George Bush. As my colleagues know, the Senate resolution which passed last week does not allow for a Presidential signing. House Joint Resolution 379 does afford the President the opportunity to sign our legislation.

I believe the efforts of the Sioux City area citizens deserve the additional recognition afforded by President Bush's signature and urge my colleagues to support House Joint Resolution 379.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 379) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON GLOBAL ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 171 submitted earlier today by Senators GORE, HEINZ, MITCHELL, BAUCUS, and others, to authorize the appointment of a special Senate delegation to host an international global warming conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 171) authorizing the appointment of a special Senate delegation to host an international conference in the United States on global environmental issues, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, 2 months ago, I and 28 of my colleagues presented the leaders of this body, Mr. MITCHELL and Mr. DOLE, with a letter proposing that there be convened, here in Washington, an international parliamentary conference on the global environment. My colleagues and I were moved to call for this conference, because of the unprecedented level of global cooperation that will be required to effectively address this global challenge. We feel that such a conference is crucial in order to initiate a dialog among parliamentarians that must be sustained for years to come.

I am pleased to be joined today by Senators HEINZ, MITCHELL, PELL, BAUCUS, and WIRTH in submitting a resolution authorizing the appointment of a special Senate delegation to host an international conference in the United States on global environmental issues.

Such a conference will be a logical complement to activities in which the administration is engaged. The purposes of the conference will be to permit parliamentarians to acquaint themselves at first hand with the dimensions of the global environmental crisis through contact with the best scientific minds; to present their national, political, and personal perspectives on the environmental problems that we all face; to acquaint parliamentarians with the present and potential national and international responses; and, hopefully, to leave having made progress toward consensus as to the magnitude of the threat, the need for action, and the approximate outlines of what must be done.

Mr. President, we are facing the prospect of requiring deep changes on an unprecedented scale in order to counter the trends that are presently degrading the world's environment. At such a critical juncture, it is essential that the people are also participants, speaking through their chosen spokespersons in assemblies, parliaments, and congresses. And it is essential that those representatives are fully informed, so that their policy responses are founded on the best understanding of the problems that we all face.

I look forward to this ground-breaking international parliamentary conference on the global environment. In the face of a massive global environmental crisis, legislators must stand together so that all nations, great and small, advanced and developing, can work as one to solve a common problem.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I strongly support this Senate resolution to create a special Senate delegation to host an international conference in the United States on global environmental issues.

Mr. President, global environmental problems are upon us. Like the Chinese character for crisis which is really two characters—danger and opportunity—we have both global climate danger and an opportunity to change the current course of events.

First the danger. Over the last century greenhouse gas emissions have increased dramatically Carbon dioxide concentrations in the atmosphere have increased 25 percent since preindustrial times. In fact, CO_2 concentrations are the highest in 130,000 years.

Methane has more than doubled during the last 200 years and continues to rise.

CFC's have increased 5 percent per year during this decade alone. CFC's now make up 14 percent of the total greenhouse gas emissions.

Over the last century the period of dramatic growth of greenhouse gas emissions, the global temperatures have also increased—as much as seven-tenths of a degree Celsius. Experts predict that if we continue these emissions, temperatures can rise 1.5 to 4.5 degrees. This may not seem like much but the total temperature change since the peak of the last Ice Age, 18,000 years ago was only 5 degrees.

Experts also predict that unless we change our ways and lower our emissions we can expect hotter days ahead. In Washington, DC, we exceed 100 degrees about 1 day a year. By the middle of next century we can expect to exceed 100 degrees 12 times. Dallas now exceeds 100 degrees 19 days but may exceed it 78 times. And New York, Chicago, and Denver which don't presently have 100 degree days will.

We don't need to sit idle and let this all happen. We have an opportunity to change this. We can lead this fight, but we can't do it alone. Although the United States alone accounts for one-fifth of the world's greenhouse gas emissions, the rest of the OECD and the East bloc each contribute about a fifth as well.

Mr. President, as you know, at the recent economic summit the seven major industrial nations agreed that decisive action is urgently needed to understand and protect the Earth's ecological balance.

They agreed that all countries combine their efforts to improve monitoring on a global scale.

And they agreed to give further impetus to scientific research on environmental issues and develop the necessary environmental control technologies.

Mr. President, the economic declarations made at the summit provide good encouraging words. But we must make sure to see that it happens.

Mr. President, hosting an international conference in the United States on global environmental issues is a positive step. It will show that we are serious about these problems and are committed to finding solutions. I support this resolution and urge my colleagues support it.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, the hour is late and I will be brief. We have, in my opinion, a relatively short amount of time in which to act on global issues such as climate change, deforestation, loss of biological diversity, ozone depletion, and international hazardous waste disposal, to name some.

No one nation can unilaterally expect to cope with these problems. It is going to take global cooperation on an unprecedented scale to make headway on—let alone solve—these complex problems.

For several weeks Senator GORE, along with Senator CHAFEE, Senator WIRTH, and many others, have been working to bring about an interparliamentary conference on global environmental issues, sponsored by the Senate. This conference is to be held during the 101st Congress.

I am quite delighted that my colleagues in the Senate are willing to proceed with this proposal, and have agreed to bring forward a resolution authorizing the necessary expenditures from the Senate's contingency fund and establishing a set group of Senators to develop the conference.

With the passage of this resolution, Mr. President, I think the Senate is taking a very important first step. As legislators, we should not act in a vacuum on global matters. We should have the best information available, and be able to share that information with our colleagues in other legislative bodies.

Last March, I learned how important this effort is. Along with Congressman SCHEUER and SIKORSKI, I traveled to Brussels to meet with members of the European Parliament on these same issues. It was a very successful effort, and helped dramatize to me that where a common purpose exists—in this case, to safeguard our planet—the differences of language and nationality can be overcome and great progress made.

We should be able to establish a true working relationship with other concerned parliamentarians—to benefit from their expertise and to share our efforts with them. I think this conference will be extremely helpful to us and I look forward to its convening as soon as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 171) was agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 171

Resolved, That (a)(1) the President pro tempore of the Senate is authorized to appoint a special delegation of Members of the Senate (hereafter in this resolution referred to as the "delegation") that shall host an international conference, to be held in the United States, on global environmental issues, as described in paragraph (2).

(2) The conference referred to in paragraph (1) is a conference held for the purpose of discussing the implications of the global environmental threat to the peoples of the world, conceptions regarding measures to contain further damage, measures to deal with damage which is already in the process of materializing, and the problem of allocating a just share of the responsibilities and burdens involved in the essential, common task.

(b) The Senate delegation shall be composed of seven Members of the Senate, appointed as follows:

(2) three Members of the Senate from the minority party, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendation of the minority leader.

(c) Any vacancy in the membership of the delegation shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

SEC. 2. (a)(1) The chairman shall designate Senate employees who shall provide professional staff support and expertise for the delegation. Only such staff members and secretaries who are employees of a Senator or a Senate Committee may perform professional services for the delegation.

(2) The majority leader, in consultation with the chairman, shall designate such a Senate employee to be Chief Counsel to the delegation.

(b) Only designated delegation staff may participate in the official activities of the delegation.

SEC. 3. (a) All administrative support and services for the delegation shall be provided by the Office of the Secretary of the Senate, under the direction of the Secretary.

(b) The Secretary is authorized, from funds made available under section 4, to employ such staff at an annual rate of pay, and incur such expenses, including official reception and representation expenses, as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out his duties and functions for the delegation.

(c) In carrying out his functions, the Secretary may, with the prior approval of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, procure the temporary (not to exceed one year) or intermittent service of individual consultants, or organizations thereof, in the same manner and under the same conditions as a standing committee of the Senate may procure such services.

SEC. 4. The expenses of the delegation, as authorized under section 3, including the employment of consultants, shall not exceed $500,000 and shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, out of the account of miscellaneous items, upon vouchers approved by the Secretary of the Senate, after consultation with the chairmen and the majority leader (except that vouchers shall not be required for the disbursement of salaries of employees who are paid at an annual rate).

SEC. 5. The delegation may submit periodic reports on its activities to the Senate and shall submit a final report at the time of its termination.

SEC. 6. This resolution shall terminate at the conclusion of the One Hundred First Congress.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AUTHORIZATION TO MAKE APPOINTMENTS BY SENATE LEADERSHIP

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the recess or adjournment of the Senate, the President of the Senate, the President of the Senate pro tempore, and the majority and minority leaders be authorized to make appointments to commissions, committees, boards, conferences, or interparliamentary conferences authorized by law, by concurrent action of the two Houses, or by order of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION FOR ARMED SERVICES COMMITTEE TO MEET

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be considered to have been authorized to meet on Thursday, August 3, 1989, in open session to consider the nominations of John A. Betti to be the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, J. Daniel Howard to be Under Secretary of the Navy, and to act on the nominations of Michael P.W. Stone to be Secretary of the Army, and John W. Shannon to be Under Secretary of the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONDITIONAL RECESS OR ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send a concurrent resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the concurrent resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 67) providing for a conditional recess or adjournment of the Senate and a conditional adjournment of the House from Friday, August 4, or Saturday, August 5, 1989 to Wednesday, September 6, 1989.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 67) was considered and agreed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

HOPE FOR BIPARTISAN COOPERATION IN DRUG WAR

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, in the years I have been in the Senate, I have been impressed by the record of bipartisanship on crime and drug issues. Thanks to Senators JOE BIDEN and STROM THURMOND, and other Democrats and Republicans, the Senate produced bipartisan crime and drug bills in 1984, 1986, and 1988.

It was this record that led me—earlier this summer, when I created a Democratic task force to consider further crime and drug legislation—to pick JOE BIDEN to chair the group.

In the process of organizing the task force, Senator BIDEN assembled approximately 50 new proposals to combat America's drug problem. Many of the ideas he submitted to the task force were his own, some were from previous proposals by other Senators—Democrats and Republicans—some came from leading experts in the field.

Senator BIDEN distributed the ideas he collected to the task force on July 13. Each idea in the Senator's compilation were clearly identified by source, originator, and previous history.

As a result, I was shocked to hear, after Senator BIDEN distributed these proposals at the National Press Club on Monday, that the White House Chief of Staff accused JOE BIDEN of stealing ideas from the President or Drug Director Bennett.

Every single idea listed in Senator BIDEN's Press Club speech said where it came from, or who thought of it first.

Many of the proposals outlined in the Senator's speech—the proposals JOE BIDEN allegedly stole—were ideas that Democrats like TED KENNEDY, PAT MOYNIHAN, SAM NUNN, and JOE BIDEN were talking about years before Bill Bennett or President Bush ever spoke of them.

For example, the idea that Senator BIDEN's advocacy of boot camps is an initiative he stole from William Bennett is absurd. Boot camps were operating in Oklahoma more than 6 years ago. Senator LLOYD BENTSEN proposed them in the Senate more than a year ago.

Or the idea of seizing automobiles from casual drug users who are caught in the process of making drug buys: Senator BIDEN advocated this plan on the Senate floor almost 3 years before Bill Bennett was even nominated to be drug director.

Indeed, the idea of the drug czar position itself was one proposed by Senator BIDEN in 1981—and, I might add, vetoed by President Reagan before it was enacted last year.

When I read unfounded attacks against Senator BIDEN, I see only a misguided effort to resuscitate political charges leveled against the Senator in 1987. As we all know, Senator BIDEN was totally exonerated of these charges some months later by an arm of the Delaware Supreme Court.

I hope we can end personal attacks as a part of the political debate on the drug issue—and other issues, for that matter. I hope we can resume the legacy of bipartisan cooperation on fighting crime and drugs.

I ask unanimous consent that a compilation of newspaper articles with respect to that exoneration be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Los Angeles Times, May 29, 1989]

COURT PANEL CLEARS SENATOR BIDEN OF UNIVERSITY PLAGIARISM CHARGE

WILMINGTON, DEL.—Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. (D-Del.) has been cleared of the college plagiarism charge that helped to lead to his departure from the 1988 presidential race, the Wilmington News Journal reported Sunday.

At Biden's request, the Delaware Supreme Court reviewed the allegation in 1987. The court's Board of Professional Responsibility exonerated the senator Dec. 21, 1987, said L. Susan Faw, independent disciplinary counsel for the panel, which prosecutes allegations of unethical behavior against attorneys.

Faw said she had recommended to the court's Preliminary Review Committee, a panel of lawyers and non-lawyers with authority to recommend prosecution, that the matter be dismissed. The charge was later dismissed.

"I guess I had it in the back of my mind that this was more of a personal vindication than a political one," Biden said about his decision to delay announcing the dismissal.

The allegation of plagiarism involved an essay Biden wrote in 1965 while a freshman at Syracuse University. Biden received an "F" on the paper for relying almost exclusively on a Fordham Law Review article, which he cited heavily with footnotes. He said he was allowed to repeat the course and passed with high marks.

Faw would not release details of the investigation, likening it to the confidential proceedings of a grand jury.

Biden told the newspaper that a faculty review concluded the essay was "a poor academic job by the six-week law school freshman, but not a disciplinary or moral problem."

The allegation of plagiarism and other controversies forced Biden, who is chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, to abandon his quest for the Democratic presidential nomination on Sept. 23, 1987.

Talking with the media for the first time about his exoneration, Biden told the newspaper: "I felt very relieved because the reason I initiated this whole thing was that it was the only thing throughout the entire presidential [race] that genuinely bothered me. Because I knew all the rest would be put into perspective."

Although the plagiarism allegations dogged Biden, the most damaging impact on Biden's campaign came from the so-called "attack video" distributed to reporters by an aid to rival Democratic candidate Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

The video showed Biden using the words and ideas of British Labor Party leader Neil Kinnock without attribution. Biden contends that he usually attributed the quotes, and he called the omissions an oversight.

[From the Washington Post June 4, 1989]

NO BIDEN PLAGIARISM

(By Maralee Schwartz)

Calling it a "personal vindication" rather than a "political" one, Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. (D-Del.) confirmed that a panel of the Delaware Supreme Court cleared him of allegations that he plagiarized in law school.

Biden withdrew from the 1988 presidential campaign following accusations that he quoted British Labor Party leader Neil Kinnock without attribution and had plagiarized an article while attending Syracuse University's law school. The accusation concerned an essay Biden wrote in 1965 for an introductory class on legal methodology.

After ending his presidential campaign Sept. 23, 1987, Biden notified the state Supreme Court of the plagiarism allegations. The court's Board on Professional Responsibility ruled Dec. 21, 1987, that Biden had not violated any rules.

Biden told The Wilmington News last week that he decided not to publicize the ruling, which was confidential. "I didn't know what to do with it," he said. Biden said he finally decided to disclose it because he expected "somebody would go back some day and check."

[From the New York Times, May 31, 1989]

DELAWARE COURT CLEARS SENATOR OF PLAGIARISM

WILMINGTON, DEL., May 29—Senator Joseph R. Biden Jr. was cleared of allegations that he committed plagiarism in law school by a panel under the authority of the Delaware Supreme Court, The News Journal reported here Sunday.

Senator Biden, Democrat of Delaware, withdrew from the 1988 Presidential campaign after accusations that he had quoted the British Labor Party leader, Neil Kinnock, without attribution and had plagiarized an article while attending Syracuse University's law school.

Mr. Biden called his failure to attribute the quotes to Mr. Kinnock an oversight.

The alleged law school plagiarism involved an essay Mr. Biden wrote in 1965 for an introductory class on legal methodology.

[From USA Today, May 30, 1989]

BIDEN CLEARED

Sen. Joseph Biden Jr., D-Del., has been cleared of the 1965 law school plagiarism accusation that helped edge him from the 1988 presidential race, the Wilmington News Journal reported Sunday. He asked the board that handles ethics charges against Delaware lawyers to review the accusation in 1987; it cleared him late that same year. Biden said he delayed announcing the ruling becasue he considered it "more of a personal vindication then a political one."

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANTIDRUG PACKAGE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last May President Bush unveiled his anticrime and drug package after a tremendous amount of hard work by the President and the White House staff. And in creating this package, this hard work shows. If given a chance, the President's package could be an important weapon in the crime and drug war, a war unfortunately that the American people will be waging for quite some time.

The President's crime package is not a paper tiger. It calls for stiff penalties for those who use firearms illegally. It calls for the expansion of the Federal death penalty. It calls for a good-faith exception of the exclusionary rule, and the reform of the habeas corpus procedure. It calls for more Federal prison cells, more assistant U.S. attorneys, more FBI agents, more U.S. marshals, and it calls for Federal funding, over 1 billion dollars' worth.

These are good proposals, proposals that I fully endorse and proposals which if adopted will make a real dent in our terrible crime and drug problems.

I hope that, after we return from recess, Congress will take quick action, bipartisan action, and adopt the President's package.

The American people are tired of empty slogans. So I do not think it is productive or fair to call the President's crime package cynical or opportunistic. We make political comments from time to time—and I say this: There were some sharp comments here last week on the Senate floor by the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee and some fairly sharp comments in the National Press Club speech, which is a matter of record. It is good rhetoric, good alliteration. It makes for a good speech. But I think you have just heard from the majority leader that it is probably not going to be helpful in the long run. We are going to have to work together. The administration, too, should not be in the business of suggesting that the distinguished Senator from Delaware somehow stole or plagarized his own crime and drug proposals.

I have taken a look and I have had my staff look at the Senator's policy options. These options deserve our serious attention and consideration, and they have not been plagiarized. The distinguished Senator himself pointed out that some of these options represent proposals that have been considered in previous Congresses.

I say this: In line with what the majority leader said, we have a lot of work to do in the drug effort. It seems to me that we all have to work together around this place. Sometimes tempers are frayed, and we all may say things from time to time that we would not say on reflection. Nobody has a monopoly on ideas or a monopoly on the answers to the terrible drug and crime problems plaguing this country.

So it would seem to me that we have a lot of dedicated work to do. We need the leadership of the President, and I think we have it. We need the leadership of Senator BIDEN, and I think we have it—along with others like Senator THURMOND and those who have worked together over the years. We have passed drug bills in the last two Congresses, major drug bills, on a bipartisan basis, working with the administration. I just say that I certainly know things happen in this town from time to time, but I hope that we can drop this matter.

As I told Senator BIDEN, my friend from Delaware, on the floor a couple of nights ago, that I would be happy—in fact, to review his package. He did not ask me, but I said I will review all these options. He credited me with one of the options. It might have not been a very good one, but he was kind enough to put it in his package.

I just hope that we have heard the end of this type of rhetoric, and I want to indicate again that Senator BIDEN has been involved in the drug effort for some time. There is no doubt about it, that it was his initiative to create the drug czar.

I mentioned that earlier today that maybe we ought to respond and create one super committee in Congress or in the Senate, so that we can come to grips with this. Right now, the drug czar reports to some 75 committees in the House and Senate.

I am pleased to join my colleague in trying to put this matter at rest and dispel any doubts and any reports that may have circulated about the genesis and final product of our distinguished friend from Delaware, Senator BIDEN.

Mr. MITCHELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS REFORM, RECOVERY AND ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1989

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 [FIRREA] is a product of many months of hard work and compromise by both Congress and the administration. In many respects, the legislation has improved as it moved through each step of the legislative process. As passed by the House and Senate, the legislation is a stronger product than the President's original proposal.

At this late hour, we cannot afford to delay. Delay is costly and could be damaging to now-healthy financial institutions—both thrifts and banks. Each day adds another $20 million to the sticker price. That's nearly $150 million per week and more than one-half billion dollars per month.

As the President has said, this is "emergency" legislation. It's clear we must move—and move now—to get on with the business of closing or merging the hundreds of insolvent S&L's across the country.

ORIGINS OF THE SAVINGS AND LOAN CRISIS

The 1980's have been a turbulent period for our Nation's depository institutions. Changes in the financial landscape resulting from rapid changes in the marketplace and deregulation have significantly altered the way that depository institutions operate. Some of these changes have been beneficial. Others, however, created new risks and helped produce a rash of failures in both the banking and thrift industries.

Two very different approaches have been taken by the financial regulators to deal with insolvent institutions. When banks failed, the cases were, for the most part, resolved promptly by closing the institutions or providing assistance under tightly supervised arrangements. In stark contrast, thrift regulators have generally resisted closing failed savings and loans, hoping against hope that the fortunes of the institutions would somehow turn around.

But there is no single culprit behind the thrift crisis, Mr. President. Its causes are many and complex. By most all accounts, however, the origins of the thrift crisis can be traced to four general factors that contributed substantially to the industry's decline. These factors include:

Inadequate supervision by regulators and forbearance by the regulators;

Major and prolonged downturns in regional economies, particularly in the Southwest and Rocky Mountain regions;

Imprudent industry responses to deregulation, especially the increased involvement of weak, undercapitalized thrifts in certain risky, nontraditional activities; and

Finally, fraud and insider abuse by thrift owners and management played a significant role in the rapid decline of the industry.

When all these factors were mixed together with Government-insured deposits, you had all the ingredients for a disaster of profound proportions—and, indeed, that is exactly what happened in the savings and loan industry.

THE MAGNITUDE OF THE PROBLEM

Mr. President, it has been nearly as difficult to determine the overall size and cost of the S&L mess as it was to isolate the chief causes of the thrift crisis.

The rescue of the thrift industry is the largest Government bailout in our history. The S&L financial problem is far bigger than the combined cost of the assistance provided to Lockheed, Chrysler, Penn Central, New York City, and for good measure, you can throw in the Marshall plan. In fact, the S&L debacle will probably cost every man, woman, and child in the United States between $1,000 and $1,500 each.

The General Accounting Office [GAO], based on its most recent analysis of the administration's original legislative proposal, believes it will cost $306 billion over the next 33 years to resolve the S&L crisis. About one-half or $149 billion would come from thrift insurance premiums, Federal home loan bank contributions, and the sale of assets from liquidated thrifts. The remaining $157 billion will be paid by Uncle Sam—which means you and me and all other taxpayers.

And that's the good news when it comes to the cost of the S&L rescue plan.

Many believe the S&L financing plan is based on optimistic economic assumptions. For example, under the administration's plan, interest rates fall from 8.6 percent in 1989 to 6.2 percent in 1991. We can all hope, but if interest rates exceed the administration's projections by 1 percent per year, the taxpayer contribution jumps by $12.2 billion.

So the bad news is that it is quite possible—some believe probable—that the price tag for the bailout will increase substantially.

MY APPROACH TO THE SAVINGS AND LOAN LEGISLATION

When the Senate Banking Committee began to examine the savings and loan crisis in detail several months ago, I developed a set of principles that guided my consideration of the issues and legislation.

First, it was imperative that Congress act quickly to resolve the thrift crisis and, at the same time, convey to consumers and savers that any money placed in a federally insured financial institution was safe and secure.

Second, any legislation that provides one dime of funding to rescue the S&L industry must also contain substantial—even radical—regulatory and industry reforms. It would have been folly to provide funding without also instituting regulatory reform as some in the thrift industry suggested. In this regard, I was also committed to minimizing the cost of the bailout to the Treasury. This meant making sure the S&L industry itself contributed as much as possible to the resolution costs and making sure the overall funding plan was the most economical.

Third, legislation to rescue ailing S&L's should not threaten the viability of financially sound institutions—in the thrift or banking industries—by asking them to bear the full burden for the less sound or insolvent. This is the primary reason I opposed merging the FDIC deposit insurance fund with the FSLIC fund.

Fourth, in recent years, I have become concerned with the extent of Federal Government interference in our economy through various assistance and guarantee programs. We cannot—and should not—make our economy completely risk free. The time has come to evaluate carefully how far we want our insurance programs to reach and at what cost. In a very real sense, in the S&L industry, we acted to "socialize" all the risk and "privatize" the profit. It is clear more private capital must be invested in the S&L industry.

Fifth, coming from a part of the country which is capital poor and economically depressed, I wanted to ensure that legislation helped attract capital and financial institutions to Colorado and the Rocky Mountain region.

Finally, I also wanted to make sure legislation did not permit real estate to be dumped in markets with weak economies. This would only drive real estate prices down even more, endangering the viability of other financial institutions.

KEY AREAS OF REFORM

I focused my efforts in a few key areas that I believed were crucial to make the necessary reforms in the S&L industry.

CAPITAL REQUIREMENTS

For years, thrift regulators required very little private capital to be invested in the S&L industry. And what capital requirements that did exist, were often waived by regulators. This was particularly true in the case of weak institutions.

If this industry is to recover and stand on its own again, it is imperative that Congress ensure that more private capital is invested in thrifts. There's nothing like putting your own money at risk to inject a little discipline and caution into investment and lending decisions.

The S&L legislation requires stronger capital requirements for S&L's, with bank standards providing the floor. Within 120 days of enactment, all thrifts must have tangible capital of at least 1.5 percent of assets—no good will, just real hard cash or its equivalent. Institutions that do not meet this minimum standard must file a business plan with the thrift regulator within 60 days. And by 1995, most institutions would be required to hold tangible capital equal to 3 percent of assets.

Importantly, the legislation also phases out supervisory "good will" over 5 years and includes growth restrictions to prevent undercapitalized thrifts from gambling with federally insured deposits in an effort to reach the new capital standards. Finally, the capital standards also include an interest rate risk component to protect thrifts and the insurance fund from wide fluctuations in interest rates, like those we saw in the late 1970's and early 1980's.

The importance of this last provision cannot be overstated but has received little attention. The nature of the thrift business—borrowing short-term money and lending at fixed long-term rates—has always meant that S&L's were vulnerable to changing interest rates. It just took rising inflation and wide interest rate swings to expose the problem. Now, for the first time, we are going to require thrifts to contain interest rate risk or provide capital to absorb the risk.

There is no question that the capital standards in FIRREA are a significant improvement over the status quo. Without strong capital standards the legislation would do little to prevent the problems in the thrift industry from happening again.

I know parts of the industry have fought strong capital requirements and accounting standards in the past. But I believe strong standards are the healthy thrifts best friend. Strong capital standards work to protect healthy institutions. Weak and undercapitalized thrifts, that are forced to gamble with risky investments, only undercut the viability of the industry and push up the cost of funds for all institutions.

ASSET DISPOSITION

The legislation calls for the creation of the Resolution Trust Corporation [RTC] to manage the sale and liquidation of weak and insolvent thrifts. The RTC, which will be managed by the FDIC, has a big, big job ahead of it.

The RTC will control and dispose of as much as $500 billion in assets during its short lifetime. This is larger than Citicorp. There is little question that the operation of the RTC and the disposal of assets could have a significant and lasting impact on local markets, particularly in economically distressed areas like Colorado and the Southwest.

As critical as the RTC is to resolving the S&L crisis, the President's original S&L proposal did not include many specifics about the RTC and did not contain any guidelines for the orderly disposition of assets. This was of deep concern to me.

Over a period of several weeks, I worked with members of the Senate Banking Committee, the White House, the Treasury Department, the FDIC, the Federal Reserve, FADA, and others to develop legislative language to govern the disposal of real property in economically distressed areas like Colorado. As you can probably imagine, looking at the disparate interests among these various groups, it was not easy to arrive at a solution we could all accept. But we did.

Nevertheless, I remain very concerned about the overall operation and administration of the RTC. It has the potential for fraud and scandal like we have seen at HUD and FHA. For whatever reason, the administration fought tighter controls and must now be held accountable for any mismanagement and influence-peddling that occurs.

FINANCING THE S&L RESCUE

Throughout the legislative process I supported an on-budget funding plan for the S&L legislation. When compared to the President's funding proposal, the on-budget plan reduced the taxpayer contribution by about $5 billion over 30 years.

The S&L Conference Committee initially rejected the President's funding plan for two simple reasons:

First, it is less expensive to put the cost of the S&L bailout on-budget—it would save the taxpayers about $5 billion in interest costs; and Second, on-budget funding is the most direct and honest manner in which to account for the cost of the plan. Other methods hide the true cost of the S&L bailout.

I continue to believe on-budget financing makes the most sense. But, importantly, whether it is on- or off-budget, the industry contribution remains the same. And the compromise—$20 billion on-budget and $30 billion off-budget—broke the impasse and cleared the way for final passage of the legislation. Further delay would only increase the costs for taxpayers and the economy.

FRAUD AND INSIDER ABUSE

We need to aggressively pursue those who fraudulently operated within the S&L industry and contributed substantially to the crisis.

The GAO studied 26 failed S&L's and found fraud and insider abuse involved in virtually every case. The Federal Home Loan Bank Board reported fraud in 70 percent of the cases it examined. We need to make sure that those individuals who engaged in criminal activity are prosecuted and forever prohibited from participating in the financial services industry.

The legislation includes a number of important provisions in this area. The bill gives the Justice Department $75 million annually for the next 3 years to investigate and prosecute fraud in thrifts and other financial institutions. It also extends the statute of limitations for prosecuting certain crimes from 5 to 10 years, raises fines from $5,000 to $1 million and increases jail terms from 5 to 20 years. Finally, the legislation grants the Justice Department new authority to seize illegal gains from those who have engaged in fraud.

These are necessary and appropriate reforms which I strongly supported.

OTHER REGULATORY REFORMS

There are a number of other important reforms and provisions in the legislation that are worth mentioning.

The Federal Home Loan Bank System will be split into three components. The new Office of Thrift Supervision will handle principal S&L regulation for both Federal and State thrifts. The Federal Housing Finance Board will provide cash advances to thrifts. And the thrift's new insurance fund, the Savings Association Insurance Fund, will be placed under the FDIC.

This new regulatory arrangement makes good sense. It eliminates inherent conflicts of interest by separating the deposit insurer from the body that grants thrift charters and removing the thrift examiners from the industry owned Federal home loan banks. We should never have allowed the old system to perpetuate itself.

The qualified thrift lender [QTL] test will require thrifts to have 55 percent of their assets in residential mortgage and construction loans, and 70 percent of assets in a broader basket that includes consumer and education loans.

Direct equity investments in real estate by thrifts would be prohibited, and thrifts that have investments in subsidiaries that are not permissible for a national bank must write them off over 5 years.

And the legislation includes a $50 to $100 million program to provide housing for low-income and moderate-income families to be funded with proceeds from the Federal home loan banks. Thrifts are also required to disclose community reinvestment ratings and reports.

CONCLUSION: THE FUTURE OF THE THRIFT INDUSTRY

The S&L legislation preserves a separate thrift industry which many have argued that we no longer need. We heard repeatedly throughout this process that the need for residential mortgage and construction financing is now being met by other financial institutions. And others have pointed to a general overcapacity in the financial services industry.

It is not at all clear what the future holds for the thrift industry under the new legal and regulatory regime. Only time will tell. But I think it is certain that the lines between the thrift and banking industries will continue to blur. As a result of the legislation, more and more thrifts may well convert to a bank charter.

But the reforms may well encourage other thrifts to return to the historical roots of the S&L industry—providing residential mortgages and financial services to their community. We may end up with a smaller thrift industry, but one that has found a viable and profitable niche in the market.

FIRREA represents the most comprehensive and sweeping restructuring of our financial laws in 50 years. Overall, it is a sound response to the deepening crisis in the S&L industry. But the legislation is far from perfect—it is no cure-all. Many of us who worked on the legislation have concerns about various aspects of the plan.

Mr. President, we cannot assume that our work is complete. It will take vigorous congressional oversight, conscientious regulatory supervision and the industry's full cooperation to implement the new law and make it work. We in Congress should begin the oversight process as soon as possible.●

THE ECONOMIC EQUITY ACT OF 1989

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the Economic Equity Act of 1989. As this bill is reintroduced, I am inspired to review the long history of this very important legislation. In 1981, Senators DURENBERGER, HATFIELD, and I, along with a number of our distinguished colleagues, first introduced the Economic Equity Act. Our goal was to eliminate economic discrimination against women. The bill was an ambitious proposal; an omnibus bill that addressed pension and tax reforms, child care, elimination of discrimination against women in the armed forces, insurance discrimination, and enforcement of alimony and child support laws. The bill was assembled with the advice and assistance of a variety of women's groups, including the League of Women Voters, National Federation of Business and Professional Women, National Women's Political Caucus, Older Women's League, the National Council of Jewish Women, the National Council of Negro Women, and several others.

Two things strike me as I think back to that time in 1981 when we first undertook to remedy economic inequities for women through the reform of Federal laws and regulations. The first and most troublesome thing is that we are unfortunately still fighting some of the same battles that we faced in 1981 and which have been reflected in the Economic Equity Act in every Congress since. Women presently earn only 64 cents to every dollar earned by a man. Households headed by women still represent a shockingly large proportion of those beneath the poverty level in this country.

The second thing that strikes me, as I reflect back on the history of the Economic Equity Act, and this is the heartening aspect, is that those women's groups and those of my distinguished colleagues on both sides of the aisle in the Senate and House who have supported this legislation consistently, with their hard work and very able advocacy of these issues, have exhibited a wonderful, steady persistence which has served our cause well.

In each session of Congress since the act was first introduced, we have scored victories by passing significant pieces of the package. We have made private pensions more equitable for women, made individual retirement accounts available to married women who do not work outside the home, improved access to pensions and medical care for former military spouses, amended the estate and gift tax so that women are not taxed on gifts or bequests from resources they own jointly with their husbands, and strengthened child support enforcement. As we have made gains in each of these important areas, the act has been revised to add new components so that we are continually moving toward the goal of equal economic rights for women. The Economic Equity Act is a dynamic piece of legislation, and one that is the product of some of the best thinking available from among women's organizations and Members of Congress about what measures will truly advance the cause of economic rights for women.

This year's package contains some excellent proposals. I am very pleased to be a cosponsor of S. 16, the Pay Equity Technical Assistance Act, which would provide a resource to employers to identify and work toward the elimination of wage disparities based on gender. This legislation would benefit not only working women and their families, but also the economy by improving the purchasing power of a great number of American households.

I am also a cosponsor of S. 764, which would increase title XX block grants to the States. Title XX is the major Federal source of support for essential social services, like child care for women in job training, which allow women to become economically self-sufficient.

Each of these bills is a small but important part of the effort. Just as each brick is necessary to a building, each gain we make is critical to our ultimate goal; the elimination of all economic discrimination against women.

Many times during the past years, as I have had the privilege of working toward women's rights, women across the country have expressed their appreciation to me. They have also confided their discouragement that achieving equality is such a long and laborious process. Many have worked very actively for a very long time, and are understandably weary of the struggle to achieve a status they should be able to take for granted.

I understand and sympathize with their concerns. However, I would remind them and myself that Rome was not built in a day. The bias in the law and society that has resulted in the feminization of poverty took more than a few years to build, and it will take more than a few years to correct. Our persistence is being rewarded. The Economic Equity Act has already accomplished a great deal. I believe we can look forward to more success this session.●

NOTICE OF DETERMINATION BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS UNDER RULE 35, PARAGRAPH 4, PERMITTING ACCEPTANCE OF A GIFT OF EDUCATIONAL TRAVEL FROM A FOREIGN ORGANIZATION

● Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD notices of Senate employees who participate in programs, the principal objective of which is educational, sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by that foreign government or organization.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. Andrew D. Eskin, a member of the staff of Senator BRYAN, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Tunghai University, from August 7-13, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Eskin in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Tunghai University, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Ms. Anne Caldwell, a member of the staff of Senator SHELBY, to participate in a program in the People's Republic of China, sponsored by the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs, from August 26-September 8, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Caldwell in the program in the People's Republic of China, at the expense of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. Michael Marek, a member of the staff of Congressman HAMILTON, to participate in a program in Turkey, sponsored by the Turkish Foreign Policy Institute, from August 4–11, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Marek in the program in Turkey, at the expense of the Turkish Foreign Policy Institute, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Donald Hardy, a member of the staff of Senator SIMPSON, to participate in a program in Turkey, sponsored by the Turkish Foreign Policy Institute, from August 4–13, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Hardy in the program in Turkey, at the expense of the Turkish Foreign Policy Institute, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Andrew G. Hyde, a member of the staff of Senator WARNER, to participate in a program in Hamburg and Berlin, sponsored by the Haus Rissen, International Institute for Politics and Economics, from August 13–23, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Hyde in the program in Hamburg and Berlin, at the expense of the Haus Rissen, International Instititute for Politics and Economics, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Ira Goldman, a member of the staff of Senator WILSON, to participate in a program in Korea, sponsored by the A-san Foundation, from August 6–13.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Goldman in the program in Korea, at the expense of the A-san Foundation, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Ms. Blythe Thomas, a member of the staff of Senator BOREN, to participate in a program in South Africa, sponsored by the South Africa Foundation, from August 13–23, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Thomas in the program in South Africa, at the expense of the South Africa Foundation, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.●

TENTATIVE SCHEDULE UPON RECONVENING

Mr. MITCHELL. For the information of all Senators, when the Senate resumes in September, that is, on September 6, it is my intention on that week, mindful of the fact that September 6 is a Wednesday, to present to the Senate for consideration, among other matters, the following: H.R. 3104, the legislative appropriations bill; S. 933, Americans With Disabilities Act of 1989; S. 543, Job Training Partnership Act Amendments; S. 1163, a bill to amend the D.C. Code to limit the length of time for which an individual may be incarcerated for civil contempt in a child custody case in a Superior Court of the District of Columbia; S. 663, a bill to provide for additional contingent termination liability for advanced solid rocket motor program.

On Monday, September 11, it is my intention to present to the Senate for consideration the nomination of Donald Gregg to be Ambassador to Korea. Thereafter, it is my intention that the Senate will consider legislation, including but not limited to, the reconciliation bill and all remaining appropriations bills.

It remains my hope and strong desire to complete action on all of the appropriations bills prior to the end of the fiscal year on September 30. I have previously provided this listing of legislation to be considered in September to the distinguished Republican leader and look forward to working with him and all other Senators on these matters when we return.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader. He has indicated that when the recess ends, we have a lot of work to do. Hopefully, the matters mentioned will be taken up the first week we are back and can be disposed of. There have been a lot of bipartisan efforts on the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1989, which seemed to be coming to the floor with a lot of divisiveness and difficulties, and I think most of the areas have been worked out with the cooperation of Republicans and Democrats and the administration. That will certainly shorten the time. There is also the Job Partnership Training Act. As the majority leader knows, there has been a lot of interest in S. 1163.

We have been visiting—the Republican leader and Democratic leader—throughout the day, and that will be disposed of. We will do what we can to work with the majority leader. I thank the majority leader for scheduling the nomination of Donald Gregg on Monday, September 11. I know that, hopefully, we can complete action on that in one day.

I thank the majority leader and look forward to working with him after the recess.

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1989

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns today it stands in adjournment under the provisions of Senate Concurrent Resolution 67 until 12 noon on Wednesday, September 6, 1989; that when the Senate reconvenes on September 6, the Journal of proceedings be deemed to have been approved to date, that the call of the calendar be waived, and that no motions or resolutions come over under the rule.

I further ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to extend beyond 1 p.m. on that day with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS SUBJECT TO THE CALL OF THE CHAIR

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if the distinguished Republican leader has no further business at this time, and if no other Senator is seeking recognition, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess subject to call of the Chair.

There being no objection, at 10:55 p.m. the Senate took a recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

The Senate reassembled at 12:36 a.m., when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. MITCHELL].

CHANGE IN THE ENGROSSMENT OF SENATE RESOLUTION 171

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In my capacity as a Senator from the State of Maine, I ask unanimous consent that the engrossment of Senate Resolution 171, International Conference of Global Warming resolution, be changed to reflect the correction I now send to the desk.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1989

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In my capacity as a Senator from the State of Maine, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment, under the previous provisions of Senate Concurrent Resolution 67, until 12 noon on Wednesday, September 6, 1989.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 12:37 a.m., adjourned until Wednesday, September 6, 1989, at 12 noon.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate August 4, 1989:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, August 4, 1989

The House met at 9 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

As we learn more and more of our world with a greater appreciation of the way of science and discovery, may we, O God, understand more clearly the values that mark our national life and which point the way to right or wrong and to attitudes of the human spirit. May not our energy directed to what must be done, cause us to miss the ideals and values which truly strengthen us as a people and give meaning to each new day. This we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentlewoman from Hawaii [Mrs. SAIKI] if she would kindly come forward and lead the membership in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mrs. SAIKI led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

30TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF NEW YORK WILL NOT FORGET TERRY ANDERSON

(Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, 4 years ago a constituent of mine was kidnaped on the streets of Beirut and taken hostage. He was there doing his job as a journalist for the Associated Press keeping us informed of events in that part of the world.

Since that time Terry Anderson has sat in a room chained to a wall while all of the events of these last 4 years have gone by unremarked and unreported by Terry Anderson. He has a 4-year-old daughter he has never seen. He does not know that both his father and his brother have died in his absence.

Terry must sit there in that room and wonder sometimes if his country has abandoned him and his friends forgotten him.

I want to remind my colleagues this morning that the people of the 30th Congressional District of New York and this Member of Congress will not forget.

TRIBUTE TO STEVEN C. JORDAN

(Mrs. SAIKI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SAIKI. Mr. Speaker, President Bush refers to the "thousand points of light" which will make this a "kinder and gentler Nation." Mr. Steven C. Jordan, a Hawaii resident, personifies the President's vision and sets an admirable example to all Americans through his selfless devotion to the community.

In 1986, Mr. Jordan came to Maui, HI, as a VISTA volunteer. He worked with the Hawaii State Committee on Family Violence, and for the Hawaii Foodbank. He volunteered his time to the homeless at the Holy Family Ecumenical Shelter where he conducted research hoping to establish a family shelter.

Mr. Jordan's research proved extremely valuable to the Hawaii Housing Authority which was conducting a study on the homeless. Mr. Jordan's data has made an impact on our response to the homeless in Hawaii.

Many of my colleagues will agree that America could be a stronger nation if more people reached out to help those less fortunate.

I applaud Mr. Jordan and those like him who devote their personal time to worthy causes.

"VISIONS" OF SPRINGFIELD SETS PLAN FOR FUTURE

(Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in the late 1970's a group of people in the city of Springfield, MA, came together to study the problems of the city and find solutions. They took the long view, planning a mix of projects that would make Springfield a vibrant city in many areas. This group of community, business, political, and cultural leaders adopted the name, Springfield Central. Today Springfield Central is a key player in the life of my home city. This unique group has, in a thoughtful and positive way, been an important voice in the rebirth of Springfield.

In 1976, when Springfield Central was formed, the future of downtown Springfield did not look bright. Years of industrial and commercial flight from downtown had left the area economically depressed. In 1978, Springfield Central and the city of Springfield published "It's Time for Springfield," an award-winning plan for downtown Springfield. This document was the catalyst for an explosion of development. The face of the city was transformed. The plan led to the investment of more than $360 million in Springfield. In addition to Springfield Central founders, David Starr, Charles Ryan, and James Martin, dozens of the city's most active citizens contributed to the early days of this organization and "It's Time for Springfield."

In addition to fostering the climate for private development, Springfield Central played a more direct role in several key projects; the Morgan Square Apartments, StageWest at Columbus Center, Monarch Place, Riverfront Park, the downtown Farmer's Market, the new Basketball Hall of Fame, Stearns Square and the addition of 1,200 new parking spaces. The executive committee and board of directors at Springfield Central also put together a unique $32 million mortgage pool that made additional development possible. Springfield Central has also backed several successful community events, including the Big Fourth Festival marking Independence Day.

Now, after more than a decade of growth, development, and renovation in Springfield, we have a followup to "It's Time for Springfield." It's called "Visions—The Downtown Plan." Springfield Central has joined with the city of Springfield and the Springfield Parking Authority to look down the road toward the year 2000. As the mayor of the city of Springfield from 1984 until early this year, I know the value of a development plan. "Visions" is a good plan. It looks at the city as a whole and then analyzes several important areas: retail development, office needs, culture and entertainment, housing, infrastructure and, of course, goals. This document examines the success of the 1978 plan and looks at areas that need further work. The recommendations in "Visions" for further improvements are solid and workable. It will take a great deal of effort and creative financing in this era of reduced government funding to make these visions a reality, but I have a great deal of faith in the group that has given so much to Springfield. I stand ready to do all I can to push these important projects along.

While it would not be possible to name everyone that has worked to bring "Visions" into focus, but here is a list of key contributors: Carlo Marchetti, Robert Atkinson, Kathryn Broman, George Ditomassi, Cornelius Harrington, Frederick Hurst, Philip Lamb, Steven Roberts, Rupprecht Scherff, David Starr, Brian Thompson, Gordon Oakes, Thomas Wheeler, William Clark, Judith Matt, John Benoit, Allan Andrews, David Moriarty, James O'Connell, and the Springfield Central Board of Directors must also be recognized for their contributions to "Visions."

Mr. Speaker, I have lived in Springfield all my life and have seen the city in both good and difficult times. Despite a State budget crisis, people continue to be optimistic about the future of Springfield. I salute the hard-working citizens who give their time to chart the course for Springfield. It is a difficult job and often a thankless job. Today it is my honor to recognize them for their "Visions."

PUT DRUG WAR JURISDICTION UNDER ONE SINGLE COMMITTEE

(Mr. SMITH of Mississippi asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on the 13th day of 28 days through the drug war maze.

Today it is our Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, 3 subcommittees under there that our drug czar has to report to, out of these 80 committees, subcommittees, select committees that have jurisdiction over our national drug strategy, the Subcommittee on Civil Service under the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, that takes care of drug use and drug testing of Federal employees, the Subcommittee on Human Resources, which looks at drug testing of U.S. personnel having access to classified material, and the Subcommittee on Postal Operations and Services, which covers the expansion of U.S. Postal Service authority to allow certain Postal Service employees to perform drug law enforcement functions.

If we keep this up, Mr. Speaker, we will never have a national drug strategy, and Bill Bennett could just as well spend his time circling the Capital Beltway.

I call on my colleagues on both sides of the aisle today to join me in supporting bills in the House and the Senate to put the drug war jurisdiction under one single committee.

COP KILLERS SHOULD BE EXECUTED

(Mr. TRAFFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, a D.C. policeman, Tony Smith, was gunned down yesterday. The gunman had warned Officer Smith not to reach for his gun. Officer Smith then notified the gunman that he was a policeman. The gunman opened fire.

Witnesses later said that the gunman was quoted as saying, "If you're a cop, you deserve to die." Let me say that again for Members: the gunman said, "If you're a cop, you deserve to die."

Mr. Speaker, there is a police officer being killed in America every 2½ days, and the average length of time a cop killer spends in jail is less than 6 years. The reason is quite clear, folks. One can kill cops in America and get away with it.

My bill H.R. 2102, would stop this. I believe cop killers should be executed, and Congress has to pass that law.

THE DRUG WAR MAZE

(Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Mr. PAXON of New York on his resolution of last week to create a House drug committee, and Mr. SMITH of Mississippi on his series of 1-minute speeches dramatizing the need for such a committee.

My colleagues may recall that last February I called for such a standing legislative committee on drugs to replace the existing select committee. At that time Chairman Pepper promised an early committee hearing and action on my proposal.

Since Senator Pepper's death I wrote to Chairman MOAKLEY on June 14 reminding him of Chairman Pepper's pledge and asking for a hearing. I hope he will honor that request.

The American people consider the drugs to be the most serious problem facing our Nation. And yet we have some 53 House committees and subcommittees with pieces of drug jurisdiction. What good is the drug czar we created if he is going to be nibbled to death by all these czardines? Mr. Speaker, the time has come to cut that bait. We need a strong central drug committee, and we need it now.

HEALTH CARE SPENDING PRIORITIES

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, our country spends billions of dollars on a system to protect our citizens that isn't working. This system encourages gold-plated, high-priced, high-tech purchases at the expense of basic, conventional needs. But I am not talking about stealth or defense—I am talking about our health care system, the medical-industrial complex.

In a recent article, former Governor, Richard Lamm of Colorado describes how skewed our health care expenditures are toward big-ticket items, at the expense of simple, basic needs.

For example, we spend hundreds of thousands of dollars on a single transplant operation, and neglect simple care for millions of pregnant women and infants who need it.

There are tough choices to be made about how we spend our health care money. I believe that our first goal should be to make sure that everyone in America—especially our children—gets the basic health care they need. If we can start there, we'll be making the best health care investment we can.

[From the New York Times, Aug. 2, 1989]

SAVING A FEW, SACRIFICING MANY—AT GREAT COST

(By Richard D. Lamm)

SAN FRANCISCO.—The ancient Greeks observed that "to know all to ask is to know half." The cost of our inefficient health care system cannot continue to grow at more than twice the rate of inflation. Heretical questions must be asked.

"What chance is there that she will leave this unit alive?" The group of doctors look annoyed at my question. We were clustered around the bed of a 91-year-old woman in the intensive care unit of a university hospital. She had been in intensive care for two weeks, kept alive by a web of tubes and hoses. The attending physician swallowed her personal resentment. "Very small, but every once in a while someone survives," she said. "Medicine must do everything possible as long as there is a chance."

America has approximately 87,000 intensive care beds, far more than any other country. An intensive care bed is the most expensive medical setting possible, usually staffed by one to one and one-half nurses per bed and surrounded by hundreds of thousands of dollars of high-technology equipment. They do save some people who would have been previously lost, but at a very high cost. They are thus symbolic of both out caring and our priorities.

Once people get into the health care system, we will spend fantastic amounts exploring a small chance of survival for them, yet 31 million Americans do not have basic health insurance and 30 percent of the kids in America have never seen a dentist. We have seemingly unlimited resources for patients in the system but painfully few for citizens outside the system. Our health care spending is reactive and reflexive rather than reflective.

Thirteen percent of our patients, many of them terminal, account for more than 50 percent of our hospital costs, yet Medicaid covers only 40 percent of the people living in poverty and a million American families have one or more members denied health care yearly. Almost 60 percent of Medicare's inpatient expenditures is spent on 12 percent of the recipients, too often marginal procedures.

In one corner of the hospital, we are squeezing a few more days of pain-racked existence out of people for whom there is clearly no happy outcome; yet 600,000 women gave birth last year with little or no prenatal care.

A hospital alarm goes off and the team rushes to resuscitate a man with prostate cancer. But an alarm has also gone off in our economy, and we ignore it at out peril.

We have among the lowest rates of investment in new plant and equipment in the industrialized world, yet there is a group of our brightest men and women using expensive Japanese machines and large amounts of our limited resources on frail bodies, many of whom everyone concedes will never leave this unit. On this day four of the 12 people in the unit have virtually no chance of leaving the hospital.

In practically every town in America, the best building is the hospital (40 percent empty) and the worst a school (usually overcrowded). The highest paid professionals are doctors; the lowest paid professionals are teachers. We are overtreating our sick and undereducating our kids. We spend more than other industrialized nations on health care, both in total dollars and percent of gross national product devoted to health care, yet we do not keep our citizens as healthy as they do.

The basic dilemma of American medicine is that we have invented more health care than we can afford to pay for, and yet we find it terribly hard to set priorities. We rush to rescue people in intensive care units today whom just yesterday we abandoned. We spend too much money on high-technology care for a few and too little on basic health care for the many.

There is a permanently unconscious woman in Washington, DC, maintained on an artificial life support system who became comatose and vegetative in 1953. We have spent millions keeping her heart beating in a city whose infant-mortality rate exceeds that of many third world countries.

Health care in America has become a fiscal black hole that can absorb unlimited resources. We have the finest technological means in the world, but all too few are asking, "To what end?" But another alarm sounds in the hospital's intensive care unit, and we must be off on our mission of "mercy."

(Richard D. Lamm, former Governor of Colorado, teaches at the San Francisco Medical School of the University of California.)

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION CALLING FOR DECISIVE ACTION AGAINST TERRORISM

(Mrs. LOWEY of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, we all welcome the news that Joseph Cicippio has been spared the reported fate of Lt. Col. William Higgins. But the tragic events of the past week demonstrate that a clear, strong policy against terrorism is urgently needed.

In 1986, then-Vice President Bush issued a report containing a series of recommendations on antiterrorism policy. Some of these recommendations have been implemented. Others have not. There has been no comprehensive review of antiterrorism policy since that time.

I am today introducing a resolution that calls on the President to take firm and decisive action against terrorism around the globe. We must aggressively pursue cooperation with our allies and the Soviet Union. We must update our antiterrorism policy and implement recommendations contained in the 1986 antiterrorism report. We must reestablish the fact that terrorism against America or American allies will have severe and unavoidable consequences for the perpetrators.

The lives of Americans are at stake. I hope that my colleagues will join me in cosponsoring this resolution, which calls for firm and decisive action to eliminate terrorism and bring terrorists to justice.

POINT OF CONTENTION ON THE S&L BILL

(Mr. APPLEGATE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, today we will be talking about the S&L bill. One of the points of contention is whether or not it ought to be on budget or off budget.

I want to tell my colleagues the administration wants it both ways. First they want it off budget, because the costs they say will increase the budget deficit, and that may be. But yet they refuse to support taking off transportation, Federal Aviation Authority and the Social Security trust fund because they say it will also increase the deficit because there are huge surpluses in those.

What we are doing is living off of a false economy, a false deficit. If we take the surplus off budget, we will show the true deficit in this country, which is probably closer to $250 billion.

But let us take transportation and FAA off and let us send that money back to the people who paid the bucks into it for improvements that they wanted.

The other point is on acid rain. They are asking everybody to bail out the S&L's. When the time comes, I want Members to remember that the acid rain bill is coming up and we want you to remember us, to help us to bail out the coal mines, to help bail out millions of ratepayers and tens of thousands of coal miners. We want the Nation to help to pay for acid rain.

What is fair is fair. Just remember us.

KIDNAPING BY THE CONTRAS

(Mr. MRAZEK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, last April I reluctantly supported the bipartisan accord on Central America, and I supported it because I thought it was the best chance for ending the brutality and the war in Nicaragua. I supported it in large part because of assurances that were given by Secretary Baker that no U.S. funds would go to any Contra units or individual combatants who engaged in military operations or human rights abuses.

But it is increasingly apparent, Mr. Speaker, that the Contras continue to launch attacks across the border, attacking defenseless villages, agricultural cooperatives, and they are kidnaping young men and women from their families in Nicaragua.

According to reliable information from on-the-scene observers, the Contras have frequently in the past and continue to this day to kidnap men, women and children to service their various needs. Many of these kidnap victims are now being held against their will in the Contra camps in Honduras. Several of them have already been identified and interviewed by American physicians.

Mr. Speaker, we created the Contras, and we kept them in the field for many years. We are in great measure responsible for their abuses. I implore my colleagues to take action to help liberate those who are suffering at the hands of the Contras as I speak.

I also ask my colleagues to remember these abuses when we review the so-called humanitarian aid package in November.

CONTRA KIDNAPINGS

(Mr. LEVINE of California, asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, the list of innocent victims of a systematic pattern of kidnaping and forced recruitment by the Nicaraguan Contras is tragic evidence of what appears to be a blatant disregard for human rights by the Contras. To cite but a few cases:

Santos Alaniz, 17, abducted on May 25, 1988.

Isidro Palacios, 18, taken in the same incident.

Maria Sobalvarro, 22, abducted 5 years ago.

Augusto Pineda, 17, kidnaped January 1989.

Maria Gonzales, 16, taken July 20, 1989.

These young Nicaraguans have lost their freedom. The men become soldiers. The women often provide rest and relaxation for idle Contras in Honduran base camps. Fathers and sons have been kidnaped, as well as women with infants.

It is time that we call the Contras to account for these abductions. Two American doctors, Tim Takaro and Susan Cookson, have carefully documented cases of kidnaping and forced recruitment in the area of Nicaragua where they recently concluded 3 years of humanitarian work to improve public-health services. It is their opinion, and all of us should concur, that these innocent victims of misguided Contra conscription policies should be allowed to travel from the Contra base camps to the office of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Danli, Honduras. There, impartial interviews would be given to determine the desire of the victims either to stay with the Contras or to return to their homes and families.

I call upon my colleagues to support this plan and to state to our State Department your belief that the Contras should be held accountable for these violations of basic human rights.

HOW CAN WE COME TOGETHER AGAINST COMMUNISM IN CENTRAL AMERICA?

(Mr. DORNAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, we are all acquaintances in this Chamber. Sometimes Members of different ideologies refer to one another as colleagues, but they are also friends.

The last two speakers, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK] are not just my colleagues, they are my friends. They are decent men. I like to think I am a decent man.

How can we come to such opposite conclusions about what is happening in Central America? How can our sincere, dedicated efforts at investigation come to such opposite conclusions?

The cancer, the real cancer of violence in Central America are the nine Communist thugs who control the government and abuse and oppress the people in Nicaragua. If there is any truth to the human rights violations that my colleagues and friends, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK] have brought out, I will go down there with them.

□ 0920

It will be my 17th trip. I will investigate it. But 6,000, 7,000 people are still in prison in the Communist gulags in Nicaragua. I will read their reports; I beg them to read Americas Watch Report, a decent organization with a left-of-center orientation. They say that the Sandinista Communists are murdering in cold blood farmers in the northern part of the country to prevent the Contras from swimming in the Sea of the People.

What are we going to do about this hellish situation in Nicaragua? We agree on Afghanistan, we agree on the Middle East. I do not understand what is the ideological or mental block in this House—maybe I am guilty of it also—that we cannot get together on freedom against communism in Central America.

U.S. PROPERTY SHOULD NOT BE SOLD TO SATISFY BANKRUPTCY DEBTS

(Mr. BOSCO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House leadership refused to allow me to introduce an amendment to the transportation bill. This amendment would have stopped one of the many abuses perpetrated on the American people by Eastern Airlines and its owner, Frank Lorenzo.

Presently Eastern has the privilege of operating a number of international routes. This privilege is granted free of charge by the U.S. Government, which owns these routes and acquires them by bilateral agreement with other countries.

They are given to airline operators based on their ability to operate the routes and their financial ability in general.

Eastern Airlines intends to sell its international routes as a way to raise cash to pay off its creditors in bankruptcy. Some analysts believe these routes may sell for over $300 million.

Mr. Speaker, property owned by the people of the United States should not be sold to raise cash to satisfy bankruptcy debts.

Mr. Speaker, I call on the Secretary of Transportation to disallow this abuse and will introduce separate legislation to insure that these routes are awarded only to those who intend to fly them.

CLEARLY DANIEL ORTEGA WANTS TO DEMOBILIZE THE CONTRAS BEFORE DEMOCRATIZATION

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I am very, very saddened to see what is happening in this House.

Tomorrow begins a very important meeting, Presidents Cerezo, Azcona, Arias, Cristiani, and Daniel Ortega are going to be meeting in Honduras. What is the goal of Daniel Ortega? To obliterate the democratic resistance in Nicaragua.

Mr. Speaker, we put together earlier this year a very important partisan package designed to bring about on February 25 of next year for the first time ever a free and fair election in Nicaragua.

I have reported from this well that that election is not taking place, unfortunately, because I was nearly arrested last Sunday when I was simply trying to observe a political rally.

Now we have our colleagues on the other side of the aisle trying to talk about human rights violations being perpetrated by the Contras. They are simply playing into the hands of Daniel Ortega, who clearly wants to demobilize the Contras before democratization takes place.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOAKLEY). The Chair announces that he will take two more 1-minutes on each side and then go to regular business because of the urgency of the situation.

SUPPORT DEBT FOR DEVELOPMENT WITH MEXICO

(Mr. BATES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives words of encouragement have resulted in a reduction of Mexico's debt burden to commercial banks. We must now demonstrate our own commitment to a resolution of the debt crisis through actions to restructure Mexico's public debt to the United States Government.

We have the ability to restructure it to promote development and environmental preservation in an area of tremendous concern to Americans: The United States-Mexico border. In recent years, significant population increases and flows of immigrants have hindered the ability of public services and facilities in border regions to provide needed and effective assistance to communities.

In light of this situation, I am introducing the United States-Mexico Debt Exchange and Border Development Act of 1989. This legislation authorizes debt-for-development swaps, which would permit Mexican repayments due on United States loans to be redirected to development activities in the vicinity of the United States-Mexico border.

This debt swap mechanism will enable us to assist in relieving the Mexican debt burden while improving conditions in border regions. These improvements could be targeted toward environmental improvements, public health needs, community development projects, and other necessary programs. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

GILLMOR BUDGET RESOLUTION

(Mr. GILLMOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, by voting to increase America's debt ceiling this week, we have once again asked our children and grandchildren for another loan. And someday when future generations are paying for our fiscal misconduct, they will wonder why we did not have the backbone to spend only the revenues we had.

Mr. Speaker, in my 22 years as a State legislator in Ohio, the budget was in balance year after year. So I am introducing a joint resolution that would give Congress the budget balancing tools that have worked effectively in Ohio and other States—a line item veto authority and balanced budget amendment. These tools, when used together, help to balance budgets when the political will to do so does not exist.

In addition to the 20th anniversary of the Apollo Moon Mission, 1989 also marks the 20th anniversary of the last time the United States had a balanced budget. With this amendment, we can have a balanced budget.

BLACK RIBBON, HITLER-STALIN PACT DENUNCIATION DAY

(Mr. SCHEUER, asked and was given permission to address the House and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, on August 23, 1989, while the Congress is in recess, millions of Latvians, Lithuanians, and Estonians, in their countries and around the world, will observe Black Ribbon, Hitler-Stalin Pact Denunciation Day.

I want to take this opportunity to express my support for the cause of freedom and self-determination in the Baltic States.

The Baltic States and the Soviet Union are clearly at a turning point. After decades of covering up their failures, finally officials, journalists, historians, and ordinary citizens now publicly discuss most crucial issues.

Stalin's continuing impact on Soviet history—both in the Soviet Union and the Baltic States today—is a long-suppressed problem. Now this issue is coming under official and public examination.

Stalin's legacy is preserved in secret and illegal treaties which he arranged with Hitler. I have in mind the secret protocols to the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact which cosigned the three Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania to the Soviet sphere in 1939. This notorious pact serves as the basis for the illegal Soviet occupation of the Baltic States.

The United States Government has never recognized this illegal Soviet occupation, as reflected in the official United States policy which refuses to recognize the incorporation of the Baltic States into the Soviet Union.

Many thousands of people in Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania—at risk to themselves—have publicly protested these illegal secret protocols to the Hitler-Stalin Pact. Last summer, hundreds of thousands of Balts protested official Soviet denials that these secret protocols even exist.

We should all express our support for the Baltic peoples in their continuing struggle for self-determination. Although the Soviet Government has recently made a few tentative steps toward recognizing the Hitler-Stalin Pact secret protocols, it is time for the Soviet Government to declare the 1939 Hitler-Stalin Pact null and void.

I hope my colleagues will join me in expressing support for Baltic self-determination and for the United States nonrecognition policy. It is important for all of us to declare our solidarity with Baltic-Americans and with the peoples of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, at this crucial time in their history.

THE CONGRESSIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS CAUCUS HONORS A WANTED MAN

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, this week, the congressional human rights caucus honored a wanted man.

According to the repressive Government of China, the leader of the Tiananmen students who met with Premier Li Peng, Wuer Kaixi, is now second on a list of the 21 most wanted men in Communist China.

Unlike so many of Wuer Kaixi's colleagues who were killed June 4 or executed in the weeks that followed, he escaped from China to found a movement in exile to help lead China toward democracy.

I was proud to cochair our briefing by a hero like Wuer Kaixi in the greatest temple of democracy on Earth—the U.S. Congress. I know I speak for all the members of the caucus who joined with this brave 21-year-old freedom fighter when he pledged that "one day we will raise another goddess of democracy in Tiananmen Square."

UNITED STATES TO HOLD IRAN RESPONSIBLE FOR FUTURE OF AMERICAN HOSTAGES

(Mr. SCHEUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore, without objection, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SCHEUER) is recognized for 1 minute.)

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, the death threat against Joseph J. Cicippio, thank God, has been lifted.

Yet, eight American hostages remain in captivity, two American hostages have been killed, and six hostages of other nationalities have been murdered.

Our policy of "do nothing" has clearly not worked.

I commend Secretary of State Baker for welcoming Mr. Rafsanjani into office with a clear warning: The United States will hold Iran responsible for the future of the American hostages.

At long last we have arrived at a policy of holding Iran accountable for the terrorism which it sponsors.

Iran created and nurtured the Hezbollah movement. It now must be held accountable for dismantling it.

Mr. Rafsanjani has indicated that Iran is interested in improving relations with the West.

As a necessary precondition Iran must assume responsibilities commensurate with a civilized nation and free the remaining hostages in Lebanon.

DISASTER ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1989

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2467) entitled the "1988 Disaster Assistance Extension Act", with a House amendment to the Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the House amendment to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the House amendment to the Senate amendment, as follows:

House amendment to Senate amendment:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Disaster Assistance Act of 1989".

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.

TITLE I—EMERGENCY CROP LOSS ASSISTANCE

SUBTITLE A—ANNUAL CROPS

Sec. 101. Payments to program participants for target price commodities.
Sec. 102. Payments to program nonparticipants for target price commodities.
Sec. 103. Peanuts, sugar, and tobacco.
Sec. 104. Soybeans and nonprogram crops.
Sec. 105. Crop quality reduction disaster payments.
Sec. 106. Effect of Federal crop insurance payments.
Sec. 107. Crop insurance coverage for the 1990 crops.
Sec. 108. Crops harvested for forage uses.
Sec. 109. Payment limitations.
Sec. 110. No double payments on replanted acreage.
Sec. 111. Substitution of crop insurance program yields.
Sec. 112. Definitions.

SUBTITLE B—ORCHARDS

Sec. 121. Eligibility.
Sec. 122. Assistance.
Sec. 123. Limitation on assistance.
Sec. 124. Definition.
Sec. 125. Duplicative payments.
Sec. 126. Sense of Congress on crop insurance for orchard crops.

SUBTITLE C—FOREST CROPS

Sec. 131. Eligibility.
Sec. 132. Assistance.
Sec. 133. Limitation on assistance.
Sec. 134. Definition.
Sec. 135. Duplicative payments.

SUBTITLE D—ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE

Sec. 141. New conservation measures.
Sec. 142. Assistance for ponds.

SUBTITLE E—ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

Sec. 151. Ineligibility.
Sec. 152. Timing and manner of assistance.
Sec. 153. Commodity Credit Corporation.
Sec. 154. Limitation on outlays.
Sec. 155. Storage cost adjustment.
Sec. 156. Regulations.

TITLE II—EMERGENCY LIVESTOCK ASSISTANCE

Sec. 201. Use of stored grain for assistance.
Sec. 202. Livestock transportation assistance.
Sec. 203. Livestock water development projects.
Sec. 204. Animal unit methodology study and report.

TITLE III—DISASTER CREDIT AND FORBEARANCE

Sec. 301. Emergency loans.
Sec. 302. 1990 farm operating loans.
Sec. 303. FmHA loans made to Indian tribes.

TITLE IV—RURAL BUSINESSES

Sec. 401. Disaster assistance for rural business enterprises.

TITLE V—WATER-RELATED ASSISTANCE

Sec. 501. Emergency community water assistance grant program.
Sec. 502. Livestock water assistance.
Sec. 503. Disaster assistance for watershed protection activities.

TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Sec. 601. Shrinkage allowance for peanuts.
Sec. 602. Advanced deficiency repayment deadline for 1988 crops.
Sec. 603. Planting of alternate crops on permitted acreage.
Sec. 604. Crop insurance yield coverage.

TITLE I—EMERGENCY CROP LOSS ASSISTANCE

Subtitle A—Annual Crops

SEC. 101. PAYMENTS TO PROGRAM PARTICIPANTS FOR TARGET PRICE COMMODITIES.

(a) DISASTER PAYMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Effective only for producers on a farm who elected to participate in the production adjustment program established under the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.) for the 1989 crop of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, extra long staple cotton, or rice, except as otherwise provided in this subsection, if the Secretary of Agriculture determines that, because of damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989, the total quantity of the 1989 crop of the commodity that such producers are able to harvest on the farm is less than the result of multiplying 60 percent (or, in the case of producers who obtained crop insurance for the 1989 crop of the commodity under the Federal Crop Insurance Act (7 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.), 65 percent) of the farm program payment yield established by the Secretary for such crop by the sum of the acreage planted for harvest and the acreage prevented from being planted (because of a natural disaster, as determined by the Secretary) for such crop, the Secretary shall make a disaster payment available to such producers at a rate equal to 65 percent of the established price for the crop for any deficiency in production greater than 40 percent (or, in the case of producers who obtained crop insurance for the 1989 crop of the commodity under the Federal Crop Insurance Act, 35 percent) for the crop.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—

(A) ACREAGE IN EXCESS OF PERMITTED ACREAGE.—Payments provided under paragraph (1) for a crop of a commodity may not be made available to producers on a farm with respect to any acreage in excess of the permitted acreage for the farm for the commodity.

(B) CROP INSURANCE.—Payments provided under paragraph (1) for a crop of a commodity may not be made available to producers on a farm unless such producers enter into an agreement to obtain multiperil crop insurance, to the extent required under section 107.

(3) REDUCTION IN DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS.—The total quantity of a crop of a commodity on which deficiency payments otherwise would be payable to producers on a farm under the Agricultural Act of 1949 shall be reduced by the quantity on which a payment is made to the producers for the crop under paragraph (1).

(4) ELECTION OF PAYMENTS.—

(A) APPLICATION OF PARAGRAPH.—This paragraph shall apply, effective only for the 1989 crops of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice, to producers on a farm who—

(i)(I) had failed wheat, feed grain, upland cotton, or rice acreage; or

(II) were prevented from planting acreage to such commodity because of damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989; and

(ii) elected to devote all or a portion of such acreage to conservation or other uses in accordance with section 107D(c)(1)(C), 105C(c)(1)(B), 103A(c)(1)(B), or 101A(c)(1)(B) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445b-3(c)(1)(C), 1444e(c)(1)(B), 1444-1(c)(1)(B), or 1441-1(c)(1)(B)).

(B) ELECTION.—The Secretary shall (within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act) permit producers referred to in subparagraph (A) to elect whether to receive disaster payments in accordance with this section in lieu of payments under the sections referred to in subparagraph (A)(ii).

(b) ADVANCE DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS.—

(1) APPLICATION OF SUBSECTION.—This subsection shall apply only to producers on a farm who elected to participate in the production adjustment program established under the Agricultural Act of 1949 for the 1989 crop of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, or rice.

(2) FORGIVENESS OF REFUND REQUIREMENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), if because of damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989 the total quantity of the 1989 crop of the commodity that the producers are able to harvest on the farm is less than the result of multiplying the farm program payment yield established by the Secretary for such crop by the sum of the acreage planted for harvest and the acreage prevented from being planted (because of a natural disaster, as determined by the Secretary) for such crop (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "qualifying amount"), the producers shall not be required to refund any advance deficiency payment made to the producers for such crop under section 107C of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445b-2) with respect to that portion of the deficiency in production that does not exceed—

(i) in the case of producers who obtained crop insurance for the 1989 crop of the commodity under the Federal Crop Insurance Act, 35 percent of the qualifying amount; and

(ii) in the case of other producers, 40 percent of the qualifying amount.

(B) CROP INSURANCE.—Producers on a farm shall not be eligible for the forgiveness provided for under subparagraph (A), unless such producers enter into an agreement to obtain multiperil crop insurance, to the extent required under section 107.

(3) ELECTION FOR NONRECIPIENTS.—The Secretary shall allow producers on a farm who elected, prior to the date of enactment of this Act, not to receive advance deficiency payments made available for the 1989 crop under section 107C of the Agricultural Act of 1949, to elect (within 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act) whether to receive such advance deficiency payments.

(4) DATE OF REFUND FOR PAYMENTS.—Effective only for the 1989 crops of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice, if the Secretary determines that any portion of the advance deficiency payment made to producers for the crop under section 107C of the Agricultural Act of 1949 must be refunded, such refund shall not be required prior to July 31, 1990, for that portion of the crop for which a disaster payment is made under subsection (a).

SEC. 102. PAYMENTS TO PROGRAM NONPARTICIPANTS FOR TARGET PRICE COMMODITIES.

(a) DISASTER PAYMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Effective only for producers on a farm who elected not to participate in the production adjustment program established under the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.) for the 1989 crop of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, extra long staple cotton, or rice, if the Secretary of Agriculture determines that because of damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989, the total quantity of the 1989 crop of the commodity that such producers are able to harvest on the farm is less than the result of multiplying 50 percent of the county average yield established by the Secretary for such crop by the sum of acreage planted for harvest and the acreage for which prevented planted credit is approved by the Secretary for such crop under subsection (b), the Secretary shall make a disaster payment available to such producers.

(2) PAYMENT RATE.—The payment shall be made to the producers at a rate equal to 65 percent of the basic county loan rate (or a comparable price if there is no current basic county loan rate) for the crop, as determined by the Secretary, for any deficiency in production greater than 50 percent for the crop.

(b) PREVENTED PLANTING CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide prevented planting credit under subsection (a) with respect to acreage that producers on a farm were prevented from planting to the 1989 crop of the commodity for harvest because of damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989, as determined by the Secretary.

(2) MAXIMUM ACREAGE.—Such acreage may not exceed the greater of—

(A) a quantity equal to the acreage on the farm planted (or prevented from being planted due to a natural disaster or other condition beyond the control of the producers) to the commodity for harvest in 1988 minus acreage actually planted to the commodity for harvest in 1989; or

(B) a quantity equal to the average of the acreage on the farm planted (or prevented from being planted due to a natural disaster or other condition beyond the control of the producers) to the commodity for harvest in 1986, 1987, and 1988 minus acreage actually planted to the commodity for harvest in 1989.

(3) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary shall make appropriate adjustments in applying the limitations contained in paragraph (2) to take into account crop rotation practices of the producers.

(c) LIMITATIONS.—

(1) ACREAGE LIMITATION PROGRAM.—The amount of payments made available to producers on a farm for a crop of a commodity under subsection (a) shall be reduced by a factor equivalent to the acreage limitation program percentage established for such crop under the Agricultural Act of 1949.

(2) CROP INSURANCE.—Payments provided under subsection (a) for a crop of a commodity may not be made available to the producers on a farm unless such producers enter into an agreement to obtain multiperil crop insurance, to the extent required under section 107.

SEC. 103. PEANUTS, SUGAR, AND TOBACCO.

(a) DISASTER PAYMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Effective only for the 1989 crops of peanuts, sugar beets, sugarcane, and tobacco, if the Secretary of Agriculture determines that, because of damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989, the total quantity of the 1989 crop of the commodity that the producers on a farm are able to harvest is less than the result of multiplying 60 percent (or, in the case of producers who obtained crop insurance for the 1989 crop of the commodity under the Federal Crop Insurance Act (7 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.), 65 percent) of the county average yield (or program yield, in the case of peanuts) established by the Secretary for such crop by the sum of the acreage planted for harvest and the acreage for which prevented planted credit is approved by the Secretary for such crop under subsection (b), the Secretary shall make a disaster payment available to such producers.

(2) PAYMENT RATE.—The payment shall be made to the producers at a rate equal to 65 percent of the applicable payment level under paragraph (3), as determined by the Secretary, for any deficiency in production greater than—

(A) in the case of producers who obtained crop insurance for the 1989 crop of the commodity under the Federal Crop Insurance Act—

(i) 35 percent for the crop; or

(ii) with respect to a crop of burley tobacco or flue-cured tobacco, 35 percent of the farm's effective marketing quota for 1989; and

(B) in the case of producers who did not obtain crop insurance for the 1989 crop of the commodity under the Federal Crop Insurance Act—

(i) 40 percent for the crop; or

(ii) with respect to a crop of burley tobacco or flue-cured tobacco, 40 percent of the farm's effective marketing quota for 1989.

(3) PAYMENT LEVEL.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the payment level for a commodity shall be equal to—

(A) for peanuts, the price support level for quota peanuts or the price support level for additional peanuts, as applicable;

(B) for tobacco, the national average loan rate for the type of tobacco involved, or (if there is none) the market price, as determined under section 104(a)(2); and

(C) for sugar beets and sugarcane, a level determined by the Secretary to be fair and reasonable in relation to the level of price support established for the 1989 crops of sugar beets and sugarcane, and that, insofar as is practicable, shall reflect no less return to the producer than under the 1989 price support levels.

(b) PREVENTED PLANTING CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide prevented planting credit under subsection (a) with respect to acreage that producers on a farm were prevented from planting to the 1989 crop of the commodity for harvest because of damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989, as determined by the Secretary.

(2) MAXIMUM ACREAGE.—Such acreage may not exceed the greater of—

(A) a quantity equal to the acreage on the farm planted (or prevented from being planted due to a natural disaster or other condition beyond the control of the producers) to the commodity for harvest in 1988 minus acreage actually planted to harvest in 1989; or

(B) a quantity equal to the average of the acreage on the farm planted (or prevented from being planted due to a natural disaster or other condition beyond the control of the producers) to the commodity for harvest in 1986, 1987, and 1988 minus acreage actually planted to the commodity for harvest in 1989.

(3) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary shall make appropriate adjustments in applying the limitations contained in paragraph (2) to take into account crop rotation practices of the producers and any change in quotas for the 1989 crops of tobacco.

(c) LIMITATION.—Payments provided under subsection (a) for a crop of a commodity may not be made available to the producers on a farm unless such producers enter into an agreement to obtain multiperil crop insurance, to the extent required under section 107.

(d) SPECIAL RULES FOR PEANUTS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

(1) a deficiency in production of quota peanuts from a farm, as otherwise determined under this section, shall be reduced by the quantity of peanut poundage quota that was the basis of such anticipated production that has been transferred from the farm;

(2) payments made under this section shall be made taking into account whether the deficiency for which the deficiency in production is claimed was a deficiency in production of quota or additional peanuts and the payment rate shall be established accordingly; and

(3) the quantity of undermarketings of quota peanuts from a farm for the 1989 crop that may otherwise be claimed under section 358 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C. 1358) for purposes of future quota increases shall be reduced by the quantity of the deficiency of production of such peanuts for which payment has been received under this section.

(e) SPECIAL RULES FOR TOBACCO.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

(1) the quantity of undermarketings of quota tobacco from a farm for the 1989 crop that may otherwise be claimed under section 317 or 319 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C. 1314c or 1314e) for purposes of future quota increases shall be reduced by the quantity of the deficiency of production of such tobacco for which payment has been received under this section; and

(2) disaster payments made to producers under this section may not be considered by the Secretary in determining the net losses of the Commodity Credit Corporation under section 106A(d) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1445-1(d)).

SEC. 104. SOYBEANS AND NONPROGRAM CROPS.

(a) DISASTER PAYMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—

(A) ELIGIBILITY.—Effective only for the 1989 crops of soybeans and nonprogram crops, if the Secretary of Agriculture determines that, because of damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989, the total quantity of the 1989 crop of the commodity that the producers on a farm are able to harvest is less than—

(i) with respect to soybeans and sunflowers, the result of multiplying 55 percent of the State, area, or county yield, adjusted for adverse weather conditions during the 1986, 1987, and 1988 crop years, as determined by the Secretary, for such crop by the sum of the acreage planted for harvest and the acreage for which prevented planting credit is approved by the Secretary for such crop under subsection (b);

(ii) with respect to nonprogram crops (other than as provided in clauses (i) and (iii)), the result of multiplying 50 percent of the yield established by the Commodity Credit Corporation under subsection (d)(2) for such crop by the sum of the acreage planted for harvest and the acreage for which prevented planting credit is approved by the Secretary for such crop under subsection (b); and the Secretary shall make a disaster payment available to such producers.

(iii) with respect to crops covered in section 201(b) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446(b)), 50 percent of the historical annual yield of the producers for such crops, as determined by the Secretary,

(B) PAYMENT RATE.—The payment shall be made to such producers at a rate equal to 65 percent of the applicable payment level under paragraph (2), as determined by the Secretary, for any deficiency in production greater than 45 percent for soybeans and sunflowers (50 percent for other nonprogram crops) for the crop.

(2) PAYMENT LEVEL.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the payment level for a commodity shall equal the simple average price received by producers of the commodity, as determined by the Secretary subject to paragraph (3), during the marketing years for the immediately preceding 5 crops of the commodity, excluding the year in which the average price was the highest and the year in which the average price was the lowest in such period.

(3) CALCULATION OF PAYMENTS FOR DIFFERENT VARIETIES.—

(A) CROP-BY-CROP BASIS.—The Secretary shall make disaster payments under this subsection on a crop-by-crop basis, with consideration given to markets and uses of the crops, under regulations issued by the Secretary.

(B) DIFFERENT VARIETIES.—For purposes of determining the payment levels on a crop by crop basis, the Secretary shall consider as separate crops, and develop separate payment levels insofar as is practicable for, different varieties of the same commodity, and commodities for which there is a significant difference in the economic value in the market.

(4) EXCLUSIONS FROM HARVESTED QUANTITIES.—For purposes of determining the total quantity of the 1989 nonprogram crop of the commodity that the producers on a farm are able to harvest under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall exclude at least 70 percent of—

(A) commodities that cannot be sold in normal commercial channels of trade; and

(B) dockage, including husks and shells, if such dockage is excluded in determining yields under subsection (d)(2).

(b) PREVENTED PLANTING CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide prevented planting credit under subsection (a) with respect to acreage that producers on a farm were prevented from planting to the 1989 crop of the commodity for harvest because of damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989, as determined by the Secretary.

(2) MAXIMUM ACREAGE.—Such acreage may not exceed the greater of—

(A) a quantity equal to the acreage on the farm planted (or prevented from being planted due to a natural disaster or other condition beyond the control of the producers) to the commodity for harvest in 1988 minus acreage actually planted for harvest in 1989; or

(B) a quantity equal to the average of the acreage on the farm planted (or prevented from being planted due to a natural disaster or other condition beyond the control of the producers) to the commodity for harvest in 1986, 1987, and 1988 minus acreage actually planted to the commodity for harvest in 1989.

(3) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary shall make appropriate adjustments in applying the limitations contained in paragraph (2) to take into account crop rotation practices of the producers.

(c) LIMITATION.—Payments provided under subsection (a) for a crop of a commodity may not be made available to the producers on a farm unless such producers enter into an agreement to obtain multiperil crop insurance, to the extent required under section 107.

(d) SPECIAL RULES FOR NONPROGRAM CROPS.—

(1) DEFINITION OF NONPROGRAM CROP.—As used in this section, the term "nonprogram crop" means all crops for which crop insurance through the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation was available for crop year 1989, and other commercial crops (including sweet potatoes) for which such insurance was not available for crop year 1989, except that such term shall not include a crop covered under section 101, 102, or 103, soybeans, or sunflowers.

(2) FARM YIELDS.—

(A) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Commodity Credit Corporation shall establish disaster program farm yields for nonprogram crops to carry out this section.

(B) PROVEN YIELDS AVAILABLE.—If the producers on a farm can provide satisfactory evidence to the Commodity Credit Corporation of actual crop yields on the farm for at least 1 of the immediately preceding 3 crop years, the yield for the farm shall be based on such proven yields.

(C) PROVEN YIELDS NOT AVAILABLE.—If such data do not exist for any of the 3 preceding crop years, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall establish a yield for the farm by using a county average yield for the commodity, or by using other data available to it.

(D) COUNTY AVERAGE YIELDS.—In establishing county average yields for nonprogram crops, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall use the best available information concerning yields. Such information may include extension service records, credible nongovernmental studies, and yields in similar counties.

(3) RESPONSIBILITY OF PRODUCERS.—It shall be the responsibility of the producers of nonprogram crops to provide satisfactory evidence of 1989 crop losses resulting from damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989 in order for such producers to obtain disaster payments under this section.

SEC. 105. CROP QUALITY REDUCTION DISASTER PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—To ensure that all producers of 1989 crops covered under sections 101 through 104 are treated equitably, the Secretary of Agriculture may make additional disaster payments to producers of such crops who suffer losses resulting from the reduced quality of such crops caused by damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989, as determined by the Secretary.

(b) ELIGIBLE PRODUCERS.—If the Secretary determines to make crop quality disaster payments available to producers under subsection (a), producers on a farm of a crop described in subsection (a) shall be eligible to receive reduced quality disaster payments only if such producers incur a deficiency in production of not less than 45 percent and not more than 75 percent for such crop (as determined under section 101, 102, 103, or 104, as appropriate).

(c) MAXIMUM PAYMENT RATE.—The Secretary shall establish the reduced quality disaster payment rate, except that such rate shall not exceed 10 percent, as determined by the Secretary, of—

(1) the established price for the crop, for commodities covered under section 101;

(2) the basic county loan rate for the crop (or a comparable price if there is no current basic county loan rate), for commodities covered under section 102;

(3) the payment level under section 103(a)(3), for commodities covered by section 103; and

(4) the payment level under section 104(a)(2), for commodities covered under section 104.

(d) DETERMINATION OF PAYMENT.—The amount of payment to a producer under this section shall be determined by multiplying the payment rate established under subsection (c) by the portion of the actual harvested crop on the producer's farm that is reduced in quality by such natural disaster in 1988 or 1989, as determined by the Secretary.

SEC. 106. EFFECT OF FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE PAYMENTS.

In the case of producers on a farm who obtained crop insurance for the 1989 crop of a commodity under the Federal Crop Insurance Act (7 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.), the Secretary of Agriculture shall reduce the amount of payments made available under this subtitle for such crop to the extent that the amount determined by adding the net amount of crop insurance indemnity payment (gross indemnity less premium paid) received by such producers for the deficiency in the production of the crop and the disaster payment determined in accordance with this subtitle for such crop exceeds the amount determined by multiplying—

(1) 100 percent of the yield used for the calculation of disaster payments made under this subtitle for such crop; by

(2) the sum of the acreage of such crop planted to harvest and the acreage for which prevented planting credit is approved by the Secretary (or, in the case of disaster payments under section 101, the eligible acreage established under sections 101(a)(1) and 101(a)(2)(A)); by

(3)(A) in the case of producers who participated in a production adjustment program for the 1989 crop of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, extra long staple cotton, or rice, the established price for the 1989 crop of the commodity;

(B) in the case of producers who did not participate in a production adjustment program for the 1989 crop of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, extra long staple cotton, or rice, the basic county loan rate (or a comparable price, as determined by the Secretary, if there is no current basic county loan rate) for the 1989 crop of the commodity;

(C) in the case of producers of sugar beets, sugarcane, peanuts, or tobacco, the payment level for the commodity established under section 103(a)(3); and

(D) in the case of producers of soybeans or a nonprogram crop (as defined in section 104(d)(1)), the simple average price received by producers of the commodity, as determined by the Secretary, during the marketing years for the immediately preceding 5 crops of the commodity, excluding the year in which the average price was the highest and the year in which the average price was the lowest in such period.

SEC. 107. CROP INSURANCE COVERAGE FOR THE 1990 CROPS.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—Subject to the limitations under subsection (b), producers on a farm, to be eligible to receive a disaster payment under this subtitle, an emergency loan under subtitle C of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1961 et seq.) for crop losses due to damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989, or forgiveness of the repayment of advance deficiency payments under section 101(b), must agree to obtain multiperil crop insurance under the Federal Crop Insurance Act (7 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.) for the 1990 crop of the commodity for which such payments, loans, or forgiveness are sought.

(b) LIMITATIONS.—Producers on a farm shall not be required to agree to obtain crop insurance under subsection (a) for a commodity—

(1) unless such producers' deficiency in production, with respect to the crop for which a disaster payment under this subtitle otherwise may be made, exceeds 65 percent;

(2) where, or if, crop insurance coverage is not available to the producers for the commodity for which the payment, loan, or forgiveness is sought;

(3) if the producers' annual premium rate for such crop insurance is an amount greater than 125 percent of the average premium rate for insurance on that commodity for the 1989 crop in the county in which the producers are located;

(4) in any case in which the producers' annual premium for such crop insurance is an amount greater than 25 percent of the amount of the payment, loan, or forgiveness sought; or

(5) if the producers can establish by appeal to the county committee established under section 8(b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act (16 U.S.C. 590(b)), or to the county committee established under section 332 of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (17 U.S.C. 1982), as appropriate, that the purchase of crop insurance would impose an undue financial hardship on such producers and that a waiver of the requirement to obtain crop insurance should, in the discretion of the county committee, be granted.

(c) IMPLEMENTATION.—

(1) COUNTY COMMITTEES.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall ensure (acting through the county committees established under section 8(b) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act and located in the counties in which the assistance programs provided for under sections 101 through 105 are implemented and through the county committees established under section 332 of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act in counties in which emergency loans, as described in subsection (a), are made available) that producers who apply for assistance, as described in subsection (a), obtain multiperil crop insurance as required under this section.

(2) OTHER SOURCES.—Each producer who is subject to the requirements of this section may comply with such requirements by providing evidence of multiperil crop insurance coverage from sources other than through the county committee office, as approved by the Secretary.

(3) COMMISSIONS.—The Secretary shall provide by regulation for a reduction in the commissions paid to private insurance agents, brokers, or companies on crop insurance contracts entered into under this section sufficient to reflect that such insurance contracts principally involve only a servicing function to be performed by the agent, broker, or company.

(d) REPAYMENT OF BENEFITS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if (prior to the end of the 1990 crop year for the commodity involved) the crop insurance coverage required of the producer under this section is canceled by the producer, the producer—

(1) shall make immediate repayment to the Secretary of any disaster payment or forgiven advance deficiency payment that the producer otherwise is required to repay; and

(2) shall become immediately liable for full repayment of all principal and interest outstanding on any emergency loan described in subsection (a) made subject to this section.

SEC. 108. CROPS HARVESTED FOR FORAGE USES.

Not later than 15 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall announce the terms and conditions by which producers on a farm may establish a 1989 yield with respect to crops that will be harvested for silage and other forage uses.

SEC. 109. PAYMENT LIMITATIONS.

(a) LIMITATION.—Subject to subsections (b) and (c), the total amount of payments that a person shall be entitled to receive under one or more of the programs established under this subtitle may not exceed $100,000.

(b) NO DOUBLE BENEFITS.—No person may receive disaster payments under this subtitle to the extent that such person receives a livestock emergency benefit for lost feed production in 1989 under section 606 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1471d).

(c) COMBINED LIMITATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—No person may receive any payment under this subtitle or benefit under title VI of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1471 et seq.) for livestock emergency losses suffered in 1989 if such payment or benefit will cause the combined total amount of such payments and benefits received by such person to exceed $100,000.

(2) ELECTION.—If a producer is subject to paragraph (1), the person may elect (subject to the benefits limitations under section 609 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1471g)) whether to receive the $100,000 in such payments, or such livestock emergency benefits (not to exceed $50,000), or a combination of payments and benefits specified by the person.

(d) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall issue regulations—

(1) defining the term "person" for the purposes of this section and section 151, which shall conform, to the extent practicable, to the regulations defining the term "person" issued under section 1001 of the Food Security Act of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 1308); and

(2) prescribing such rules as the Secretary determines necessary to ensure a fair and reasonable application of the limitations established under this section.

SEC. 110. NO DOUBLE PAYMENTS ON REPLANTED ACREAGE.

(a) REDUCTION OF DISASTER PAYMENTS.—Effective only for producers on a farm who receive disaster payments under this subtitle for a crop of a commodity, the Secretary of Agriculture shall reduce such payments by an amount that reflects the value of any crop such producers plant for harvest in 1989 to replace the crop for which disaster payments are received.

(b) REPLACEMENT CROPS.—For purposes of subsection (a), a crop shall be considered to be planted to replace the crop for which disaster payments are received if (because of loss or damage to the first crop due to damaging weather or related condition in 1988 or 1989) the second crop is planted on acreage on which the producers planted, or were prevented from planting, the first crop.

(c) ADMINISTRATION.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall—

(1) determine the value of the second crop based on the actual yield of the producers and average market prices for the second crop during a representative period; and

(2) take into account the historical cropping patterns of producers.

SEC. 111. SUBSTITUTION OF CROP INSURANCE PROGRAM YIELDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture may permit each eligible producer (as defined in subsection (d)) of a 1989 crop of a commodity who has obtained multiperil crop insurance for such crop (or, as provided in subsection (c), who obtained multiperil crop insurance for the producer's 1988 crop of such commodity) under the Federal Crop Insurance Act (7 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.) to substitute, at the discretion of the producer, the crop insurance yield for such crop, as established under such Act, for the farm yield otherwise assigned to the producer under this subtitle, for the purposes of determining such producer's eligibility for a disaster payment on the 1989 crop under this subtitle and the amount of such payment.

(b) ADJUSTMENT OF ADVANCED DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, if an eligible producer of wheat, feed grains, cotton, or rice elects to substitute yields for such producer's 1989 crop under subsection (a), the producer's eligibility for a waiver or repayment of an advance deficiency payment on such crop under this subtitle shall be adjusted as provided in paragraph (2).

(2) AMOUNT.—The amount of production of such crop on which the producer otherwise would be eligible for waiver of repayment of advance deficiency payments under this subtitle shall be reduced by an amount of production equal to the difference between—

(A) the amount of production eligible for disaster payments under this subtitle using a substituted yield under this section; and

(B) the amount of production that would have been eligible for disaster payments using the farm program payment yield otherwise assigned to the producer under this subtitle.

(c) MULTIPERIL CROP INSURANCE NOT AVAILABLE.—A producer may use the crop insurance yield for the producer's 1988 crop of a commodity for purposes of substituting yields under subsection (a) if the producer demonstrates to the Secretary that, through no fault of the producer, multiperil crop insurance under the Federal Crop Insurance Act was not made available to the producer for the producer's 1989 crop of the commodity.

(d) DEFINITION OF ELIGIBLE PRODUCER.—For purposes of this section, the term "eligible producer" means a producer of the 1989 crop of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, extra long staple cotton, rice, or soybeans.

SEC. 112. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this subtitle:

(1) DAMAGING WEATHER.—The term "damaging weather" includes but is not limited to drought, hail, excessive moisture, freeze, tornado, hurricane, or excessive wind, or any combination thereof.

(2) RELATED CONDITION.—The term "related condition" includes but is not limited to insect infestations, plant diseases, or other deterioration of a crop of a commodity including aflatoxin, that is accelerated or exacerbated naturally as a result of damaging weather occurring prior to or during harvest.

Subtitle B—Orchards

SEC. 121. ELIGIBILITY.

(a) DROUGHT LOSS.—Subject to the limitation in subsection (b), the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide assistance, as specified in section 122, to eligible orchardists that planted trees for commercial purposes but lost such trees as a result of freeze or related condition in 1989, as determined by the Secretary.

(b) LIMITATION.—An eligible orchardist shall qualify for assistance under subsection (a) only if such orchardist's tree mortality, as a result of the natural disaster, exceeds 45 percent (adjusted for normal mortality).

SEC. 122. ASSISTANCE.

The assistance provided by the Secretary of Agriculture to eligible orchardists for losses described in section 121 shall consist of either—

(1) reimbursement of 65 percent of the cost of replanting trees lost due to freeze or related condition in 1989 in excess of 45 percent mortality (adjusted for normal mortality); or

(2) at the discretion of the Secretary, sufficient seedlings to reestablish the stand.

SEC. 123. LIMITATION ON ASSISTANCE.

(a) LIMITATION.—The total amount of payments that a person shall be entitled to receive under this subtitle may not exceed $25,000, or an equivalent value in tree seedlings.

(b) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall issue regulations—

(1) defining the term "person" for the purposes of this subtitle, which shall conform, to the extent practicable, to the regulations defining the term "person" issued under section 1001 of the Food Security Act of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 1308) and the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988 (7 U.S.C. 1421 note); and

(2) prescribing such rules as the Secretary determines necessary to ensure a fair and reasonable application of the limitation established under this section.

SEC. 124. DEFINITION.

As used in this subtitle, the term "eligible orchardist" means a person who produces annual crops from trees for commercial purposes and owns 500 acres or less of such trees.

SEC. 125. DUPLICATIVE PAYMENTS.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish guidelines to ensure that no person receives duplicative payments under this subtitle and the forestry incentives program, agricultural conservation program, or other Federal program.

SEC. 126. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON CROP INSURANCE FOR ORCHARD CROPS.

It is the sense of Congress that the Secretary of Agriculture should expeditiously expand the availability of multiperil crop insurance under the Federal Crop Insurance Act (7 U.S.C. 1501 et seq.) to all orchard crops.

Subtitle C—Forest Crops

SEC. 131. ELIGIBILITY.

(a) DROUGHT LOSS.—Subject to the limitation in subsection (b), the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide assistance, as specified in section 132, to eligible tree farmers that planted tree seedlings in 1988 or 1989 for commercial purposes but lost such seedlings as a result of drought or related condition in 1989, as determined by the Secretary.

(b) LIMITATION.—An eligible tree farmer shall qualify for assistance under subsection (a) only if such tree farmer's tree seedling mortality, as a result of the natural disaster, exceeds 45 percent (adjusted for normal mortality).

SEC. 132. ASSISTANCE.

The assistance provided by the Secretary of Agriculture to eligible tree farmers for losses described in section 131 shall consist of either—

(1) reimbursement of 65 percent of the cost of replanting seedlings lost due to drought or related conditions in 1989 in excess of 45 percent mortality (adjusted for normal mortality); or

(2) at the discretion of the Secretary, sufficient tree seedlings to reestablish the stand.

SEC. 133. LIMITATION ON ASSISTANCE.

(a) LIMITATION.—The total amount of payments that a person shall be entitled to receive under this subtitle may not exceed $25,000, or an equivalent value in tree seedlings.

(b) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall issue regulations—

(1) defining the term "person" for the purposes of this subtitle, which shall conform, to the extent practicable, to the regulations defining the term "person" issued under section 1001 of the Food Security Act of 1985 and the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988; and

(2) prescribing such rules as the Secretary determines necessary to ensure a fair and reasonable application of the limitation established under this section.

SEC. 134. DEFINITION.

As used in this subtitle, the term "eligible tree farmer" means a person who grows trees for harvest for commercial purposes and owns 1,000 acres or less of such trees.

SEC. 135. DUPLICATIVE PAYMENTS.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish guidelines to ensure that no person receives duplicative payments under this subtitle and the forestry incentives program, agricultural conservation program, or other Federal program.

Subtitle D—Additional Assistance

SEC. 141. NEW CONSERVATION MEASURES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) HAYING AND GRAZING ON CRP ACREAGE.—In the case of an owner or operator of land who has entered into a conservation reserve program contract under subtitle D of title XII of the Food Security Act of 1985 (16 U.S.C. 3831 et seq.) and hays or grazes livestock during the 1989 crop year on acreage subject to such contract as authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary may not reduce the amount of rental payments made to such owner or operator as the result of such haying or grazing to the extent that the owner or operator—

(A) carries out additional conservation practices, approved by the Soil Conservation Service in consultation with appropriate Federal and State agencies, to enhance soil, water, and wildlife conservation on or in the vicinity of lands subject to such contract; and

(B) pays the costs of carrying out such practices.

(2) AMOUNT OF REDUCTION.—The amount of the reduction prohibited under paragraph (1) shall equal one-half of the amount paid by the owner or operator to cover the costs of carrying out the conservation practices.

(b) CONSERVATION PRACTICES.—For purposes of subsection (a), the term "conservation practices" includes—

(1) establishment of permanent shelterbelts and windbreaks;

(2) restoration of wetlands;

(3) establishment of wildlife food plots; or

(4) planting of trees.

SEC. 142. ASSISTANCE FOR PONDS.

Section 607(b)(2)(B) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1471e(b)(2)(B)) is amended by inserting "or ponds" after "wells".

Subtitle E—Administrative Provisions

SEC. 151. INELIGIBILITY.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—A person who has qualifying gross revenues in excess of $2,000,000 annually, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, shall not be eligible to receive any disaster payment or other benefits under this title.

(b) QUALIFYING GROSS REVENUES.—For purposes of this section, the term "qualifying gross revenues" means—

(1) if a majority of the person's annual income is received from farming, ranching, and forestry operations, the gross revenue from the person's farming, ranching, and forestry operations; and

(2) if less than a majority of the person's annual income is received from farming, ranching, and forestry operations, the person's gross revenue from all sources.

SEC. 152. TIMING AND MANNER OF ASSISTANCE.

(a) TIMING OF ASSISTANCE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—

(A) ASSISTANCE MADE AVAILABLE AS SOON AS PRACTICABLE.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the Secretary of Agriculture shall make full disaster assistance available under this title as soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act.

(B) COMPLETED APPLICATION.—Subject to subparagraph (C), no payment or benefit provided under this title shall be payable or due until such time as a completed application for a crop of a commodity therefor has been approved.

(C) APPLICATIONS PRIOR TO SEPTEMBER 30, 1989.—If an application for a disaster payment under this title is received by the Secretary prior to September 30, 1989, by producers who have harvested their 1989 crop, the Secretary shall make full or advance disaster payments to such producers within 15 days after the application is received or by September 15, 1989, whichever is later.

(D) ADVANCE PAYMENTS.—If advance payments are made to producers under subparagraph (C), such payments shall not be less than 80 percent of the payments that will be made available to such producers under this title.

(2) DEADLINE FOR APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive payments under subtitle A, a person shall make application for such payments not later than March 31, 1990, or such later date that the Secretary, by regulation, may prescribe.

(b) MANNER.—The Secretary may make payments available under subtitle A in the form of cash, commodities, or commodity certificates, as determined by the Secretary.

SEC. 153. COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION.

(a) USE.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall use the funds, facilities, and authorities of the Commodity Credit Corporation in carrying out this title.

(b) EXISTING AUTHORITY.—The authority provided by this title shall be in addition to, and not in place of, any authority granted to the Secretary or the Commodity Credit Corporation under any other provision of law.

SEC. 154. LIMITATION ON OUTLAYS.

(a) MAXIMUM AMOUNT.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if the acreage planted in the United States to the 1989 crop of corn is greater than 73,250,000 acres, the total amount expended for deficiency payments for the 1989 crops of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice under the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.) shall not exceed $6,700,000,000.

(b) PRORATION.—The Secretary shall make any reduction required under subsection (a) on a pro rata basis.

SEC. 156. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary of Agriculture or the Commodity Credit Corporation, as appropriate, shall issue regulations to implement this title as soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act, without regard to the requirement for notice and public participation in rule making prescribed in section 553 of title 5, United States Code, or in any directive of the Secretary.

TITLE II—EMERGENCY LIVESTOCK ASSISTANCE

SEC. 201. USE OF STORED GRAIN FOR ASSISTANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (b) of section 606 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1471d(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) If assistance is made available through the furnishing of feed grain under paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a), the Secretary—

"(1) may provide for the furnishing of the feed grain through a dealer or manufacturer and the replacing of the feed grain so furnished from feed grain owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation; or

"(2) at the option of the livestock producer, shall provide for the furnishing of the feed grain through the use of feed grain stored on the farm of the producer that has been pledged as collateral for a price support loan made under this Act.".

SEC. 202. LIVESTOCK TRANSPORTATION ASSISTANCE.

Section 606 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1471d) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) The Secretary may make available at least $25,000,000 to provide livestock transportation assistance under subsection (a)(6) for livestock emergencies in 1989.".

SEC. 203. LIVESTOCK WATER DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS.

Section 607 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1471e) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) The Secretary may make available at least $25,000,000 to provide special assistance under subsection (b)(2) for livestock emergencies in 1988 and 1989.".

SEC. 204. ANIMAL UNIT METHODOLOGY STUDY AND REPORT.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct a study on the methodology and justification of the calculations used to determine the animal unit figure used for purposes of the emergency feed program and the emergency feed assistance program under section 606 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1471d), and report to Congress the results of such study within 90 days of the date of enactment of this Act.

TITLE III—DISASTER CREDIT AND FORBEARANCE

SEC. 301. EMERGENCY LOANS.

Section 321(b) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1961(b)) shall not apply to a person who otherwise would be eligible for an emergency loan under subtitle C of such Act, if such eligibility is the result of damage to an annual crop planted for harvest in 1989.

SEC. 302. 1990 FARM OPERATING LOANS.

(a) DIRECT CREDIT.—To the maximum extent practicable, the Secretary of Agriculture shall ensure that direct operating loans made or insured under subtitle B of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1941 et seq.) for 1990 crop production are made available to farmers and ranchers suffering major losses due to excess moisture, freeze, storm, or related condition occurring in 1989 or drought or related condition occurring in 1988 or 1989, as authorized under existing law and under regulations of the Secretary that implement the objective of enabling farmers and ranchers to stay in business.

(b) LOAN GUARANTEES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall make available in fiscal year 1990 guarantees to commercial or cooperative lenders for loans under subtitle B of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, to refinance and reamortize 1989 operating loans, or 1989 or 1990 installments due and payable on real estate debt, farm equipment or building (including storage facilities) debt, livestock loans, or other operating debt, of farmers and ranchers that otherwise cannot be repaid due to major losses incurred by such farmers or ranchers as a result of excess moisture, freeze, storm, or related condition occurring in 1989 or drought or related condition occurring in 1988 or 1989.

(2) REAMORTIZATION.—Each fiscal year 1990 guaranteed loan for 1988 or 1989 natural disaster purposes, as described in paragraph (1), shall contain terms and conditions governing the reamortization of the debt of the farmer or rancher that will provide the farmer or rancher a reasonable opportunity to continue to receive new operating credit while repaying the guaranteed loan, as determined by the Secretary.

(3) ELIGIBILITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any person eligible to receive payments under subtitle A of title I shall be deemed eligible to have guaranteed, in accordance with this subsection, loans made to such person by a commercial or cooperative lender to refinance installment payments that are or become due and payable during 1989 or 1990, as described in paragraph (1), except that, to be deemed eligible to have such loan guaranteed, the person must otherwise—

(A) be current in the person's obligation to the commercial or cooperative lender that agrees to accept the guarantee in consideration of allowing the person to make the 1989 or 1990 payment or installment over a period of time not to exceed 6 years from the original due date of such payment or installment; and

(B) meet the criteria for guaranteed loan borrowers under subtitle B of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act established by the Secretary.

(c) USE OF AGRICULTURAL CREDIT INSURANCE FUND.—For purposes of providing guaranteed loans in accordance with subsection (b), in addition to funds otherwise available, the Secretary may use any funds available from the Agricultural Credit Insurance Fund during fiscal years 1989 or 1990 for emergency insured and guaranteed loans under subtitle C of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1961 et seq.) to meet the needs resulting from natural disasters, except that funds available from such Fund first shall be used to satisfy the level of assistance estimated by the Secretary to meet the needs of persons eligible for emergency disaster loans.

SEC. 303. FmHA LOANS MADE TO INDIAN TRIBES.

The Act entitled "An Act to provide for loans to Indian tribes and tribal corporations, and for other purposes" (25 U.S.C. 488 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 6. REDUCTION OF UNPAID PRINCIPAL.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture may, on the application of the borrower of a loan or loans made under this Act, reduce the unpaid principal balance of such loan or loans to the current fair market value of the land purchased with the proceeds of the loan or loans if—

"(1) the fair market value of the land has declined by at least 25 percent since such land was purchased by the borrower;

"(2) the land has been held by the borrower for a period of at least 5 years; and

"(3) the Secretary of the Interior finds that the borrower has insufficient income to both repay the loan or loans and provide normal tribal governmental services.

"(b) FAIR MARKET VALUE.—

"(1) APPRAISAL.—Current fair market value under subsection (a) shall be determined through an appraisal by an independent qualified fee appraiser, selected by mutual agreement between the borrower and the Secretary of Agriculture.

"(2) COSTS.—The cost of appraisals undertaken under paragraph (1) shall be paid by the borrower.

"(c) APPEALS.—Decisions of the Secretary of Agriculture under this section shall be appealable in accordance with the provisions of section 333B of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1983b).

"(d) FUTURE APPLICATIONS.—A borrower that had a loan or loans reduced under this section shall not submit an application for another reduction on such loan or loans for a period of 5 years after the initial reduction.".

TITLE IV—RURAL BUSINESSES

SEC. 401. DISASTER ASSISTANCE FOR RURAL BUSINESS ENTERPRISES.

(a) LOAN GUARANTEES.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall guarantee loans made in rural areas to—

(1) public, private, or cooperative organizations, to Indian tribes on Federal and State reservations or other Federally recognized Indian tribal groups, or to any other business entities to assist such organizations, tribes, or entities in alleviating the distress caused to such organizations, tribes, or entities, directly or indirectly, by the drought, freeze, storm, excessive moisture, or related condition in 1988 or 1989; and

(2) such organizations, tribes, or entities that refinance or restructure debt as a result of losses incurred, directly or indirectly, because of such natural disasters in 1988 or 1989.

(b) ELIGIBLE LOANS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Loans guaranteed under this section shall be loans made by any Federal or State chartered bank, savings and loan association, cooperative lending agency, insurance company, or other legally organized lending agency.

(2) PRODUCTION AGRICULTURE.—No application for a loan guarantee under this section shall be denied on the basis that such organization, tribe, or entity engages in whole or in part in production agriculture.

(c) LOAN GUARANTEE LIMITS.—

(1) PERCENTAGE OF PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST.—No guarantee under this section shall exceed 90 percent of the principal and interest amount of the loan or $2,500,000, whichever is the lesser amount.

(2) TOTAL AMOUNT.—The total amount of loan guarantee under this section shall not exceed $200,000,000.

(d) USE OF THE RURAL DEVELOPMENT INSURANCE FUND.—The Secretary shall use the Rural Development Insurance Fund established under section 309A of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1929a) for the purposes of discharging the obligations of the Secretary under this section.

TITLE V—WATER-RELATED ASSISTANCE

SEC. 501. EMERGENCY COMMUNITY WATER ASSISTANCE GRANT PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—Subtitle A of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act is amended by inserting after section 306 (7 U.S.C. 1926) the following new section:

"SEC. 306A. EMERGENCY COMMUNITY WATER ASSISTANCE GRANT PROGRAM.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide grants in accordance with this section to assist the residents of rural areas and small communities to secure adequate quantities of safe water—

"(1) after a significant decline in the quantity or quality of water available from the water supplies of such rural areas and small communities; or

"(2) when repairs, partial replacement, or significant maintenance efforts on established water systems would remedy—

"(A) an acute shortage of quality water; or

"(B) a significant decline in the quantity or quality of water that is available.

"(b) PRIORITY.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Secretary shall—

"(1) give priority to projects described in subsection (a)(1); and

"(2) provide at least 70 percent of all such grants to such projects.

"(c) ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible to obtain a grant under this section, an applicant shall—

"(1) be a public or private nonprofit entity; and

"(2) in the case of a grant made under subsection (a)(1), demonstrate to the Secretary that the decline referred to in such subsection occurred within 2 years of the date the application was filed for such grant.

"(d) USES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Grants made under this section may be used for waterline extensions from existing systems, laying of new waterlines, repairs, significant maintenance, digging of new wells, equipment replacement, hook and tap fees, and any other appropriate purpose associated with developing sources of, or treating, storing, or distributing water, and to assist communities in complying with the requirements of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1251 et seq.) or the Safe Drinking Water Act (42 U.S.C. 300f et seq.).

"(2) JOINT PROPOSALS.—Nothing in this section shall preclude rural communities from submitting joint proposals for emergency water assistance, subject to the restrictions contained in subsection (e). Such restrictions should be considered in the aggregate, depending on the number of communities involved.

"(e) RESTRICTIONS.—

"(1) MAXIMUM POPULATION AND INCOME.—No grant provided under this section shall be used to assist any rural area or community that—

"(A) includes any area in any city or town with a population in excess of 15,000 inhabitants according to the most recent decennial census of the United States; or

"(B) has a median household income in excess of the State nonmetropolitan median household income according to the most recent decennial census of the United States.

"(2) SET-ASIDE FOR SMALLER COMMUNITIES.—Not less than 50 percent of the funds allocated under this section shall be allocated to rural communities with populations that do not exceed 5,000 inhabitants.

"(f) MAXIMUM GRANTS.—Grants made under this section may not exceed—

"(1) in the case of each grant made under subsection (a)(1), $500,000; and

"(2) in the case of each grant made under subsection (a)(2), $75,000.

"(g) FULL FUNDING.—Subject to subsection (e), grants under this section shall be made in an amount equal to 100 percent of the costs of the projects conducted under this section.

"(h) APPLICATION.—

"(1) NATIONALLY COMPETITIVE APPLICATION PROCESS.—The Secretary shall develop a nationally competitive application process to award grants under this section. The process shall include criteria for evaluating applications, including population, median household income, and the severity of the decline in quantity or quality of water.

"(2) TIMING.—The Secretary shall make every effort to review and act on applications within 60 days of the date that such applications are submitted.

"(i) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $35,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990 and 1991, such sums to remain authorized until fully appropriated.".

(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—

(1) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall publish—

(A) interim final regulations to carry out section 306A of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (as added by subsection (a) of this section) not later than 45 days after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(B) final regulations to carry out section 306A of such Act not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) FUNDS.—

(A) OBLIGATION.—The Secretary shall designate 70 percent of the funds made available for the first fiscal year for which appropriations are made under section 306A(i) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act not later than 5 months after the date such funds are appropriated.

(B) RELEASE.—The Secretary may release funds prior to the issuance of final regulations under paragraph (1)(B) for grants under section 306A(a)(1) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act.

SEC. 502. LIVESTOCK WATER ASSISTANCE.

Section 402 of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2202) is amended—

(1) by inserting after "measures" the following: "(including measures carried out to assist confined livestock)"; and

(2) effective only for fiscal year 1989, by striking "periods" and inserting "any fiscal year in which there is a period".

SEC. 503. DISASTER ASSISTANCE FOR WATERSHED PROTECTION ACTIVITIES.

Subtitle A of title IV of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988 is amended by inserting after section 401 (7 U.S.C. 2204c) the following new section:

"SEC. 402. DISASTER ASSISTANCE FOR WATERSHED PROTECTION ACTIVITIES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture may provide disaster relief assistance in accordance with this section to repair damage caused by storms occurring in 1988 or 1989 to watersheds located in any county in any State, to the extent that funds authorized by this section remain available.

"(b) FORM OF ASSISTANCE.—The assistance authorized by this section—

"(1) includes both financial and technical assistance; and

"(2) shall be provided in a manner consistent with similar assistance authorized under section 403 of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1978 (16 U.S.C. 2203).

"(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1990.".

TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. SHRINKAGE ALLOWANCE FOR PEANUTS.

Effective only for the 1988 through 1990 crops of peanuts, section 359(p)(2)(B) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 (7 U.S.C. 1359(p)(2)(B)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i), by striking "(less such reasonable allowances for shrinkage as the Secretary may prescribe)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iv)(I) The obligation of a handler to export peanuts in quantities described in this subparagraph shall be reduced by a shrinkage allowance, to be determined by the Secretary, to reflect actual dollar value shrinkage experienced by handlers in commercial operations, except that such allowance shall not be less than 4½ percent, except as provided in subclause (II).

"(II) The Secretary may provide a lower shrinkage allowance for a handler who fails to comply with restrictions on the use of peanuts, as may be specified by the Commodity Credit Corporation, to take into account common industry practices.".

SEC. 602. ADVANCED DEFICIENCY REPAYMENT DEADLINE FOR 1988 CROPS.

Section 201(b)(4) of the Disaster Assistance Act of 1988 (7 U.S.C. 1421 note) is amended by striking "July 31, 1989" and inserting "July 31, 1990".

SEC. 603. PLANTING OF ALTERNATE CROPS ON PERMITTED ACREAGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (E)(i) of section 504(b)(2) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1464(b)(2)) (as amended by the Act entitled "An Act to amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 for the 1990 crops to allow the planting of alternative crops on permitted acreage and to amend the provisions regarding the designation of farm acreage base as acreage base established for oats") is amended by inserting "mung bean, mustard," after "milkweed,".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective 1 day after the date of enactment of the Act so entitled.

SEC. 604. CROP INSURANCE YIELD COVERAGE.

The Federal Crop Insurance Act is amended by inserting after section 508 (7 U.S.C. 1508) the following new section:

"SEC. 508A. CROP INSURANCE YIELD COVERAGE.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) YIELD COVERAGE.—Effective beginning with crops harvested in 1990, the Corporation may implement multiperil crop insurance underwriting rules that ensure that yield coverage, as specified in subsection (b), is provided to producers participating in the Federal crop insurance program.

"(2) APPLICATION.—Such underwriting rules and yield coverage, as specified in subsection (b), shall apply to wheat, feed grains, cotton, rice, and soybeans.

"(b) YIELD COVERAGE.—

"(1) GENERAL COMMODITIES.—

"(A) PLANS.—A crop insurance contract offered to a producer of a crop of wheat, feed grains, cotton, or rice shall make available to such producer—

"(i) yield coverage based on the producer's farm program yield for the crop established under the program for the commodity involved; or

"(ii) a plan that uses the producer's actual production history for the 5 previous crops, subject to paragraph (3), to determine the yield coverage.

"(B) COMMODITY-BY-COMMODITY BASIS.—A producer may choose between the two alternatives described in subparagraph (A) on a commodity-by-commodity basis.

"(2) SOYBEANS.—A crop insurance contract offered to a producer of a crop of soybeans shall be based on a yield coverage plan that uses the producer's actual production history for the 5 previous crops, subject to paragraph (3), to determine the yield coverage.

"(3) ACTUAL PRODUCTION HISTORY.—

"(A) INADEQUATE DOCUMENTATION.—Under a plan that uses actual production history, as provided for in paragraph (1) or (2), if the producer does not submit adequate documentation of such history for a crop—

"(i) in the case of any commodity other than soybeans, the producer shall be assigned the producer's farm program yield for that crop of the commodity; and

"(ii) in the case of soybeans, the producer shall be assigned a yield equal to 100 percent of the area average yield for that crop of soybeans, as established by the Corporation.

"(B) NOTICE OF AREA AVERAGE YIELDS.—Area average yields applicable to any county shall be posted and available for inspection at the county office of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

"(C) MINIMUM COVERAGE.—In no case may a producer's coverage under such plan that uses actual production history be less than the coverage established using farm program yields, or (for soybeans) 100 percent of the most recent area average yield.

"(c) USE OF YIELD COVERAGE PROVISIONS.—

"(1) NOTICE.—The Corporation shall ensure that, whenever the yield coverage provisions of this section go into effect, producers are given adequate notice of such provisions in advance of the crop insurance sign-up period applicable to the crops to which such provisions first will apply.

"(2) SIGN-UP PERIOD.—To the extent that the provisions of this section are made applicable to the 1990 crops, the Corporation shall ensure that the sign-up period for any 1990 crop does not end earlier than 60 days following the publication of notice of such provisions in the Federal Register.".

Amend the title so as to read as follows: "To provide disaster assistance to agricultural producers, and for other purposes.".

Mr. DE LA GARZA (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House amendment to the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOAKLEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, under my reservation, I ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture if the agreement represented by the amendment that he is now offering is what the administration has agreed to.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADIGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Yes, it is approved by the administration, the Senate majority and minority approved it, and the House leadership and the committee majority and minority approved it.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill (H.R. 3072) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, and that I may be permitted to include tables and other extraneous materials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ECKART). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

WAIVING CERTAIN POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3072, DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 225, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 225

Resolved, That all points of order against consideration of the bill (H.R. 3072) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2(l)(6) of rule XI and clause 7 of rule XXI are hereby waived. During consideration of the bill, all points of order against the following provisions in the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived: beginning on page 2, line 2 through "law:" on page 7, line 19; beginning on page 8, line 3 through "law:" on page 8, line 13; beginning on page 8, line 11 through "law:" on page 10, line 3, beginning on page 10, line 10 through "1992:" on page 17, line 19; beginning on page 17, line 23 through "law:" on page 18, line 14; beginning on page 18, line 18 through "1992:" on page 19, line 7; beginning on page 19, line 14 through "$282,000,000:" on page 23, line 23; beginning on page 23, line 25 through "1994:" on page 24, line 14; beginning with "Provided" on page 24, line 25 through "1992:" on page 27, line 1; beginning on page 27, line 6 through "expended:" on page 29, line 14; beginning with "Provided" on page 29, line 18 through "law:" on page 29, line 19; beginning on page 30, line 5 through "1991:" on page 31, line 9; beginning on page 31, line 20 through "diseases:" on page 32, line 17; beginning on page 32, line 21 through page 36, line 19; and beginning on page 70, line 5 through page 71, line 24. In any case where this resolution waives points of order against only a portion of a paragraph, a point of order against any other provision in such paragraph may be made only against such provision and not against the entire paragraph. It shall be in order to consider the amendment, if offered by Representative Fazio of California or his designee, and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived. It shall be in order to consider the amendment printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution, if offered by Representative Skaggs of Colorado or his designee, and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WHEAT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. MARTIN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 225 is a rule to facilitate consideration of H.R. 3072, the Department of Defense appropriations bill for 1990. Since general appropriations bills are priviledged, the rule does not provide any special procedures for consideration of the bill. The bill will be considered under the normal legislative process for consideration of appropriations bills. The time devoted in general debate shall be determined by a unanimous-consent request. The bill will be open to amendment under the 5-minute rule. Any amendment which does not violate the rules of the House shall be in order.

All points of order against the bill for failure to comply with clause 2(l)(6) of rule XI, that is the rule which requires that committee reports be available to Members for 3 days prior to consideration on the floor, are waived. The Committee on Appropriations ordered the bill reported on August 2. Since the printed copy of the report has not been available to Members for the required 3 days, a waiver of rule XI, clause 2(l)(6) is necessary.

Points of order against the measure for failing to comply with clause 7 of rule XXI, that is the rule which requires that relevant printed hearings and reports on appropriations bills be available for 3 days prior to House consideration of an appropriations bill, are also waived. Appropriate reports for this measure were filed 2 days ago. Since clause 7, rule XXI requires that these reports be available for 3 days, a waiver is necessary.

Clause 2 of rule XXI, the rule which prohibits consideration of unauthorized appropriations or legislative provisions in general appropriations bills and which restricts the offering of limiting amendments in general appropriations bills, is waived against specified provisions of the bill. The precise provisions of H.R. 3072 for which these waivers are provided are detailed in the rule. Where points of order are waived against a portion of a paragraph, a point of order against any other provision in the paragraph may only be made against that provision, and not against the entire paragraph.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule makes in order two amendments. An amendment by, and if ordered by, Representative FAZIO of California or his designee and an amendment by, and if offered by, Representative SKAGGS of Colorado or his designee. Points of order against both amendments for failing to comply with clause 2 of rule XXI, are waived.

The Fazio amendment is a perfecting amendment to section 9066 of this measure. Section 9066 provides $14.7 million for the cleanup of toxic waste at Hamilton Air Force Base in California. The Fazio amendment further specifies the terms and conditions regarding cleanup and the responsibilities of key Federal agencies.

The Skaggs amendment prohibits the Department of Defense from spending funds appropriated in the bill to prepare reports or estimates on how States or congressional districts might benefit from a weapons program until that program can be considered to have received final approval from Congress.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3072 appropriates $286.485 billion for fiscal year 1990 for the military functions of the Department of Defense and for most intelligence related activities. The bill as amended by the Appropriations Committee is fully in compliance with the Department of Defense authorization bill recently passed by this body. Included in the measure is the House-passed authorization funding level for SDI and two B–2 bombers. No funds are included for the Midgetman program and $600 million is included for the MX rail garrison.

Mr. Speaker, the measure before us is one of great significance. The rule will provide for expeditious consideration of the bill and will allow this body to move forward with this year's appropriation process. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to adopt the rule.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 225 is a rule that waives certain points of order against H.R. 3072, the Department of Defense Appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990.

As my colleagues are aware at the end of this long and hectic week, the leadership has made a valiant effort to pass all the appropriations bills prior to the August recess. This week alone we have processed 7 of the 13 regular appropriations bills, and the DOD bill today marks the completion of House action on all 13.

Our colleagues on the Appropriations Committee are to be commended on their heroic efforts under fire. And I think the House as a whole deserves kudos for enduring the rigors of this marathon exercise. I think everyone agrees that we owe it to ourselves to do everything possible to avoid another one of those mystery grab-bag continuing resolutions come October. While this week's efforts don't guarantee that, they certainly improve the prospects of separately enacting all 13 bills by October 1.

Mr. Speaker, having handed out all the appropriate bouquets, I would be remiss if I did not point out that this forced march has not been without its casualties—both human and procedural. One of the things we have lost procedurally is more time to learn what's in all these bills and to debate and amend them. And this rule is a clear reflection of the procedural short-cuts that have been taken to meet the August recess deadline for completing action on all 13 bills.

Since this DOD appropriations bill was only reported last Tuesday, and the report only became available yesterday, it was necessary in this rule to waive two House rules. The first waiver is clause 2(l)(6) of rule 11 which requires that committee reports be available for 3 days prior to the consideration of a bill. And the second is clause 7 of rule 21 which requires that the relevant committee hearings and report on an appropriation bill be available at least 3 days prior to consideration of the bill.

Obviously the most glaring procedural casualty, but not an uncommon one nowadays, is the fact that we are acting on appropriations bills before the relevant authorization bill has been signed into law. As my colleagues are well aware, the House passed the DOD authorization bill just last week, and the Senate just completed action on its version last Wednesday. And the two bills are considerably different. The Senate bill is much closer to what the administration requested, while the House bill is at odds with the administration in several major respects.

The appropriations bill before us today has been fashioned to conform with the House-passed bill. And not surprisingly, the administration has issued a policy statement in opposition to this appropriations bill for that very reason. Obviously, all the major differences between both the House and Senate authorizing and appropriations bills will have to be worked out when we return. But in the meantime, it is necessary to waive clause 2 of rule 21 so that we can move the process along. Otherwise, this bill could be gutted on points of order.

This rule does provide that if a point of order is sustained against a provision in a paragraph that has not been protected by a waiver, only the offensive provision would be striken and not the entire paragraph.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule provides a clause 2, rule 21 waiver for an amendment, one of which may be offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO] and the other offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SKAGGS] to section 9066 of the bill at pages 70 and 71 of the bill. This provision deals with a toxic waste cleanup controversy on land that used to be part of Hamilton Air Force Base in California. I indicated that the amendment may be offered since the gentleman from California was negotiating with the Armed Services Committee to come up with acceptable compromise language on this matter. Nevertheless, even though the amendment will be germane to the existing provision in the bill, and has been represented as being technical in nature, it requires a clause 2, rule 21 waiver because it is legislating in an appropriation bill.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge support for this rule.

□ 0940

Mr. Speaker, especially as to the desire of the Rules Committee to grant the waiver on the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SKAGGS], I think the Rules Committee should be commended, and I believe, as a supporter of that amendment, that there is a statement of the policy there which the House will be eager to make again in support of that amendment.

In the case of the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO], he has attempted to work out an agreement with the appropriate committee so there will not be either confusion or conflict in this area.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, regardless of one's feelings about the appropriation bill itself, this is a rule that we can support. I do support the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. MARTIN] for her commendations of the Rules Committee and for her participation in the process that will allow us to make a policy statement on the very important matter she mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of the debate only, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to support the rule, but I will oppose the bill. The reason for my opposition is very simple.

The Pentagon has become so big that it is bigger than the top 30 Fortune 500 companies combined in total assets. The truth is that today we do have more defense, but do we have a smart defense?

While Congress is deliberating a $300 billion appropriation bill, a group of terrorist thugs in the Mideast has been holding some of our hostages for over 3 years, and we look like a bunch of Katzenjammer Cops trying to do something about it. We have failed so miserably that we have become a laughingstock.

Mr. Speaker, if Israel can go in and grab the key leaders, why can we not do that? The truth of the matter is that they are laughing at us. They think we are going to turn the other cheek every time to the point where we will have permanent military arthritis.

The point I am trying to make is that we have all heard about the $700 toilet seats, the $300 hammers, and $5,000 coffee pots, and everybody in the House laughs. But I just want to share just briefly with the Members a GAO report that was provided by the National Federation of Independent Business. On one military contract, the Pentagon purchased an Allen wrench—and I want to show it to the Members—that sells for 13 cents at your local hardware store, and they paid $9,606. Just remember that when we are cutting education money.

But that is not the whole ticket here. This 2-inch piece of copper wire that I am holding and that the Members cannot even see was officially called an antenna motor pin. It costs 1 cent in your hardware store. Do the Members know what the Pentagon paid for it? They paid $7,417. They purchased the nuts and a washer to go with the bolt that is 1-inch long. The bolt costs 14 cents, but the Pentagon paid $1,100 for it. But I think the key here today, Mr. Speaker, in that package there was a little screw—it is called by the Pentagon an external screw—that is about an inch long, and it looks like a long sheet metal screw. It sells for a penny in your hardware store. The Pentagon paid $1,000 for it. They call it an external screw; I say it is the taxpayers' screw of America.

Mr. Speaker, my voice is like hollering out in the wilderness. I do not see any amendments to cut this thing. I was going to offer an amendment today. The committee came out and cut it $1 billion. I am not going to have Congress stay here. I know that my amendment would be voted down.

But I will say this: The new chairman of that subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA], did take this bill and did make some cuts. He is from our region of the country, and this is his first year in the chairmanship of that subcommittee. He did a good job.

But, Mr. Speaker, I say Congress has got to stop funding this Pentagon waste. This is a turkey that should be shot down.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3072) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to not to exceed 1 hour, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE] and myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair designates the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and requests the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNARD] to assume the chair temporarily.

□ 0947

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 3072, with Mr. BARNARD (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as having been read the first time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the unanimous consent agreement, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA].

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may assume.

Mr. Chairman, I bring before the House the Defense appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990.

This is the last of the appropriations bills for fiscal year 1990 to be considered by the House.

I wish to thank all subcommittee members for their assistance and support in the markup process, especially my good friend, JOE MCDADE.

The bill before you is a lean bill. The national debt has tripled since 1981 to over $2.8 trillion; and the trade deficit has increased from a deficit of $19.3 billion in 1980 to $120 billion in 1988.

This bill shows restraint while still providing funding for the important defense areas.

The bill before you provides the funding levels recommended by the administration and the House Armed Services authorization bill in the vast majority of the thousands of projects contained in the budget request but there are some differences.

This bill was amended in the full committee to reflect the changes to the major programs made on the Defense authorization bill last week by this House. The bill reduces the B–2 bomber, the MX missile, the Midgetman missile, and SDI by the same amounts reflected in the authorization action of last week. I don't agree with all these reductions but that was the will of the House. I would have to say that both the Defense authorization bill and this bill will go to conference and be further adjusted so these bills are by no means the finished product.

This is the fifth year in a row Defense funding will experience negative growth. Fiscal year 1986, 4 percent; fiscal year 1987, 3 percent; fiscal year 1988, 3 percent; fiscal year 1989, 1 percent; and fiscal year 1990, 1 percent.

The funds for procurement in fiscal year 1990 are below the levels provided in fiscal year 1982 when measured in constant dollars.

The bill before you recommends new obligational authority of $286.5 billion; and $1.8 billion below the budget request.

The bill is $1 billion below the 302 allocation for Defense in budget authority and contains an outlay limitation of $281.9 billion which is the 302 allocation.

We have tried to support the welfare of the troops in this bill.

The bill contains a $1 billion add-on for real property maintenance to keep barracks and base facilities in proper repair. Backlogs in this area exceed $6 billion.

The bill contains a $500 million add-on for depot maintenance to keep our weapons systems on line and operational. This improves safety for our troops and directly affects our readiness posture. Backlogs in this area exceed $1.5 billion.

The bill contains a $210 million add-on for Champus to help pay for the increased medical costs facing our service families.

A decade ago, the morale of our troops was low, only 68 percent of the recruits had a high school diploma in 1980, combat aircraft were stripped of spare parts, and flight training and steaming hours were well below levels considered adequate to maintain readiness and proper safety.

That situation has been turned around. Morale is high, 93 percent of the recruits are high school graduates, the supply of spare parts is basically adequate, flying hours and steaming hours are at high levels, and the readiness of all services has greatly improved.

Continued negative growth will reverse these positive trends. That is why we have provided additional funds in these important areas.

The bill recommends increased funding above the budget in cases where critical inventory shortfalls are present, where savings can result from economic buys, where buyouts of equipment are possible reducing outyear requirements for funding, and where readiness will be improved.

The bill adds $1 billion above the budget to buy fast sealift ships—four cargo ships and two tankers. Serious sealift shortages exist; 95 percent of combat equipment will require sealift. All the CINC's have emphasized the serious sealift shortfall.

The bill provides $1.4 billion above the budget for dedicated equipment for the National Guard and Reserves. To bring about the total force concept where the National Guard and Reserves are being assigned specific missions by the Active Forces, updated equipment is imperative.

Some of the other specific add-ons above the budget follow:

	Millions
Ammunition	+$350
Mobile subscriber equipment buyout	+215
P-14D aircraft buyout	+600
SSN-688 submarine buyout	+626
U.S. Enterprise refueling	+1,422
EA-6B aircraft buyout	+318

These actions will decrease unit costs, reduce inventory shortfalls, increase readiness, and reduce outyear costs by eliminating funding requirements.

I would refer the Members to pages 4 through 15 of the report for a summary of the committee's action.

The bill also provides $300 million for the Coast Guard, $83 million for the U.S. naval support force in the Antarctica, and $285 million for the national aerospace plane.

The bill also recommends significant reductions and terminations in programs that reflect policy change, contract savings, large unobligated balances available from past years, technical problems resulting in delays and improper management.

Some of these program reductions follow:

Troop reduction (15,000) (millions)	−$222
SDI (billions)	−1.7
Advanced tactical fighter (billions)	−1.1
Automatic data processing (millions)	−862
Milstar (millions)	−632
Intelligence and black program reductions (billions)	−2
C-17 aircraft (millions)	−422
Various RDT&E projects (millions)	−600

Outyear savings or reduced requirements resulting from the recommended terminations, reductions, and changes would approach $20 billion.

The Secretary of Defense proposed terminating seven major programs. The committee disagreed with him on terminating three of those programs as follows:

First, the Osprey—funds have been restored by House and Senate in the authorization process.

Second, Phoenix air-to-air missile—the committee disagreed with the proposal to terminate this program since according to testimony before the committee, termination would leave this program 50 percent short of its inventory objective.

Third, F-15E tactical fighter—if terminated as proposed, it would leave no warm production line for a two-engine fighter for at least 5 years.

The committee basically agreed with the proposal to terminate four major programs but included funds for economic buyouts of the programs. This approach provides equipment to troops and minimizes termination costs.

First, Apache helicopter—the bill supports the budget request.

Second, F-14D Navy fighter—the bill supports termination but included funds to buy out the line through the purchase of 24 F-14's.

Third, SSN-688 submarine—the bill supports termination but included funds to buy out the line; $135 million had been spent in previous years toward procurement of the final SSN-688, so the recommendation is cost effective.

Fourth, AHIP helicopter—the committee agrees the Army needs to equip critical scout and attack units for the light forces. The Army has a firm requirement for at least 275 aircraft but has only funded to date for 207.

Also, the bill terminates numerous classified programs and programs in research and development which had been requested in the budget.

Thus the bill's recommendation:

First, provides new equipment to the troops at economic costs while simultaneously minimizing termination costs in various programs and keeping warm production lines open;

Second, continues programs which, from the committee's perspective, are vital and deserve continued funding; and Third, addresses the long-term funding problem by terminating numerous classified programs and programs in research and development.

The bill recommends $79.1 billion for military personnel, or $601 million above last year's level. These funds provide for 2,105,095 active duty military personnel and 1,180,047 selected Reserve personnel. This recommendation includes the proposal to reduce troop strengths by a total of 16,400.

The bill recommends $89.6 billion for operation and maintenance which is $4.3 billion above the level of funding provided in fiscal year 1989. The O&M accounts provide funds for the maintenance of equipment and facilities, fuel, supplies, and repair parts for weapons and equipment. These accounts along with military personnel provide the readiness needed to properly man and maintain the new weapons systems that are coming on line. If we short change these accounts, we will not adequately man the tanks, planes, and ships and the proper maintenance will not be conducted. If we reduce these accounts too much, we should also stop buying the additional equipment because it makes no sense to put new equipment in the field if it cannot be operated in the proper fashion.

Unfortunately, these accounts have the biggest impact on outlays in the first year and they become a prime target when outlay reductions are needed. We have funded these accounts at the full authorized levels and have even added funds above the budget and authorization to cover dollar shortfalls in critical areas as previously mentioned.

The bill provides the funding levels needed to finance a 3.6-percent military pay raise and a 2-percent civilian pay raise. I realize several different proposals for pay are being considered such as 3.6 percent for both military and civilians but until these issues are settled in conference I would hope we could let this bill stand as it is and we can finalize our funding levels in conference.

The bill recommends $80.5 billion in obligational authority for procurement, an increase of $1.2 billion above last year's level. The procurement accounts have been receiving the largest increases over the past five or six years.

The bill recommends $35.6 billion in obligational authority for research, development, test and evaluation which is $2.1 billion below the fiscal year 1989 level. If we are to ever get a handle on the ever increasing outyear costs of weapons, this is where uneconomic or troubled projects must be stopped.

These totals also include about $20 billion for the National Guard and Reserve forces which includes add-ons above the budget request for equipment.

I would like to be able to include additional funds for Defense programs but the budget situation does not allow me to do so. I realize that the bill is not going to please everyone but I urge your support.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

□ 0950

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, this is a proud day for the House and for me, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. With the assistance and support of the leadership, this is the seventh bill before the House this week, and the last of the 13 regular appropriations bills for fiscal year 1990—and, Mr. Chairman, we are within the budget resolution.

I want to thank all Members of the committee for their efforts and to thank the Members of the House for their support. I especially want to thank the ranking Republican, SILVIO CONTE, for his support and cooperation all year.

LONG ASSOCIATION WITH DEFENSE

Mr. Chairman, I am a longtime member of this subcommittee. I served first on the Naval Appropriations Subcommittee, and then on the Air Force and Defense, including Military Construction, Subcommittees with the exception of about 2 years after World War II when Chairman Cannon asked me to serve on a Subcommittee on Government Corporations. After about 2 years Chairman Cannon asked me to go back on the Defense Subcommittee.

For years I was on the Intelligence Subcommittee, when we did not publicize our actions, and was the author of the provision which caused a private record to be kept. When the present Intelligence Committee was established, I do not think the then Speaker knew we had an Intelligence Committee.

I have been a regular visitor with our President on military matters from President Roosevelt to President Bush—10 Presidents in all.

During World War II, as a member of the Naval Subcommittee, I visited virtually all areas of the war—Europe, China, and the Philippines. I was in Frankfurt, Germany, when our troops were to have gone into Berlin, and we let Russia talk us into letting them go in first.

INVESTIGATIONS OF MILITARY ACTIVITY

I have authorized a number of investigations of military procurement including Operation "Smoke Out" in the early 1950's which disclosed over $11 million in dormant accounts which were recovered.

In 1956, with members of the staff, we visited Russia, rode the trains, drove the highways, and rode the airlines. My report was reprinted twice by our military.

HIGHLY QUALIFIED SUBCOMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

All this Mr. Speaker leads up to the fact that I believe today we have a fine subcommittee and well informed chairman, in JACK MURTHA of Pennsylvania. He has a great record as a marine, as a worker who also serves on the Interior Subcommittee, and lives in an area that is not dominated by military bases. A supporter of the regular services, he is also for a strong Guard and Reserve. He has visited practically every hot spot that has developed during the time he has been on this subcommittee not once but many times.

In recent years he and I with several other members of the subcommittee have inspected our Pacific operations, our Atlantic operations, and our Central American operations where we have been briefed by our top generals and admirals on the problems as they see them. He has a special concern for the service families and the matters that are important to their welfare and morale.

He is supported by a fine ranking Republican member, JOE MCDADE, and all the other members of the subcommittee.

NEED FOR PRODUCTIVE JOBS

Now when we face a period of pulling in our military commitments, giving due regard to the shock to many, many people in the services and out of cutbacks, I do not believe we could find a better qualified person to guide, as well as to protect our domestic economy, finds ways to keep our economy going and to maintain a strong national defense than JACK MURTHA—who understands that you must have a strong domestic economy and the support of the people if you are to have a strong military defense.

To prepare for this change, I introduced H.R. 3029, along with Chairman MURTHA, to restore the jobs bill which worked so well in 1983 to be ready to meet the changed conditions at home and around the world. We should realize that we must have productive jobs to absorb those who will need jobs. When I say "jobs," I mean "productive" jobs. We must be prepared.

Some time ago we introduced H.R. 2540 which would restore revenue sharing which had a great record, for 14 years, assisting in the growth and well-being of over 39,000 communities counties, and cities of the Nation.

The need for restoration of these programs, for the benefit of our Nation's wealth exists now and could well be required for those displaced by reason of limits placed on our military commitment, and the reduction in military contracts.

If so, we have the bills introduced and ready.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bill.

I would first like to acknowledge, and congratulate, the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the job he has done on this, his maiden bill as chairman of the Defense Subcommittee, Mr. Chairman, I speak for all the members of the subcommittee in thanking you for the absolutely outstanding job you've done this year, for the fair and even-handed way you have conducted all our activities, and your decisive and skillful management of this bill.

I also want to commend all members of the subcommittee, particularly the membership on this side for their contributions—my good friends BILL YOUNG, CLARENCE MILLER, and BOB LIVINGSTON—and of course our tremendous staff, for all their hard work, which we have needed more than ever in trying to write this bill at a difficult time.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious—and last week's debate on the Armed Services bill bears this out—that there are serious questions and differences regarding our Nation's defense policy and spending priorities, almost across the board.

We can argue over programs—what deserves to be funded and what does not; we can differ over priorities—personnel versus procurement, or readiness versus research—but one fact is clear about defense and I know of no one who will dispute it:

The consensus for increased defense spending is gone we don't see increases in the future either, and as a result defense faces a lot of tough, wrenching choices ahead.

Each and every member of this committee knows this, especially those of us on this subcommittee who have wrestled with these choices for years.

I would remind all of you that this is the fifth straight year that defense appropriations will lose ground, in terms of inflation. This fact, and the prospect of more reductions ahead, have placed a special burden on the committee this year.

Behind the leadership of Chairman MURTHA, the Defense Subcommittee has responded, by bringing to the House a bill which recommends some tough medicine.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a business-as-usual bill. Far from it. There are a lot of tough, hardnosed, recommendations before you today.

If there's an area or program that's in trouble—be it through mismanagement or technical delays or cost overruns—we cut it. And where we believe there are economies to be gained, or military value—if we could find the money, we put it there.

There is tough medicine in this bill, Mr. Chairman; but I want to remind the House that our subcommittee, the Defense Subcommittee, is about as diverse a committee as there is in the Congress. Liberal to conservative, we have the entire spectrum.

Nevertheless—this "not a business as usual bill" was supported unanimously by the subcommittee, when reported, and it was passed without controversy earlier this week by the full committee.

Why? I think because this bill reflects a judgment that we no longer have the luxury of hoping that troubled programs will come around. Not in today's fiscal climate. There are other areas which merit and need support. So we looked not only to make hard cuts but to put money into those less glamorous areas which provide the backbone of a strong defense.

Even though the chairman has covered some of these already, let me highlight a few areas which we really scrubbed.

For instance, troop levels. We did not shy away from making reductions against troop strength. In the outyears, there will simply have to be reductions in personnel, as the Pentagon struggles with tight dollars.

Our subcommittee faced up to this, and decided to bite the bullet this year, with a recommended troop strength cut of over 15,000, cutting those positions which were associated with the INF weapons in Europe.

Not a pleasant decision, nor an easy one. But my colleagues, by eliminating these positions we propose a move which will, over the next 5 years. lead to over $2 billion in savings.

Defense Department civilian manning was given the same hard look. The bill recommends cuts equivalent to 10,000 civilian work-year slots.

Many other hard cuts—nearly $1 billion from DOD automation and computer programs [ADP], on the basis of documented overruns, mismanagement, and unjustified requirements. After considerable review, we have recommended sizable reductions against many other programs. Throughout the bill, Mr. Chairman, following thoughtful consideration we have recommended these and many similar types of budget cuts, and they are significant.

At the same time, though, we have worked to ensure that those areas which need funding—in fact, require more money than requested—are adequately resourced. Take a long-time concern of the Congress and this committee in particular people and readiness.

There's a consensus on both sides of the Capitol and both sides of the aisle that we can ill-afford to lose the highly trained, qualified and motivated force that we have put in place over the past decade.

So this bill emphasizes a quality force.

There is a 3.6-percent pay raise for both military and civilian defense personnel.

There is over $13 billion in the bill for medical care for service members and their dependents, including a $260 million add over the budget.

And we added $118 million over the budget to help the services retain their trained pilots.

What about readiness? Again, an area that none of us want to see any slippage in, a key pillar of our defense effort that the committee has always strongly supported.

This bill recommends an increase of $4.25 billion in the operations and maintenance accounts from last year's levels.

We have added $1.5 billion over the budget for real property and depot maintenance.

In another key readiness area, to keep up training and war reserve stocks we add $365 million to the ammunition accounts for the Army and Marines, bringing these accounts back from budgeted levels which were the lowest in a decade.

And responding to testimony from the CINC's, we have added $755 million over the budget for so-called preferred munitions, such as the MLRS rocket system, the Stinger surface-to-air missile, and the Hellfire antitank missile. Three-quarters of a billion dollars to keep the bins full, to produce those items which are the CINCs' No. 1 readiness priority at steady, economic rates, so to avoid a return to the days of the hollow army.

Finally, to tackle head on one of our most glaring readiness shortfalls—where there is unanimous opinion of the need and the potential adverse affects to the Nation—the committee has added $1 billion for new sealift vessels.

As a rule, Mr. Chairman, we have emphasized funding to keep major programs at economic rates of production, minimizing unit costs and program turbulence. And mindful of the even tougher budget years ahead, when possible we "buy out" requirements this year.

For example, we fully fund the overhaul of the U.S.S. Enterprise, providing the entire $1.4 billion required upfront, this year, so the Navy can proceed with a more measured and economic process for refitting this carrier—also reducing outyear budget requirements by $1.2 billion.

In summary, the subcommittee reported, without dissent, challenging, lean, tough bill: A lot of cuts, where we saw excess or trouble; adds to preserve key military capability; and good economics and budgeting.

The bill before you makes a strong statement and, in my view, is a basis upon which we try to bring the Pentagon's budget in line with the hard budget realities this Congress and the Nation must confront in the years ahead.

But, I'm constrained to observe that "A funny thing happened on the way to the floor." Last week as we all know the House took up the defense authorization—and in the end produced a bill which has generated both consternation and confusion about one Nation's strategic posture and arms control policies.

In order to respect the will of the House, we have adjusted our bill to those decisions. The House has spoken, and there is nothing to be gained by reopening these questions here today.

Nevertheless, by any standard the decisions reached last week—the cuts levied against the B–2, the deep reductions in SDI taking the program back to less than the 1987 level—and the decisions made on land-based ICBM's have left this Nation's strategic modernization policy in what some have described as a shambles.

For example, I cannot imagine how can we move to an arms control regime which emphasizes less vulnerable, more stabilizing mobile land-based missiles, by continuing to take the MX and Midgetman as hostages in our political debates.

And I fail to understand how our negotiators can proceed toward any START arms reduction treaty—a treaty which could lead to a 50-percent reduction in the ballistic missile forces of the superpowers—when our Nation remains divided over these questions and our future force structure is uncertain and unclear.

I would hope that very soon we can achieve a unified position for the Nation—whereby the Congress can join with the President and move forward in a constructive, unified manner.

But, here we are today, working under the cloud of these decisions, and faced with the need to move forward. So I urge my colleagues on this side to support our work product in order to move the process forward.

I would hope that as in years past, these differences can be worked in the authorizing bill and then our conference. But I would remind you that we have been this way before, Mr. Chairman; and nearly 1 year ago to this day we saw a veto of the defense authorization bill.

I hope we do not have to repeat that experience, but I want to make clear my position that in the event the authorization conference or our conference report carries recommendations on strategic programs along the lines of those in the bill here today, I will oppose that legislation and recommend and support a veto by President Bush.

But today, recognizing that there is a long way to go in the process, I commend this bill to the Members and urge its adoption.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this Defense appropriation bill and encourage my colleagues to support it also—not because it provides for as strong a defense as this Member would like because it does not, but because it is the very best bill we could come up with under the constrained circumstances we faced.

We face increasingly tough decisions as the resources allocated to defense get fewer and fewer. The job is particularly tough when the people that pull these arbitrary figures out of the air do so without regard to the military threat we face as a nation, without regard for our ability to meet that threat, and without regard for what that threat will be in the future.

For the fifth year in a row we are forced to present to you a Defense appropriations bill that has a negative real growth, but I have to tell you that given the constraints we have—this is an extraodinarily strong defense bill.

And the main reason it is as strong as it is, is because of the excellent leadership from our Chairman, JACK MURTHA, and our ranking Republican, JOE MCDADE. JACK MURTHA is thorough, he is tough on witnesses when he needs to be, and he encourages all the members of our subcommittee to actively participate. JOE MCDADE is as ideal a ranking minority member as you could possibly ask for. He knows as much about Defense programs as anyone in the Congress, and he protects the interests of our minority members in a way that allows all of us on the committee—Republicans and Democrats—and each of us with our wide philosophical differences to come together and present you with a bill as balanced as you will find this year.

This product differs in some respects with what the Department wants. Those respects are important and necessary.

In the important readiness accounts like ammunition we have increased the amounts requested to avoid having a hollow force which is well trained but wouldn't have the ammo it needed to go to war.

We've spent billions developing good aircraft programs the Department wants to terminate, programs like the V-22, AHIP, and the F-15. We've proposed continuing them to maximize our investment.

And we've spent up to $6 million to train a pilot to fly in a $30 million aircraft, only to lose him to the commercial airlines because we haven't adjusted his flight pay to keep up with inflation in the last 8 years. This bill corrects that.

In order to get the most for our dollar, we've proposed buying out a number of systems, like the F-14D, the SSN-688 submarine, and the EA-6B.

In cases where the Active Force had a mission which was more suited to the Guard and Reserve, we gave them the responsibility like the weather reconnaissance mission and the SR-71.

We also reduced some programs which I support, mostly due to authorization recommendations which I hope we can fix later in the process, but in some cases we have some concerns about the way the programs are developing. Quite wisely, we want to be sure they are structured properly before we proceed and we want to make absolutely sure we are going down the right path.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a perfect bill. But for the scarce dollars we are being allowed to allocate you are going to get a lot more for the national security of this Nation than the total dollars would lead you to believe.

But I want to warn my colleagues that we are going down a dangerous path by pulling political numbers out of the air without any consideration of the threat to our national security. And unless we pause at some point and reexamine that strategy we are doing a great disservice to the American people.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise temporarily.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. DARDEN] having assumed the chair, Mr. BARNARD, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3072) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1278, FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS REFORM, RECOVERY AND ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1989

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, when the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 1278) to reform, recapitalize, and consolidate the Federal deposit insurance system, to enhance the regulatory and enforcement powers of Federal financial institutions regulatory agencies, and for other purposes, is called up pursuant to the previous order of the House of August 3, 1989, all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration be waived, and that the conference report be considered as read when called up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3072) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA].

The motion was agreed to.

□ 0959

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3072, with Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose earlier today, 52 minutes remained in general debate.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MURTHA] has 25 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE] has 27 remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA].

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Defense appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990 (H.R. 3072). The chairman, Mr. MURTHA, the ranking minority member, Mr. MCDADE, and their staff have worked exceptionally hard to craft this bill. I would like to commend them for their efforts.

H.R. 3072 appropriates $286.4 billion in fiscal year 1990 for the Department of Defense and related activities. This year's figure request for defense represents a small percentage of the gross national product than has been the case in 34 of the last 40 years.

While H.R. 3072 cuts a number of programs, it has added $1 billion over the budget request for real property maintenance to maintain the barracks and base facilities in proper repair and $210 million to the CHAMPUS program to help pay for the increased medical costs facing our service families. This bill also added $513.7 million for depot maintenance to keep our weapons systems on line and operational.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. MURTHA, and his staff for their support and assistance with the provision in the bill relating to the cleanup of Hamilton Air Force Base. This portion of the bill reflects several years of effort to equitably resolve a dispute between Department of Defense, the General Services Administration, and the successful bidder for a parcel of land on Hamilton Air Force Base in California, which was subsequently found to be contaminated.

The provision of the bill relating to Hamilton simply calls for the expenditure of $14.7 million to implement the cleanup of uncontrolled hazardous waste of Hamilton Air Force Base and sets out the key provisions of the proposed agreement between the DOD, GSA and the purchaser.

Mr. Chairman, as the report to accompany the bill states, it is not the intent of the committee or Congress to encourage the Defense Department to proceed with cleanups of hazardous waste out of priority nor to be funded outside of the Defense Environmental Restoration Account. But this provision reflects the fact that Hamilton represents a singular and extraordinary case in which the General Services Administration contracted to sell contaminated Air Force land to a private company. There are no other cases like it in the nation.

Mr. Chairman, this bill not only meets the needs of our Nation's defense, it is also fiscally responsible. I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Thank you.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Chairman, the High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicle, better known as the HMMWV, is a key element of the conventional force structure of the Armed Forces of the United States. It is one of the most successful vehicle program ever undertaken by the U.S. Army. The vehicle manufacture was the first to be certified in the Contractor Performance Certification Program by the Army's Tank/Automotive Command—which is testimony to the superior workmanship of the employees at AM General's Mishawaka plant.

The Army has a number of important uses for the HMMWV but is currently short over 40,000 vehicles. The fiscal year 1990 Defense appropriations bill, as reported out by the House Appropriations Committee, will reduce the President's budget request of $222.5 million for the HMMWV by $46.7 million. The resulting $175.8 million is not sufficient to cover deliveries to our Armed Forces of the number of vehicles negotiated under the new multiyear contract. If the situation is not remedied the negotiations between the U.S. Army and the contractor will have to be reopened. Renegotiation would cause not only a gap in the delivery of these vitally needed vehicles but also an increase in the per-unit cost.

As the Armed Forces of the United States are being called upon to expand their conventional capabilities, to be able to react to emergencies in all areas of the globe, they will need to be light and mobile. It is equipment such as the HMMWV that our forces will need more, not less of.

I share the committee's objective to achieve the most efficient and economical arrangement possible. I am concerned, however, that this reduction may be contrary to what the committee intended.

I will be working closely with this committee and with the Senate in the next few weeks to ensure that full funding is restored in order for the Army to effectively execute this valuable program.

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the committee and its staff for presenting the House with an appropriations bill that required a great deal of careful consideration due to the decline in defense spending. However, despite the fiscal constraints imposed, the committee has preserved a number of programs that are essential to our Nation's defense. One of these is the continued production of the F-14D. This aircraft will help to ensure that our Navy maintains its military superiority as it travels the troubled waters of the world.

I also want to express my appreciation to the committee for their help in restoring the environment of the former Bainbridge Naval Training Center. This project is very important to the residents of Cecil County and to the State of Maryland. And again, I thank the distinguished chairman and the committee for their help in resolving this problem.

□ 1000

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3072

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, for military functions administered by the Department of Defense, and for other purposes, namely:

TITLE I

MILITARY PERSONNEL

MILITARY PERSONNEL, ARMY

For pay, allowances, individual clothing, subsistence, interest on deposits, gratuities, permanent change of station travel (including all expenses thereof for organizational movements), and expenses of temporary duty travel between permanent duty stations, for members of the Army on active duty (except members of reserve components provided for elsewhere), cadets, and aviation cadets; and for payments pursuant to section 156 of Public Law 97-377, as amended (42 U.S.C. 402 note), to section 229(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 429(b)), and to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund; $24,610,000,000.

MILITARY PERSONNEL, NAVY

MILITARY PERSONNEL, MARINE CORPS

For pay, allowances, individual clothing, subsistence, interest on deposits, gratuities, permanent change of station travel (including all expenses thereof for organizational movements), and expenses of temporary duty travel between permanent duty stations, for members of the Marine Corps on active duty (except members of the Reserve provided for elsewhere); and for payments pursuant to section 156 of Public Law 97-377, as amended (42 U.S.C. 402 note), to section 229(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 429(b)), and to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund; $5,813,800,000.

MILITARY PERSONNEL, AIR FORCE

For pay, allowances, individual clothing, subsistence, interest on deposits, gratuities, permanent change of station travel (including all expenses thereof for organizational movements), and expenses of temporary duty travel between permanent duty stations, for members of the Air Force on active duty (except members of reserve components provided for elsewhere), cadets, and aviation cadets; and for payments pursuant to section 156 of Public Law 97-377, as amended (42 U.S.C. 402 note), to section 229(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 429(b)), and to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund; $20,155,800,000.

RESERVE PERSONNEL, ARMY

For pay, allowances, clothing, subsistence, gratuities, travel, and related expenses for personnel of the Army Reserve on active duty under sections 265, 3021, and 3038 of title 10, United States Code, or while serving on active duty under section 672(d) of title 10, United States Code, in connection with performing duty specified in section 678(a) of title 10, United States Code, or while undergoing reserve training, or while performing drills or equivalent duty or other duty, and for members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and expenses authorized by section 2131 of title 10, United States Code, as authorized by law; and for payments to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund; $2,265,700,000.

RESERVE PERSONNEL, NAVY

For pay, allowances, clothing, subsistence, gratuities, travel, and related expenses for personnel of the Navy Reserve on active duty under section 265 of title 10, United States Code, or while serving on active duty under section 672(d) of title 10, United States Code, in connection with performing duty specified in section 678(a) of title 10, United States Code, or while undergoing reserve training, or while performing drills or equivalent duty, and for members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and expenses authorized by section 2131 of title 10, United States Code, as authorized by law; and for payments to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund; $1,591,800,000.

RESERVE PERSONNEL, MARINE CORPS

For pay, allowances, clothing, subsistence, gratuities, travel, and related expenses for personnel of the Marine Corps Reserve on active duty under section 265 of title 10, United States Code, or while serving on active duty under section 672(d) of title 10, United States Code, in connection with performing duty specified in section 678(a) of title 10, United States Code, or while undergoing reserve training, or while performing drills or equivalent duty, and for members of the Marine Corps platoon leaders class, and expenses authorized by section 2131 of title 10, United States Code, as authorized by law; and for payments to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund; $319,200,000.

RESERVE PERSONNEL, AIR FORCE

For pay, allowances, clothing, subsistence, gratuities, travel, and related expenses for personnel of the Air Force Reserve on active duty under sections 265, 8021, and 8038 of title 10, United States Code, or while serving on active duty under section 672(d) of title 10, United States Code, in connection with performing duty specified in section 678(a) of title 10, United States Code, or while undergoing reserve training, or while performing drills or equivalent duty or other duty, and for members of the Air Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and expenses authorized by section 2131 of title 10, United States Code, as authorized by law; and for payments to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund; $674,400,000.

NATIONAL GUARD PERSONNEL, ARMY

For pay, allowances, clothing, subsistence, gratuities, travel, and related expenses for personnel of the Army National Guard while on duty under section 265, 3021, or 3496 of title 10 or section 708 of title 32, United States Code, or while serving on duty under section 672(d) of title 10 or section 502(f) of title 32, United States Code, in connection with performing duty specified in section 678(a) of title 10, United States Code, or while undergoing training, or while performing drills or equivalent duty or other duty, and expenses authorized by section 2131 of title 10, United States Code, as authorized by law; and for payments to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund; $3,252,200,000.

NATIONAL GUARD PERSONNEL, AIR FORCE

For pay, allowances, clothing, subsistence, gratuities, travel, and related expenses for personnel of the Air National Guard on duty under section 265, 8021, or 8496 of title 10 or section 708 of title 32, United States Code, or while serving on duty under section 672(d) of title 10 or section 502(f) of title 32, United States Code, in connection with performing duty specified in section 678(a) of title 10, United States Code, or while undergoing training, or while performing drills or equivalent duty, or other duty, and expenses authorized by section 2131 of title 10, United States Code, as authorized by law; and for payments to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund; $1,044,800,000.

Mr. MURTHA (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title I of the bill be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against title I?

Are there any amendments to title I?

If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II

Mr. MURTHA (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title V of the bill be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against the title?

Are there any amendments to the title?

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DRUG INTERDICTION, DEFENSE

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

For Department of Defense operating, procurement, and research, development, test, and evaluation costs associated with the detection and monitoring of aerial and maritime transit of illegal drugs into the United States and for other missions as authorized, $450,000,000 for transfer to "Military Personnel," "Operation and Maintenance," "Procurement," and "Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation": Provided, That not less than $70,000,000 shall be available only for drug interdiction activities of the Army National Guard and the Air National Guard: Provided further, That the funds appropriated by this paragraph shall be available for obligation for the same period and for the same purpose as the appropriation to which transferred and the transfer authority provided in this paragraph is in addition to any transfer authority contained elsewhere in this Act.

TITLE IX

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 9001. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall be used for publicity or propaganda purposes not authorized by the Congress.

SEC. 9002. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, the Secretary of Defense and the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force, respectively, if they should deem it advantageous to the national defense, and if in their opinions the existing facilities of the Department of Defense are inadequate, are authorized to procure services in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, and to pay in connection therewith travel expenses of individuals, including actual transportation and per diem in lieu of subsistence while traveling from their homes or places of business to official duty stations and return as may be authorized by law: Provided, That such contracts may be renewed annually.

SEC. 9003. During the current fiscal year, provisions of law prohibiting the payment of compensation to, or employment of, any person not a citizen of the United States shall not apply to personnel of the Department of Defense.

SEC. 9004. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, the Secretary of Defense and each purchasing and contracting agency of the Department of Defense shall assist American small and minority-owned business to participate equitably in the furnishing of commodities and services financed with funds appropriated under this Act by increasing, to an optimum level, the resources and number of personnel jointly assigned to promoting both small and minority business involvement in purchases financed with funds appropriated herein, and by making available or causing to be made available to such businesses, information, as far in advance as possible, with respect to purchases proposed to be financed with funds appropriated under this Act, and by assisting small and minority business concerns to participate equitably as subcontractors on contracts financed with funds appropriated herein, and by otherwise advocating and providing small and minority business opportunities to participate in the furnishing of commodities and services financed with funds appropriated by this Act.

SEC. 9005. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year, unless expressly so provided herein.

SEC. 9006. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, no part of the appropriations available to the Department of Defense shall be available for any expense of operating aircraft under the jurisdiction of the armed forces for the purpose of proficiency flying, as defined in Department of Defense Directive 1340.4, except in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense. Such regulations (1) may not require such flying except that required to maintain proficiency in anticipation of a member's assignment to combat operations and (2) such flying may not be permitted in cases of members who have been assigned to a course of instruction of ninety days or more.

SEC. 9007. No more than 20 per centum of the appropriations in this Act which are limited for obligation during the current fiscal year shall be obligated during the last two months of the fiscal year: Provided, That this section shall not apply to obligations for support of active duty training of reserve components or summer camp training of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, or the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, Army.

SEC. 9008. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, the agencies of the Department of Defense may accept the use of real property from foreign countries for the United States in accordance with mutual defense agreements or occupational arrangements and may accept services furnished by foreign countries as reciprocal international courtesies or as services customarily made available without charge; and such agencies may use the same for the support of the United States forces in such areas without specific appropriation therefor.

In addition to the foregoing, hereafter agencies of the Department of Defense may accept real property, services, and commodities from foreign countries for the use of the United States in accordance with mutual defense agreements or occupational arrangements and such agencies may use the same for the support of the United States forces in such areas, without specific appropriations therefor: Provided, That within thirty days after the end of each quarter the Secretary of Defense shall render to Congress and to the Office of Management and Budget a full report of such property, supplies, and commodities received during such quarter.

SEC. 9009. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act, except for small purchases in amounts not exceeding $25,000, shall be available for the procurement of any article or item of food, clothing, tents, tarpaulins, covers, cotton and other natural fiber products, woven silk or woven silk blends, spun silk yarn for cartridge cloth, synthetic fabric or coated synthetic fabric, canvas products, or wool (whether in the form of fiber or yarn or contained in fabrics, materials, or manufactured articles), or any item of individual equipment manufactured from or containing such fibers, yarns, fabrics, or materials, or specialty metals including stainless steel flatware, or hand or measuring tools, not grown, reprocessed, reused, or produced in the United States or its possessions, except to the extent that the Secretary of the Department concerned shall determine that satisfactory quality and sufficient quantity of any articles or items of food, individual equipment, tents, tarpaulins, covers, or clothing or any form of cotton or other natural fiber products, woven silk and woven silk blends, spun silk yarn for cartridge cloth, synthetic fabric or coated synthetic fabric, canvas products, wool, or specialty metals including stainless steel flatware, grown, reprocessed, reused, or produced in the United States or its possessions cannot be procured as and when needed at United States market prices and except procurements outside the United States in support of combat operations, procurements by vessels in foreign waters, and emergency procurements or procurements of perishable foods by establishments located outside the United States for the personnel attached thereto: Provided, That nothing herein shall preclude the procurement of specialty metals or chemical warfare protective clothing produced outside the United States or its possessions when such procurement is necessary to comply with agreements with foreign governments requiring the United States to purchase supplies from foreign sources for the purposes of offsetting sales made by the United States Government or United States firms under approved programs serving defense requirements or where such procurement is necessary in furtherance of agreements with foreign governments in which both governments agree to remove barriers to purchases of supplies produced in the other country or services performed by sources of the other country, so long as such agreements with foreign governments comply, where applicable, with the requirements of section 36 of the Arms Export Control Act and with section 2457 of title 10, United States Code: Provided further, That nothing herein shall preclude the procurement of foods manufactured or processed in the United States or its possessions.

SEC. 9010. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, appropriations available to the Department of Defense for pay of civilian employees shall be available for uniforms, or allowances therefor, as authorized by section 5901 of title 5, United States Code.

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

SEC. 9011. Upon determination by the Secretary of Defense that such action is necessary in the national interest, he may, with the approval of the Office of Management and Budget, transfer not to exceed $3,000,000,000 of working capital funds of the Department of Defense or funds made available in this Act to the Department of Defense for military functions (except military construction) between such appropriations or funds or any subdivision thereof, to be merged with and to be available for the same purposes, and for the same time period, as the appropriation or fund to which transferred: Provided, That such authority to transfer may not be used unless for higher priority items, based on unforeseen military requirements, than those for which originally appropriated and in no case where the item for which funds are requested has been denied by Congress: Provided further, That the Secretary of Defense shall notify the Congress promptly of all transfers made pursuant to this authority.

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

SEC. 9012. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, cash balances in working capital funds of the Department of Defense established pursuant to section 2208 of title 10, United States Code, may be maintained in only such amounts as are necessary at any time for cash disbursements to be made from such funds: Provided, That transfers may be made between such funds in such amounts as may be determined by the Secretary of Defense, with the approval of the Office of Management and Budget, except that transfers between a stock fund account and an industrial fund account may not be made unless the Secretary of Defense has notified the Congress of the proposed transfer. Except in amounts equal to the amounts appropriated to working capital funds in this Act, no obligations may be made against a working capital fund to procure war reserve material inventory, unless the Secretary of Defense has notified the Congress prior to any such obligation.

SEC. 9013. (a) None of the funds available to the Department of Defense in this Act shall be used by the Secretary of a military department to purchase coal or coke from foreign nations for use at United States defense facilities in Europe when coal from the United States is available.

(b) None of the funds available to the Department of Defense in this Act shall be utilized for the conversion of heating plants from coal to oil or coal to natural gas at defense facilities in Europe: Provided, That this limitation shall apply to any authority granted pursuant to section 9008 of this Act.

(c) None of the funds available to the Department of Defense in the Act shall be used to enter into any agreement or contract to convert a heating facility at military installations in Europe to district heat, direct natural gas, or other sources of fuel.

SEC. 9014. Funds appropriated by this Act may not be used to initiate a special access program without prior notification 30 days in advance to the Committees on Appropriations and Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives.

SEC. 9015. No part of the funds in this Act shall be available to prepare or present a request to the Committees on Appropriations for reprogramming of funds, unless for higher priority items, based on unforeseen military requirements, than those for which originally appropriated and in no case where the item for which reprogramming is requested has been denied by the Congress.

SEC. 9016. None of the funds contained in this Act available for the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services under the provisions for section 1079(a) of title 10, United States Code, shall be available for reimbursement of any physician or other authorized individual provider of medical care in excess of the lower of: (a) the eightieth percentile of the customary charges made for similar services in the same locality where the medical care was furnished, as determined for physicians in accordance with section 1079(h) of title 10, United States Code; or (b) the allowable amounts in effect during fiscal year 1988 increased to the extent justified by economic changes as reflected in appropriate economic index data similar to that used pursuant to title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

SEC. 9017. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, none of the funds available to the Department of Defense shall be available for the planning or execution of programs which utilize amounts credited to Department of Defense appropriations or funds pursuant to the provisions of section 37(a) of the Arms Export Control Act representing payment for the actual value of defense articles specified in section 21(a)(1)(A) of that Act: Provided, That such amounts shall be credited to the Special Defense Acquisition Fund, as authorized by law, or, to the extent not so credited shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts as provided in section 3302(b) of title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 9018. None of the funds appropriated by this Act for programs of the Central Intelligence Agency shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year, except for funds appropriated for the Reserve for Contingencies, which shall remain available until September 30, 1991.

SEC. 9019. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, the Department of Defense may enter into contracts to recover indebtedness to the United States pursuant to section 3718 of title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 9020. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, none of the funds available to the Department of Defense to provide medical care in the United States on an inpatient basis to foreign military and diplomatic personnel or their dependents unless the Department of Defense is reimbursed for the costs of providing such care: Provided, That reimbursements for medical care covered by this section shall be credited to the appropriations against which charges have been made for providing such care, except that inpatient medical care may be provided in the United States without cost to military personnel and their dependents from a foreign country if comparable care is made available to a comparable number of United States military personnel in that foreign country.

SEC. 9021. None of the funds provided in this Act shall be available to initiate (1) a multiyear contract that employs economic order quantity procurement in excess of $20,000,000 in any one year of the contract or that includes an unfunded contingent liability in excess of $20,000,000, or (2) a contract for advance procurement leading to a multiyear contract that employs economic order quantity procurement in excess of $20,000,000 in any one year, unless the Committees on Appropriations and Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives have been notified at least thirty days in advance of the proposed contract award: Provided, That no part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall be available to initiate a multiyear contract for which the economic order quantity advance procurement is not funded at least to the limits of the Government's liability: Provided further, That no part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall be available to initiate multiyear procurement contracts for any systems or component thereof if the value of the multiyear contract would exceed $500,000,000 unless specifically provided in this Act: Provided further, That no multiyear procurement contract can be terminated without 10-day prior notification to the Committees on Appropriations and Armed Services of the House of Representatives and the Senate: Provided further, That the execution of multiyear authority shall require the use of a present value analysis to determine lowest cost compared to an annual procurement. Funds appropriated in title III of this Act may be used for multiyear procurement contracts as follows:

M-1 tank engines;
M-1 tank fire control;
Bradley Fighting Vehicle;
Family of Heavy Tactical Vehicles;
Combined Effects Munition; and DDG-51 Destroyer (Two years).

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

SEC. 9022. None of the funds appropriated in this Act may be made available through transfer, reprogramming, or other means between the Central Intelligence Agency and the Department of Defense for any intelligence or special activity different from that previously justified to the Congress unless the Director of Central Intelligence or the Secretary of Defense has notified the House and Senate Appropriations Committees of the intent to make such funds available for such activity.

SEC. 9023. None of the funds appropriated by this Act shall be available to convert a position in support of the Army Reserve, Air Force Reserve, Army National Guard, and Air National Guard occupied by, or programmed to be occupied by, a (civilian) military technician to a position to be held by a person in an active Guard or Reserve status if that conversion would reduce the total number of positions occupied by, or programmed to be occupied by, (civilian) military technicians of the component concerned, below 71,421: Provided, That none of the funds appropriated by this Act shall be available to support more than 13,371 positions in support of the Army Reserve, 25,914 positions in support of the Army National Guard, or 8,134 positions in support of the Air National Guard occupied by, or programmed to be occupied by, persons in an active Guard or Reserve status: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated by this Act may be used to include (civilian) military technicians in computing civilian personnel ceilings, including statutory or administratively imposed ceilings, on activities in support of the Army Reserve, Air Force Reserve, Army National Guard or Air National Guard.

SEC. 9024. (a) The provisions of section 115(b)(2) of title 10, United States Code, shall not apply with respect to fiscal year 1990 or with respect to the appropriation of funds for that year.

(b) During fiscal year 1990, the civilian personnel of the Department of Defense may not be managed on the basis of any end-strength, and the management of such personnel during that fiscal year shall not be subject to any constraint or limitation (known as an end-strength) on the number of such personnel who may be employed on the last day of such fiscal year.

(c) The fiscal year 1991 budget request for the Department of Defense as well as all justification material and other documentation supporting the fiscal year 1991 Department of Defense budget request shall be prepared and submitted to the Congress as if subsections (a) and (b) of this provision were effective with regard to fiscal year 1991.

SEC. 9025. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, none of the funds made available to the Department of Defense shall be used in any way for the leasing to non-Federal agencies in the United States of aircraft or vehicles owned or operated by the Department of Defense when suitable aircraft or vehicles are commercially available in the private sector: Provided, That nothing in this section shall affect authorized and established procedures for the sale of surplus aircraft or vehicles: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall prohibit the leasing of helicopters authorized by section 1463 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act of 1986.

SEC. 9026. None of the funds made available by this Act shall be used in any way, directly or indirectly, to influence congressional action on any legislation or appropriation matters pending before the Congress.

SEC. 9027. None of the funds appropriated by this Act shall be obligated for the pay of any individual who is initially employed after the date of enactment of this Act as a technician in the administration and training of the Army Reserve and the maintenance and repair of supplies issued to the Army Reserve unless such individual is also a military member of the Army Reserve troop program unit that he or she is employed to support. Those technicians employed by the Army Reserve in areas other than Army Reserve troop program units need only be members of the Selected Reserve.

SEC. 9028. None of the funds appropriated by this Act shall be used to purchase dogs or cats or otherwise fund the use of dogs or cats for the purpose of training Department of Defense students or other personnel in surgical or other medical treatment of wounds produced by any type of weapon: Provided, That the standards of such training with respect to the treatment of animals shall adhere to the Federal Animal Welfare Law and to those prevailing in the civilian medical community.

SEC. 9029. None of the funds available to the Department of Defense may be used for the floating storage of petroleum or petroleum products except in vessels of or belonging to the United States.

SEC. 9030. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, funds available to the Department of Defense may be used by the Department of Defense for the use of helicopters and motorized equipment at Defense installations for removal of feral burros and horses.

SEC. 9031. Within the funds appropriated for the operation and maintenance of the Armed Forces, funds are hereby appropriated pursuant to section 401 of title 10, United States Code, for humanitarian and civic assistance costs under chapter 20 of title 10, United States Code. Such funds may also be obligated for humanitarian and civic assistance costs incidental to authorized operations and pursuant to authority granted in section 401 of chapter 20 of title 10, United States Code, and these obligations shall be reported to Congress on September 30 of each year: Provided, That funds available for operation and maintenance shall be available for providing humanitarian and similar assistance by using Civic Action Teams in the Trust Territories of the Pacific Islands and freely associated states of Micronesia, pursuant to the Compact of Free Association as authorized by Public Law 99-239.

SEC. 9032. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretaries of the Army and Air Force may authorize the retention in an active status until age sixty of any officer who would otherwise be removed from an active status and who is employed as a National Guard or Reserve technician in a position in which active status in a reserve component of the Army or Air Force is required as a condition of that employment.

SEC. 9033. Funds available for operation and maintenance under this Act, may be used in connection with demonstration projects and other activities authorized by section 1092 of title 10, United States Code.

SEC. 9034. (a) None of the funds appropriated by this Act, shall be used to make contributions to the Department of Defense Education Benefits Fund pursuant to section 2006(g) of title 10, United States Code, representing the normal cost for future benefits under section 1415(c) of title 38, United States Code, for any member of the armed services who, on or after the date of enactment of this Act:

(1) enlists in the armed services for a period of active duty of less than three years; or

(2) receives an enlistment bonus under section 308a or 308f of title 37, United States Code, nor shall any amounts representing the normal cost of such future benefits be transferred from the Fund by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs pursuant to section 2006(d) of title 10, United States Code; nor shall the Secretary of Veterans Affairs pay such benefits to any such member: Provided, That, in the case of a member covered by clause (1), these limitations shall not apply to members in combat arms skills.

(b) None of the funds appropriated by this Act shall be available for the basic pay and allowances of any member of the Army participating as a full-time student and receiving benefits paid by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs from the Department of Defense Education Benefits Fund when time spent as a full-time student is credited toward completion of a service commitment: Provided, That this subsection shall not apply to those members who have reenlisted with this option prior to October 1, 1987: Provided further, That this subsection applies to active components of the Army.

SEC. 9035. Funds appropriated in this Act shall be available for the payment of not more than 75 percent of the charges of a postsecondary educational institution for the tuition or expenses of an officer in the Ready Reserve of the Army National Guard or Army Reserve for education or training during his off-duty periods, except that no part of the charges may be paid unless the officer agrees to remain a member of the Ready Reserve for at least four years after completion of such training or education.

SEC. 9036. None of the funds appropriated by this Act shall be available to convert to contractor performance an activity or function of the Department of Defense that, on or after the date of enactment of this Act, is performed by more than ten Department of Defense civilian employees until a most efficient and cost-effective organization analysis is completed on such activity or function and certification of the analysis is made to the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate: Provided, That this section shall not apply to a commercial or industrial type function of the Department of Defense that: (1) is included on the procurement list established pursuant to section 2 of the Act of June 25, 1938 (41 U.S.C. 47), popularly referred to as the Wagner O'Day Act; or (2) is planned to be converted to performance by a qualified nonprofit agency for the blind or by a qualified nonprofit agency for other severely handicapped individuals in accordance with that Act.

SEC. 9037. None of the funds appropriated in this Act to the Department of the Army may be obligated for procurement of 120mm mortars or 120mm mortar ammunition manufactured outside of the United States: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to procurement of such mortars or ammunition required for testing, evaluation, type classification or equipping the Army's Ninth Infantry Division (Motorized).

SEC. 9038. During the current fiscal year and hereafter, appropriations made available to the Department of Defense may be used at sites formerly used by the Department of Defense for removal of unsafe buildings or debris of the Department of Defense: Provided, That such removal must be completed before the property is released from Federal Government control, other than property conveyed to State or local government entities or native corporations.

SEC. 9039. None of the funds appropriated in this Act to the Department of the Army may be obligated for depot maintenance of equipment unless such funds provide for civilian personnel strengths at the Army depots performing communications-electronics depot maintenance at an amount above the strengths assigned to those depots on September 30, 1985: Provided, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply to civilian personnel who perform caretaker-type functions at these installations: Provided further, That nothing in this provision shall cause undue reductions of other Army depots, as determined by the Secretary of the Army.

SEC. 9040. None of the funds appropriated or made available by this Act may be obligated for acquisition of major automated information systems which have not successfully completed oversight reviews required by Defense Department regulations: Provided, That none of the funds appropriated or made available by this Act may be obligated on Composite Health Care System acquisition contracts if such contracts would cause the total life cycle cost estimate of $1,100,000,000 expressed in fiscal year 1986 constant dollars to be exceeded.

SEC. 9041. None of the funds provided by this Act may be used to pay the salaries of any person or persons who authorize the transfer of unobligated and deobligated appropriations into the Reserve for Contingencies of the Central Intelligence Agency.

SEC. 9042. Funds appropriated by this Act for construction projects of the Central Intelligence Agency, which are transferred to another Agency for execution, shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 9043. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Navy may use funds appropriated to charter ships to be used as auxiliary minesweepers providing that the owner agrees that these ships may be activated as Navy Reserve ships with Navy Reserve crews used in training exercises conducted in accordance with law and policies governing Naval Reserve forces.

SEC. 9044. None of the funds in this Act may be used to execute a contract for the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) Reform Initiative that exceeds the total fiscal year 1987 costs for CHAMPUS care provided in California and Hawaii, plus normal and reasonable adjustments for price and program growth.

SEC. 9045. Funds appropriated or made available in this Act shall be obligated and expended to continue to fully utilize the facilities at the United States Army Engineer's Waterways Experiment Station, including the continued availability of the supercomputer capability and the planned upgrade of this capability: Provided, That none of the funds in this Act may be used to purchase any supercomputer which is not manufactured in the United States, unless the Secretary of Defense certifies to the Armed Services and Appropriations Committees of Congress that such an acquisition must be made in order to acquire capability for national security purposes that is not available from United States manufacturers.

SEC. 9046. For the purposes of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-177) as amended by the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987 (Public Law 100-119), the term program, project, and activity for appropriations contained in this Act shall be defined as the most specific level of budget items identified in the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1990, the accompanying House and Senate Committee reports, the conference report and accompanying joint explanatory statement of the managers of the Committee of Conference, the related classified annexes, and the P-1 and R-1 budget justification documents as subsequently modified by Congressional action: Provided, however, That the following exception to the above definition shall apply:

For the Military Personnel and the Operation and Maintenance accounts, the term "program, project, and activity" is defined as the appropriations accounts contained in the Department of Defense Appropriations Act.

SEC. 9047. (a) Of the funds appropriated to the Army, $12,000,000 shall be available only for the Reserve Component Automation System (RCAS): Provided, That none of these funds can be expended:

(1) except as approved by the Chief of the National Guard Bureau;

(2) unless RCAS resource management functions are performed by the National Guard Bureau;

(3) unless the RCAS contract source selection official is the Chief of the National Guard Bureau;

(4) to pay the salary of an RCAS program manager who has not been selected and approved by the Chief of the National Guard Bureau and chartered by the Chief of the National Guard Bureau and the Secretary of the Army;

(5) unless the Program Manager (PM) charter makes the PM accountable to the source selection official and fully defines his authority, responsibility, reporting channels and organizational structure;

(6) to pay the salaries of individuals assigned to the RCAS program management office, source selection evaluation board, and source selection advisory board unless such organizations are comprised of personnel chosen jointly by the Chiefs of the National Guard Bureau and the Army Reserve;

(7) to award a contract for development or acquisition of RCAS unless such contract is competitively awarded under procedures of OMB Circular A-109 for an integrated system consisting of software, hardware, and communications equipment and unless such contract precludes the use of Government furnished equipment, operating systems, and executive and applications software; and

(8) unless RCAS performs its own classified information processing.

(b) None of the funds appropriated or made available in this Act are available for procurement of Tactical Army Combat Service Support Computer Systems (TACCS) unless at least 50 percent of the TACCS computers procured with Army fiscal year 1990 funds are provided to the Reserve Component.

(c) None of the funds appropriated in this Act are available for procurement of mini- and micro-computers for the Army Reserve Component which duplicate functions to be included in the RCAS contract.

SEC. 9048. None of the funds provided for the Department of Defense in this Act may be obligated or expended for fixed price-type contracts in excess of $10,000,000 for the development of a major system or subsystem unless the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition determines, in writing, that program risk has been reduced to the extent that realistic pricing can occur, and that the contract type permits an equitable and sensible allocation of program risk between the contracting parties: Provided, That the Under Secretary may not delegate this authority to any persons who hold a position in the Office of the Secretary of Defense below the level of Assistant Secretary of Defense: Provided further, That at least thirty days before making a determination under this section the Secretary of Defense will notify the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives in writing of his intention to authorize such a fixed price-type developmental contract and shall include in the notice an explanation of the reasons for the determination.

SEC. 9049. Monetary limitations on the purchase price of a passenger motor vehicle shall not apply to vehicles purchased for intelligence activities conducted pursuant to Executive Order 12333 or successor orders.

SEC. 9050. Not to exceed $35,000,000 of the funds available to the Department of the Army during the current fiscal year may be used to fund the construction of classified military projects within the Continental United States, including design, architecture, and engineering services.

SEC. 9051. None of the funds in this Act may be available for the purchase by the Department of Defense (and its departments and agencies) of welded shipboard anchor and mooring chain 4 inches in diameter and under manufactured outside the United States.

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

SEC. 9052. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Department of Defense may transfer prior year unobligated balances and funds appropriated in this Act to the operation and maintenance appropriations of the reserve components for the purpose of providing military technician pay the same exemption from sequestration set forth in the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-177) as amended by the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987 (Public Law 100-119) as that granted the other military personnel accounts: Provided, That any transfer made pursuant to any use of the authority provided by this provision shall be limited so that the amounts reprogrammed to the operation and maintenance appropriations of the reserve components do not exceed the amounts sequestered under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-177) as amended by the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987 (Public Law 100-119): Provided further, That the authority to make transfers pursuant to this section is in addition to the authority to make transfers under other provisions of this Act: Provided further, That the Secretary of Defense may proceed with such transfer after notifying the Appropriations Committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate twenty legislative days before any such transfer of funds under this provision and if no objection is expressed within that twenty legislative day period.

SEC. 9053. None of the funds available to the Department of the Navy may be used to enter into any contract for the overhaul, repair, or maintenance of any naval vessel on the West Coast of the United States which includes charges for interport differential as an evaluation factor for award.

SEC. 9054. None of the funds available to the Central Intelligence Agency, the Department of Defense, or any other agency or entity of the United States Government may be obligated or expended during fiscal year 1990 to provide funds, materiel, or other assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance unless in accordance with the terms and conditions specified by section 104 of the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1990.

SEC. 9055. None of the funds provided in this Act may be obligated or expended for the procurement of LANDSAT or SPOT remote sensing data except by the Defense Mapping Agency, in its role as primary action office for such purchases by Department of Defense agencies and military departments.

SEC. 9056. The designs of the Army LHX helicopter, the Navy Advanced Tactical Aircraft, the Air Force Advanced Tactical Fighter, and any variants of these aircraft, must incorporate Joint Integrated Avionics Working Group standard avionics specifications no later than 1998.

SEC. 9057. Such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1990 pay raises for programs funded by this Act shall be absorbed within the levels appropriated in this Act.

SEC. 9058. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Defense shall require that a provider of services under the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS) also provide services to members of the armed forces pursuant to section 1074(c), title 10, in accordance with the same reimbursement rules, subject to modifications deemed appropriate by the Secretary of Defense, as apply under CHAMPUS.

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

SEC. 9059. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, during fiscal year 1990, the Secretary of Defense shall make available to the United States Coast Guard without reimbursement not less than $140,000,000 in supplies, fuel, training assistance, medical support, and other operational support, exclusive of administrative costs; and from funds made available in this Act, $160,000,000 shall be transferred to Coast Guard "Operating Expenses".

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

SEC. 9060. In addition to any other transfer authority contained in this Act, amounts from working capital funds shall be transferred to the Operation and Maintenance appropriations contained in this Act to be merged with and to be available for the same purposes and for the same time period as the appropriations to which transferred, as follows:

(a) from the Defense Stock Fund, not less than $135,000,000, of which $30,000,000 shall be transferred to Operation and Maintenance, Army Reserve; $15,000,000 shall be transferred to Operation and Maintenance, Navy Reserve; $30,000,000 shall be transferred to Operation and Maintenance, Air Force Reserve; $30,000,000 shall be transferred to Operation and Maintenance, Army National Guard; and $30,000,000 shall be transferred to Operation and Maintenance, Air National Guard.

(b) from the Army Stock Fund, not less than $114,000,000 shall be transferred to Operation and Maintenance, Army; from the Navy Stock Fund, not less than $437,200,000 shall be transferred to Operation and Maintenance, Navy; and from the Air Force Stock Fund, not less than $156,000,000 shall be transferred to Operation and Maintenance, Air Force.

SEC. 9061. The Secretary of Defense shall take such action as necessary to assure that a minimum of 50 percent of the polyacrylonitrile (PAN) carbon fiber requirement be procured from domestic sources by 1992: Provided, That the annual goals to achieve this requirement be as follows: 15 percent of the total DOD requirement by 1988; 15 percent of total DOD requirement by 1989; 20 percent of the total DOD requirement by 1990; 25 percent of the total DOD requirement by 1991; and 50 percent of the total DOD requirement by 1992.

SEC. 9062. Of the funds appropriated, reimbursable expenses incurred by the Department of Defense on behalf of the Soviet Union in monitoring United States implementation of the Treaty Between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the Elimination of Their Intermediate-Range or Shorter-Range Missiles ("INF Treaty"), concluded December 8, 1987, may be treated as orders received and obligation authority for the applicable appropriation, account, or fund increased accordingly. Likewise, any reimbursements received for such costs may be credited to the same appropriation, account, or fund to which the expenses were charged: Provided, That reimbursements which are not received within one hundred and eighty days after submission of an appropriate request for payment shall be subject to interest at the current rate established pursuant to section 2(b)(1)(B) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 (59 Stat. 526). Interest shall begin to accrue on the one hundred and eighty first day following submission of an appropriate request for payment.

SEC. 9063. During the current fiscal year, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Department of Defense shall exclude from diagnosis related groups regulations: (a) inpatient hospital services in a hospital whose patients are predominantly under 18 years of age and (b) such services in any hospital with respect to (1) discharges involving newborns and infants who are less than 29 days old upon admission (other than discharges classified to diagnosis related group 391), (2) discharges involving pediatric bone marrow transplants, (3) discharges involving children who have been determined to be HIV seropositive, and (4) discharges involving pediatric cystic fibrosis. The Department of Defense may include the hospital and neonatal services identified in subsections (a) and (b) in diagnosis related group regulations during fiscal year 1990 when the Department of Defense has adopted special measures to assure equitable and adequate payment for such services, such special measures including: (1) a "children's hospital differential" adjustment for each discharge of a CHAMPUS patient from a children's hospital that will assure that had the regulations been in effect for fiscal year 1988 they would have resulted in estimated aggregate CHAMPUS payments to children's hospitals not less than estimated aggregate CHAMPUS payments to such hospitals for discharges occurring during that fiscal year under the regulations in effect during fiscal year 1988 (recognizing that payments in subsequent years will vary based on volume, case mix intensity, and other factors); for a transitional period of three years the children's hospital differential will be computed on a hospital specific basis for children's hospitals with 50 or more CHAMPUS discharges in fiscal year 1988 and will be computed in aggregate for children's hospitals with less than 50 discharges in a year; (2) a children's hospital differential hold harmless provision, providing for retrospective and prospective corrections; (3) a special outlier policy for children's hospitals and neonatal services that combines the thresholds in effect under CHAMPUS DRG regulations for fiscal year 1988 with the higher marginal cost factors proposed by 53 Fed. Reg. 20580 (June 3, 1988); (4) a refinement to the DRGs for neonatal services to account for birthweight, surgery, and the presence of multiple, major, and other neonatal problems; (5) incorporation of annual updates to the classification features included in the regulation for neonatal services; (6) a provision for making interim payments for cases that are especially lengthy or expensive; and (7) a commitment to examine possible further uses of Pediatric Modified DRGs in the future: Provided, That the Department of Defense shall ensure that beneficiaries not be required to pay more in cost-shares under the foregoing exclusions than those which would have been imposed if the diagnosis related group system had not been instituted: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, appropriations available to the Department of Defense may be used to pay the difference between the cost-shares paid by beneficiaries under the foregoing and the billed charges for services covered by this provision.

SEC. 9064. The total amount appropriated to or for the use of the Department of Defense by this Act is reduced by $150,000,000 to reflect savings resulting from the decreased use of consulting services by the Department of Defense. The Secretary of Defense shall allocate the amount reduced in the preceding sentence and not later than March 1, 1990, report to the Senate and House Committees on Appropriations how this reduction was allocated among the Services and Defense Agencies.

SEC. 9065. Funds available in this Act may be used to provide transportation for the next-of-kin of individuals who have been prisoners of war or missing in action from the Vietnam era to an annual meeting in the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of Defense may prescribe.

SEC. 9066. (a) Within the funds made available to the Air Force under title II of this Act, the Air Force shall use such funds as necessary, but not to exceed $14,700,000, to execute the cleanup of uncontrolled hazardous waste contamination in accordance with the Record of Decision on Landfill No. 26 at Hamilton Air Force Base, in Novato, in the State of California: Provided, That no funds shall be expended to implement the Record of Decision on Landfill No. 26 at Hamilton Air Force Base until such time as the Department of Defense, the General Services Administration and the purchaser of the Sale Parcel reach an agreement resolving all disputes relating to the cleanup of such landfill, except that funds may be expended on any and all pre-construction or related activities.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Department of Defense and the General Services Administration shall enter into an agreement with the purchaser of the aforementioned Sale Parcel which shall provide that:

(1) the United States Government will retain and develop the site plus a suitable buffer area as an accessible open space park;

(2) the original purchase price of the parcel shall be reduced by an amount which shall be agreed to by the aforementioned parties; and,

(3) the purchaser shall be granted the right to withdraw from the sales contract at any time prior to the closing of the sale and receive its deposit and any pre-development expenses as documented by the General Accounting Office incurred since the date of the General Services Administration auction, plus accrued interest, in return for the release from any and all damages and claims against the United States Government with respect to the site and contamination.

(c) In the event that the purchaser of the Sale Parcel exercises its option to withdraw from the sale as provided in subsection (b)(3) of this section, the purchasers' deposit of $4,500,000 shall be returned by the General Services Administration and any funds eligible for reimbursement under subsection (b)(3) shall come from the funds made available to the Department of Defense by this Act.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the account from which funds are used to carry out subsection (a) of this section, shall be reimbursed for up to $7,700,000 from the proceeds collected upon the closing of the aforementioned Sale Parcel.

SEC. 9067. None of the funds in this Act may be obligated or expended to conduct an Environmental Impact Study on the feasibility of purchasing acreage in Georgia for the proposed Southeast Weapons Range.

SEC. 9068. None of the funds in this Act available to the Department of Defense or Navy shall be obligated or expended to establish or operate TAR detailing and enlisted placement functions or billets at the Naval Military Personnel Command headquarters or to transfer any Naval TAR, seamen, firemen, and airmen detailing functions and billets from the Naval Reserve Personnel Center and the Enlisted Personnel Management Center.

SEC. 9069. None of the funds appropriated in this Act may be available for offshore procurement of second or third generation night vision image intensifier tubes and devices: Provided, That when adequate domestic supplies are not available to meet Department of Defense requirements on a timely basis, the Secretary of the service responsible for the procurement may waive this restriction on a case-by-case basis by certifying in writing to the Committees on Appropriations that such an acquisition must be made in order to acquire capability for national security purposes.

SEC. 9070. The Department of Defense may not carry out a test of the Mid-Infrared Advanced Chemical Laser (MIRACL) transmitter and associated optics against an object in space unless such testing is specifically authorized and appropriated by law.

SEC. 9071. None of the funds available to the Department of the Air Force (including expired appropriations and M account balances) may be used for the B-1B's ALQ-161A CORE program unless approved in advance by the Congressional defense committees in accordance with procedures applicable to programs which have been designated as items of Congressional interest.

SEC. 9072. The appropriation "Research, Development, Test and Evaluation, Army" contained in the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1989 (Public Law 100-463) is amended by striking out the proviso following "intercommunications system:" and ending with "support vehicles:".

SEC. 9073. None of the funds in this Act may be available for the procurement of Multibeam Sonar Mapping Systems which are not manufactured in the United States: Provided, That when adequate domestic supplies are not available to meet Department of Defense requirements on a timely basis, the Secretary of the service responsible for the procurement may waive this restriction on a case-by-case basis by certifying in writing to the Committees on Appropriations that such an acquisition must be made in order to acquire capability for national security purposes.

SEC. 9074. (a) The amount expended during fiscal year 1990 from funds appropriated by this Act or any prior Department of Defense Appropriations Act may not exceed $281,928,000,000.

(b) The Secretary of Defense and the Director of Central Intelligence shall take such steps as necessary to ensure compliance with the requirement in subsection (a).

(c) Any transfer of outlays from one fiscal year to an adjacent fiscal year that occurs pursuant to this section shall be considered a necessary (but secondary) result of a significant policy change as provided in section 202(b) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987 (2 U.S.C. 909(a)).

(d) The Secretary of Defense, in ensuring (pursuant to subsection (b)) that the requirement in subsection (a) is complied with, shall nevertheless ensure that the rates of outlays for programs, projects, and activities for which funds are provided under this Act or any prior Department of Defense Appropriations Act which are designated or identified as Congressional interest items are not reduced during fiscal year 1990 from the outlay rates that would otherwise apply with respect to those programs, projects, and activities.

(e) The provisions of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 681 et seq.) shall not apply with respect to funds appropriated by this Act or any prior Department of Defense Appropriations Act to the extent necessary to enable the Secretary of Defense to comply with subsection (a). The preceding sentence does not apply with respect to funds available for programs, projects, and activities which are designated or identified as Congressional interest items.

(f) Any payment required to be made by the Department of Defense to a business concern that, but for this subsection, would be required to be made during September 1990 may be made during the period beginning on October 1, 1990, and ending on the date that is 30 days after the date on which the payment would otherwise be required to be made. In determining the amount of any interest penalty under section 3902 of title 31, United States Code, for failure to make any such payment, any period for which the Secretary of Defense, under the preceding sentence, deferred the required payment date shall not be taken into account.

(g)(1) The Secretary of Defense shall, on each of the dates specified in paragraph (2), submit to the Committees on Appropriations and the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the implementation of this section. Each such report shall include—

(A) an analysis of cumulative obligations and cumulative expenditures from accounts subject to the limitation in subsection (a) during the period beginning on October 1, 1989, and ending on the last day of the month preceding the month in which the report is to be submitted, including a comparison of such obligations and expenditures with the relevant estimates of outlays made by the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office; and

(B) a description of the specific actions taken by the Secretary to ensure that the Department of Defense meets the requirements of subsection (a).

(2) The reports required by paragraph (1) shall be submitted not later than the following dates in 1990: January 15, April 15, July 15, September 15, and October 15.

SEC. 9075. (a) RELEASE.—

(i) Subject to clauses (ii) through (iv), the Secretary of the Army shall release to the State of Minnesota the reversionary interest of the United States over approximately 35.38 acres of land, known as "Area J," conveyed from the United States to the State of Minnesota in the quitclaim deed dated August 17, 1971. The Secretary of the Army shall also release the State of Minnesota from all convenants and agreements contained in the said quitclaim deed, covering the approximately 35.38 acres of land.

(ii) CONDITION OF RELEASE.—The releases directed by clause (i) are conditioned on the State of Minnesota donating approximately 35.38 acres of land to the United States for use by the Department of the Army.

(iii) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The exact acreage and legal description of the land over which the reversionary interest is to be released shall be determined by surveys which are satisfactory to the Secretary of the Army and the State of Minnesota.

(iv) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary of the Army may require such additional terms and conditions as he considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States. The Secretary of the Army may agree to allow the State of Minnesota to retain a reversionary interest in the land described in clause (i) conditioned upon the Secretary's use of the land for Army purposes and preservation of the historic structures lying thereon in conformity with Department of Interior standards for properties on the National Register of Historic Places.

(b) DEED AMENDMENT.—The Secretary of the Army is authorized to execute and file the appropriate documents to reflect the provisions of this section.

SEC. 9076. The $100,000,000 provided for Shipbuilding and Conversion, Navy under the appropriation "Special Operations Forces Fund" contained in the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1989 (Public Law 100-463) shall remain available for obligation until September 30, 1990.

SEC. 9077. Effective for only fiscal year 1990, whenever the Secretary of the Army captures and removes wild horses and burros from White Sands Missile Range, the Secretary may transfer such horses and burros to the Secretary of the Interior as excess animals. Upon receipt of any horse or burro pursuant to this section, the Secretary of the Interior shall treat such animals as excess animals removed under section 3(b)(2) of the Wild Free-Roaming Horses and Burros Act (16 U.S.C. 1333(b)(2)): Provided, That the cost of processing such animals incurred by the Department of the Interior shall be reimbursed by the Secretary of the Army, not to exceed $200,000.

This Act may be cited as the "Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1990".

Mr. MURTHA (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against the remaining portion of the bill?

Are there any amendments to the remainder of the bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support H.R. 3072, the defense appropriation bill, which the Committee on Appropriations has recommended for passage.

Mr. Chairman, before moving to areas of special interest I want to express my appreciation for the excellent work that has been done on this bill by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Defense Appropriations, Mr. MURTHA, in this his first year at the helm and by the able ranking Republican member, Mr. MCDADE. Supported by the subcommittee's talented, hardworking staff, they have led the subcommittee through a thicket full of difficult challenges to produce a good bill for our consideration.

In 1956, President Dwight Eisenhower, a five-star general, wrote:

I patiently explain over and over again that American strength is a combination of its economic, moral and military force.

I share his belief.

This is the bill that literally puts the fuel in the Nation's military engine—the gas in the tanks. It is one of the most important bills that this House considers each year.

Today's bill permits more outlays for defense than has been spent in any previous year. This is the case even when the sums are adjusted for inflation. The actual dollar increase in budget authority over the current year is $4.1 billion.

It is encouraging that the subcommittee has taken the initiative, on which our full Committee on Appropriations has supported them, to recommend appropriation of $1 billion more than the President requested for operations and maintenance and $210 million more than was requested for the CHAMPUS Health Services Program.

The most important working parts of the military engine, the parts without which it cannot run, are the men and women who have committed their time and energy to military service. Few factors have as much bearing on the morale and readiness to perform their mission as does operations and maintenance and security in connection with the health care available to them and their families. So, the increases recommended for O&M and for the CHAMPUS Program are vitally important.

For two decades the National Guard and Reserve forces have become increasingly important to the security planning for our Nation. Weekend warriors they may be to some. To me they are dedicated men and women whose interest in and concern for U.S. security makes them willing to give up hours and days that others consider play time in order to make themselves ready to defend our precious freedoms, by force if necessary.

Therefore, I strongly support the recommendation in this bill to provide $1.5 billion more than the President requested in dedicated equipment for the National Guard and Reserve and to provide an additional $135 million to the operation and maintenance accounts of the Reserve components.

As a strong supporter of the Air Force B–2 bomber and C–17 airlift aircraft programs, I regret the reductions from the President's budget that are recommended even as I recognize the circumstances driving the decisions. Both these aircraft are vital to the modernization of defense capabilities of the Air Force. I urge that the necessary steps be taken in the near future to strengthen these programs as they should be.

Last, but certainly not least important is the $450 million recommended for Department of Defense drug interdiction activities. There are actions that the military forces are and can appropriately take in support of the civilian effort to bring an end to the import of illegal drugs and the trade in these crippling, death-dealing substances which are tearing at the fabric of our Nation.

I strongly support those activities. At the same time, I strongly support the committee's position that it would be disastrous to move toward turning our national security force into a police force.

Such a development would be devastating to the achievement of their primary mission of defending the military security of the Nation. It would do cataclysmic damage to the very principles upon which the strength of our Nation has depended for 200 years. Service men and women I have heard on this subject, whether at the top of the rank or the bottom of the file, are strongly opposed to having their mission transformed from being the military defenders of our freedoms to a police force competing with the civilian law enforcement organizations.

Mr. Chairman, as I said at the beginning, I support this bill and I urge its prompt passage.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SKAGGS

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SKAGGS: Page 78, after line 14, insert the following new section:

SEC. 9078. No funds appropriated by this Act may be obligated or expended to prepare, or to assist any contractor of the Department of Defense in preparing, any material, report, list, or analysis with respect to the actual or projected economic or employment impact in a particular State or congressional district of an acquisition program for which all research, development, testing and evaluation has not been completed.

Mr. SKAGGS (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee for his assistance in working with me to improve this amendment. I'd also like to thank the chairman and members of the Rules Committee for allowing me to offer this amendment today.

I also want to thank the Congresswoman from Illinois, Congresswoman LYNN MARTIN, for her generous support of my amendment.

My amendment would prohibit the Defense Department from spending funds appropriated in that bill to prepare reports or estimates on how States or congressional districts might benefit from a weapons program until that program can be considered to have received final approval from Congress.

Our defense programs should be chosen based on their contribution to our national security, and not on how they might benefit a particular State or congressional district. The problem this amendment addresses is the Department's continuing practice of using a pork-barrel argument to sell some of its weapons systems—and especially some of those weapons systems being most vigorously debated by Congress. The Department has done this with the clear intention of affecting the congressional debate on those weapons systems, and in spite of two congressional warnings to cease this activity. This practice muddles congressional debates and does not serve our national security interests. And it hurts the credibility of Congress in the eyes of the public. My amendment aims at ending this improper lobbying.

For the record, I want to cite some of the history on this issue as further reason for offering this amendment.

Since the early 1900's it's been against the law for the Department—or any agency of the executive branch—to lobby Congress. But that's a hard law to enforce, and many agencies and departments have found some gaping loopholes in that law. One loophole that has worked very well, especially for the DOD, has been to sell a program based on how many jobs and how much economic benefit that program could offer a State or congressional district. The textbook case was the B–1 bomber, built in all 50 States, a piece of it in almost every one of our 435 congressional districts.

In 1987, the House adopted an amendment I offered to the Defense authorization bill expressing the sense of Congress that the Department of Defense should not create lists of how a proposed weapons program might benefit a particular State or congressional district. Again, during congressional debate on two aircraft carriers that year, the Navy issued fact sheets describing how many jobs would go to certain States if the carriers should be approved. My sense of Congress amendment was signed into law as part of Public Law 100–180.

In 1988, seeing no change in DOD policy, I offered a similar amendment to the Defense authorization bill. Again, the full House adopted it, and in conference it was changed into a directive that the Department issue a regulation to deal with the issues raised by the amendment. Two weeks ago, a spokesman for the Department told my office it had no intention of issuing any such regulation. That spokesman also stated that the Department regularly ignores sense of the Congress resolutions because it sees no compelling reason to do anything about them.

We should not condone this kind of glib disregard for a congressional directive. The Department should not be free to ignore, with impunity, sense of the Congress resolutions.

Just 2 weeks ago, during congressional debate on the B-2, the DOD collaborated with Northrop to put out a State-by-State list of where components of the B-2 would be built. Northrop distributed this list to every Member of Congress. Reasonable people can differ about the merits of the B-2 program, but I think it was outrageous that the Department would contaminate the debate about that program with a jobs issue. In a $70 billion program, we need to stick to the merits.

I believe it's time the Department got the message loud and clear that Congress is serious about this. If indeed our Defense budget is going to go through more years of tight budgets, during which time Congress will have to make tough decisions about weapons programs, Congress has to be able to do so without the cynical interference of jobs arguments.

It comes down to this—if Congress wants the best defense money can buy, the Department can't talk the jobs talk. And that's what my amendment would help prevent. I urge my colleagues to join me and vote for this amendment.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKAGGS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, we have no problem with this amendment.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield,

Mr. SKAGGS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, we will be delighted to accept the amendment on this side of the aisle.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SKAGGS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the WC-130 weather reconnaissance funding in the 1990 Department of Defense appropriations bill.

I would also like to thank the committee for its sensitivity to the concerns of the people of the gulf and eastern seaboard. Obviously the committee and Congress have come to a realization that the Air Force has not.

This is the realization that the hurricane hunter planes are absolutely vital to the safety of our coastal residents.

The importance of the hurricane hunters is being demonstrated at this very moment with the advent of tropical storm Dean.

This storm was first detected by satellite, but the National Hurricane Center could discern little else about it except for its presence. What did the hurricane experts do? They sent out the planes.

Now we know the wind speed, direction, and various other factors that will aid in determining if, where, and when this hurricane will hit the United States.

Although we all hope that this storm does not make landfall in the United States, we can all rest a little bit easier knowing that we will have adequate and reliable forecasting if it does. This is what the hurricane hunters give us.

Mr. Chairman, like the committee, I simply cannot understand why the Air Force continues to cause confusion and turmoil in the dedicated personnel who perform this dangerous mission by constantly changing its position on whether or not to continue the hurricane hunters.

Fortunately, my coastal colleagues and I have not let this issue die, and the merits of the program have temporarily won out. While this heartens me, I continue to be disappointed that the Air Force needs to be forced by Congress to provide this vital service.

In short, we should not have to work this hard to keep a program that is so essential to the safety of tens of millions of Americans.

Mr. Chairman, the hurricane hunters are our first line of defense against the ravages of a hurricane. It is imperative that we give millions of Americans a chance to escape the wrath of the next great storm.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee to be kind enough to engage in a colloquy.

Mr. Chairman, I have expressed my concern to your subcommittee regarding the proposed reduction of primary assigned aircraft from 24 F-4D to 18 F-16A for the 183d Tactical Fighter Group, Illinois Air National Guard.

In its report on the fiscal year 1990 Department of Defense appropriations bill, the subcommittee notes that $3.5 million was added to the budget request to support an additional 600 reservists and 48 AGRs in reserve personnel, Air National Guard; and that $12.9 million was added for 195 technicians/civilians and other necessary support in operation and reserve, Air National Guard.

Will the additional funds included in this bill for the Air National Guard allow the Department of Defense to maintain the current number of 24 primary assigned aircraft for the 183d Tactical Fighter Group, Illinois Air National Guard?

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURBIN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, the Defense Department's budget proposed several reductions in the force structure of the Reserve components, based solely on budgetary considerations. The committee restored these reductions pending receipt of a Defense Department's report defining the future mix of Active and Reserve forces.

Approximately $2 million was added to the Air National Guard budget request to restore six aircraft with associated personnel and operational support to the 183d Tactical Fighter Group.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am not rising to ask the Members to vote in opposition to the pending appropriation bill, but I do think it is advisable to raise a caution flag for the Members, to tell them that the bill is in trouble as it presently is, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE] said, in the conforming of their bill to our defense authorization bill. I said, and I voted, against our authorization bill because there were many things in there that I could not support nor could the administration in my opinion, and they have conformed their bill principally to our bill, and it still makes it veto bait, in my opinion.

Let me commend the chairman and the ranking member and all of the members of the committee. At least, they have agreed on those items in the bill that have not been authorized, with one exception, have been made subject to subsequent authorization, and this is in keeping with our working agreement with the appropriators.

I would point out, however, that we really do have some matter of concern. There are some approximately $12 billion worth of cuts of items that were authorized, and then an add-back of about the same amount of money to programs that were not authorized. Those that were not authorized are subject to subsequent authorization, but that does not deal with the subject of some $12 billion worth of programs that we did authorize that were cut.

When the committee was doing its consideration, a letter was sent to the chairman of the full committee with copies to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA], signed by Richard Darman. Let me read in part what he says about the bill, because while this was written at the time of the subcommittee, before the full comittee, there is no substantial difference in when the full committee finished, so I think the letter still is very pertinent and applicable. It says:

Dear Mr. Chairman:

As the House Appropriations Committee prepares to consider the FY 1990 Department of Defense Appropriations Bill, I am writing to express the Administration's views on the bill as reported by the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee.

The President's senior advisors would recommend that he veto this bill in its present form.

The overall funding level provided in the Subcommittee bill is inconsistent with the Bipartisan Budget Agreement, and several of its program recommendations——

And he goes on to mention especially the advanced tactical fighter, the Milstar, and other programs. As a matter of fact, the cuts that this bill embraces are the advanced tactical fighter, which was zeroed, the advanced cruise missile, Asat program which was reduced by at least a third, Milstar, SDI, the B–2.

Mr. Chairman, I am including the letter in the RECORD.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, August 1, 1989.

Hon. JAMIE L. WHITTEN,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As the House Appropriations Committee prepares to consider the FY 1990 Department of Defense Appropriations Bill, I am writing to express the Administration's views on the bill as reported by the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee.

The President's senior advisors would recommend that he veto this bill in its present form.

The overall funding level provided in the Subcommittee bill is inconsistent with the Bipartisan Budget Agreement, and several of its program recommendations conflict with important Administration priorities. The Subcommittee bill would provide budget authority of $285.6 billion. This is nearly $2 billion less than the Subcommittee's 302(b) allocation, which was in accord with the Bipartisan Budget Agreement.

Funding is significantly reduced for several high-priority strategic and conventional programs, including the Strategic Defense Initiative, the B–2 bomber, the Advanced Cruise Missile, the MILSTAR communications program, and the Advanced Tactical Fighter. On the other hand, the Subcommittee added funds to reverse cancellation of several programs the Administration does not believe to be affordable or essential. The Subcommittee also added funds for other lower-priority military programs not requested by the Administration. The Subcommittee's recommendation would severely compromise the Administration's objective of providing adequate defense capabilities within constrained resources.

The bill also includes funding for programs that should be funded from domestic discretionary appropriations—in particular the appropriations for the Coast Guard ($300 million) and the National Science Foundation ($82.9 million). Funding domestic discretionary programs from defense resources is a violation of the Bipartisan Budget Agreement. With regard to the Coast Guard funding, let me point out that the Conference Report on the FY 1989 Defense Appropriations Act stated: "The conferees agree that this is the final year that Department of Defense appropriations should fund Coast Guard requirements."

Finally, Section 9052 raises constitutional questions because it purports to make Administration action legally dependent upon the approval of the Appropriations Committees before it can transfer funds under this provision. This is contrary to the Supreme Court's decision in INS vs. Chadha, which overturned the one-house legislative veto.

I urge that the full Committee remedy these serious problems.

With best regards,

RICHARD G. DARMAN,
Director.

□ 1010

Then the add-backs for all programs were cut by the administration and the Secretary of Defense. So I realize that upon the passage of this bill both the authorizing committee bill and this appropriation bill will go to conference. Hopefully some of the most egregious add-ons and deletions can be modified and remedied to make it acceptable to the administration.

But as it stands now, I am just telling the Members, as our defense authorization bill stands and as the defense appropriation bill stands, I do not support them, and I would recommend a veto. I think it will be vetoed.

Mr. Darman, and I am speaking also for the Secretary of Defense, say that in its present form they would recommend a veto of this appropriation bill as well as our authorization bill.

So I would hope in conference a word to the wise would be sufficient, and we can iron out these difficulties, even though I do not expect all of them to be addressed.

So for that reason, I personally am going to vote against the appropriation bill because I think unless it is modified substantially it is not going to be accepted by the administration.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this bill which I believe makes a good faith effort to address the difficult priority choices we face in the defense field. I want to compliment the work done by my subcommittee chairman, Mr. MURTHA, for his evenhanded handling of this legislation, and his commitment to identify specific priorities and themes in our decisionmaking. For his first year, the job was especially masterful. As always, the ranking member, Mr. MCDADE, was an excellent team member in creating the bill. And I thank all of my colleagues on the subcommittee for the excellent, bipartisan approach that is represented in H.R. 3072. Finally, we would never have been able to bring this bill to the floor, without the many hours of diligent work done by the subcommittee's very diligent and professional staff.

Frankly, I have some very real concerns with the authorization bill as approved by the House. It made reductions beyond what I feel are justified on programs such as the B–2 bomber and eliminated all funding for the small ICBM.

I am convinced that the two missile program is justified, as a means to improve strategic stability by enhancing the survivability of the land-based leg of the triad. Even more importantly, it is necessary to place the United States in a position at the START talks to realistically negotiate with the Soviet Union, which is already deploying both a single warhead road mobile missile, the SS–25, and a rail mobile multiple warhead missile, the SS–24.

With respect to the B–2, without it we would be effectively eliminating one leg of the triad and our ability to hold at risk a wide range of Soviet targets. We would also undermine the underlying strategy of our START position which is to go toward more stabilizing systems, such as the slow flying and recallable bomber, as opposed to the current emphasis on ballistic missiles. In fact, under START, nearly half the target base would be assigned to the manned bomber force.

Hopefully, by the time we complete conference we will have a bill that provides the support the President needs to reshape our strategic forces under a START agreement that provides major overall reductions in nuclear forces. Without the B–2 and Midgetman, in fact, the chances of getting a START agreement are severely undermined. Nonetheless, I recognize the political realities that have led the chairman to offer an amendment to bring this bill in conformance with the actions of the House on major issues debated on the authorization bill. But I, for one, will be working to produce a more balanced strategic program by the time we complete action in the fall.

Obviously we have real cost constraints on defense, just as we have on the budget overall. The General Accounting Office has estimated that the 5-year plan for defense is above available funding, assuming flat budgets, by some $150 billion. This has led many to focus on highly visible strategic programs as "cash cows." But while these systems are expensive, they are not out of line with past practice, and focusing just on them does not provide real balance. On the other hand, there are some programs, such as SDI, where I believe that we can avoid major increases in funding that are currently included in the 5-year plan.

The House Appropriations Defense Subcommittee has made a real effort to make a more rational set of recommendations. We strove to enhance funding for readiness and operations, including an additional $186 million for ship repair and modernization and significant increases for the Department's medical programs. In addition, rather than terminate existing programs at far below stated inventory requirements, or impose uneconomical stretchouts, we recommended funding these programs as efficiently as possible, and when the inventory objective is met, terminating the programs. This includes both the F-14D Navy fighter and the Air Force F-15E. We also added $1 billion to initiate a major sealift enhancement program.

On the other hand, we recommended personnel reductions to reflect the impact of the INF Agreement, cut over $800 million from duplicative and uncompetitive computer purchases, and terminated a number of research programs that either had little prospect of actually being produced in the current fiscal environment, or exhibited signs of unacceptable delays and cost growth. The outyear impact of these terminations is nearly $9 billion. In addition, we terminated many highly classified programs with a similar major outyear impact.

A recommendation that is getting real attention is the elimination of all funding for the advanced tactical fighter. While we expect that the final bill will restore at least part of the $1.1 billion for this program, our action has already prompted better high management attention to potential cost growth, concurrency problems, and questions of Navy commitment to the program. Our objective is to make certain these questions are answered before we have invested billions in this program, which is currently estimated to cost $69 billion.

Congressional support for the Trident Submarine and D-5 Missile Program remains strong. However, I believe we have reached the point where we need to consider how long, and at what rate we should continue to build new Tridents. With the fiscal year 1990 funded Trident, we will have approved a force of 17 submarines. Under a START agreement, even if we eliminate the entire Poseidon force, we may be able to retain a force of only between 16 to 20 Tridents. If we continue to fund one each year, we may face a situation where we would have to dismantle older Tridents that still have many years of operational capability. This would be an enormous waste of taxpayer's money.

For this reason, I authored a requirement for the Secretary of Defense to report on the ultimate inventory objective of Tridents, and the potential impact of a START agreement on the program so that we can consider this question with all relevant information.

Mr. Chairman, again I urge the House to approve this important legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I would just say to the gentleman from Alabama, my friend, Mr. DICKINSON, we on the Appropriations Committee hope that a number of the issues that the gentleman has mentioned can be resolved in the House-Senate conference committee on the authorization bill. Many of the problems that have been stated here are because of the actions that were taken by the House, some regrettable, on the authorization bill.

I would urge all Members of both the House and Senate committees on defense appropriations and authorizations to seriously consider what we have to do in the future on ICMB modernization, on SDI and on the B-2. I think those issues are critically important.

There are obviously some actions that this committee has taken to cut the number of programs that will be reviewed in the conference as well between the House and Senate Appropriations Committees.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, let me just say I cannot imagine a better working relationship than what our authorizing committee has had to date with the chairman, a better one than we have ever had with the appropriating committee, and it would be my hope that after passage of this bill and before either of the committees go to conference that the chairman and ranking member of both committees could get together and see if we cannot come to a meeting of the minds and work out some of the serious problems, and I am sure we will, to obviate some of the big problems that loom ahead of us. Hopefully we will do that, and I know there is a willingness on the part of both gentlemen from Pennsylvania, Mr. MURTHA and Mr. MCDADE, and my chairman and myself to get together to see if we cannot work out the problems before conference.

Mr. DICKS I would say to the gentleman from Alabama, as I said to him privately the other day, I regret that there was some misunderstanding on both sides on the question of ICBM modernization. I for one stand strongly committed to the two-missile program. I would like to see us move ahead with the Midgetman and with the rail garrison MX. I would hope that the conferees would agree to the Senate position on those issues. I know that brings back a conference report that may be debated on the House floor, but I think there is a majority in the House, based on the vote on the Hertel amendment and the vote initially on the Frank amendment, to move in that direction.

I would say to my friend from Alabama, with the greatest respect, I think that is in the national security interests of the country at this point in time, and I would hope that we could join together on that issue and try to put that behind us so that we can have bipartisan support. I think that outcome will help us in the arms control talks in Geneva, and I hope that we can work that out in the conference.

Mr. DICKINSON. If the gentleman will yield further, I appreciate his remarks. He left out the Spratt amendment that started out the mischief in the first place.

Mr. DICKS. Yes, which I regret happened, as I said.

Mr. DICKINSON. It happened. And the author of the amendment and many of the supporters knew exactly what they were doing, so we will see what we can do about working out the differences later. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer my appreciation to the gentleman and associate myself with his remarks and give support to the dual-missile program. The gentleman's contribution has been very helpful to the eventual discussions in the conference.

Mr. DICKS. I would say one final point. I also believe the Aspin-Synar amendment cuts back too deeply on the B-2 program. I just say to all of my colleagues if we cut the program as deeply as the Aspin-Synar amendment wants to do, what we are going to do is drive up the cost of the program, the unit cost of the program, and I think that is a grave mistake. I hope we can come closer to the other body's view on that in the authorization.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Washington for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to rise in support of this defense appropriation bill, and thank both gentlemen from Pennsylvania, Mr. MURTHA and Mr. MCDADE, and also the full committee and subcommittee. They were very kind to the National Guard and Reserve.

We had an amendment on the defense authorization that gave $1,200,000,000 to the Guard and Reserve simply in equipment, trucks, small airplanes, things that can go into the different States and the different districts. The committee, under the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA] added an additional $300 million to the account for the National Guard and Reserve.

I want to point out this still gives only 3 percent of the total procurement budget to the National Guard and Reserve out of the $76 billion procurement. I would also like to say that the Guard and Reserve now have over 20 percent of all of the combat missions of the different four services, and the Army National Guard has 51 percent of the combat missions, and the Reserves have 70 percent of the support missions.

So this is money well spent. I want to commend the committee for doing this for the National Guard and Reserve.

Mr. DICKS. I would just say our committee is well aware of the outstanding leadership by the gentleman from Mississippi on this issue over a long period of time. If anyone doubts it, the champion of the Guard and the Reserve in the U.S. Congress is the gentleman from Mississippi, and we appreciate and respect his leadership. I think it is a compliment to him that every year the administration does not put the money in the budget, because they know that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is going to take care of that one up on Capitol Hill.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I salute the gentleman for his kind remarks.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I must say that I am somewhat distressed at the tone of the colloquy that has been going on here. The House worked its will on the defense authorization bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DICKS] has expired.

(On request of Mr. WEISS and the unanimous consent Mr. DICKS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. WEISS. At this point for there to be a suggestion that in some way the House was wrong, and that what the House did is going to be corrected by Members in conference I think really borders on the ridiculous. I would hope that in fact there would be a rethinking of that kind of approach.

The House has spoken. The gentleman may disagree with it, as I do from time to time, but to say that that gives them the right to say that was wrong is wrong itself.

Mr. DICKS. I will take back my time at this point to say to the gentleman from New York, my friend, that there were two votes. We voted against the Hertel amendment to take out all of the money for rail garrision, and on a record vote we overwhelmingly voted to support the Midgetman. We know the Spratt amendment caused a controversy at the end, but those two record votes still stand.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this is the last of the 13 general appropriations bills that the Appropriations Committee brings to the House floor for consideration for the 1990 fiscal year.

Because of forces that kept the Congress in a state of suspension in the early part of this year we have had to move these bills at a gallop in the last 2 months.

It has taken a lot of cooperation by all of the Members of the House and it has taken a full court press by the Appropriations Committee to get to this point.

I think we owe a special vote of thanks to the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Mississippi. With my western Massachusetts background, I do not always pick up on the Mississippisms and the dialect, but I always know he is going to be shepherding our committee's bills with the care of a driver of a nitroglycerine truck.

I want to say to him, to the members of the committee and the staff, that you have done yeomen's work. But we have a long way to go. The other body has a lot of their pet rocks to throw into our bills.

The bill we are considering today will be one of those that they will jump on with the gusto of my hunting dog, Pal, at mealtime.

The bill has a lot of difficulties connected with it. It deviates greatly from what the administration wants.

However, those differences were fought over last week in the Defense authorization bill. Our mandate is to get this bill moving toward conference, not fight those battles again.

The Defense Subcommittee has had to wait until the very last minute to adjust its bill to what they did.

What you see here is a combination of puts and takes based on hundreds of hours of hearings, adjustments to the authorization bill, and patching together budget and outlay numbers to try to meet our budget resolution guidance. It is not a thing of pure beauty. It will take a lot of adjusting and negotiation in the future to get it enacted.

Nonetheless, I came here to recognize the hard work the subcommittee put forth and make note of the leadership of Chairman MURTHA as he takes this bill through for his first trip as the chairman. I also want to thank my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, JOE MCDADE for lending his immense knowledge and experience in national security programs to accomplish this most difficult task.

I want each of you on the subcommittee to know how important your provision of $300 million is to the Coast Guard.

We saw on the floor yesterday the concerns for the Coast Guard. I did not like the Tauzin amendment but I understand his concerns. In this bill, the members of the committee stepped up to the need of the Coast Guard and I applaud them for it.

The Coast Guard is a fighting arm of our national defense when war is declared. Well, the Congress has declared war—on drugs.

The Coast Guard is the lead element of our Armed Forces in that war. The subcommittee recognizes that fact and has anted up a sizable chunk of funding for combating that enemy.

So, I want to congratulate the subcommittee on your hard work and to thank the full committee for the focus you have put forth in getting all these appropriations bills to the floor.

□ 1020

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to return to page 31 and to offer an amendment to line 1.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SHARP

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHARP: Page 31, line 1, strike out "$5,578,700,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,568,700,000.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment to cut $10 million from $5.6 billion being appropriated in this bill for Army research, testing, development and evaluation, RDT&E.

My amendment cuts $10 million from the Army's RDT&E account which has been earmarked for the transverse mounted engine propulsion system [TMEPS]. My amendment assures that the contractors—and not the Government—pay for work which was not selected by the Government in a formal source selection.

The reasons why I am proposing the cut in TMEPS funding are specific and clear: First, the Appropriations Committee has adopted report language for which there is no current or pending authorization.

In fact, the fiscal year 1990 defense authorization, which we considered only last week, specifically proposes $10 million for the advanced integrated propulsion system [AIPS]—the Army's source-selected program—and merely encourages the Army to look at TMEPS. The effect of the appropriations' earmark of $10 million for TMEPS, not AIPS, turns the Army source selection process and the authorizing decisions on their heads.

The TMEPS concept has not been neglected by Congress. $13.74 million was appropriated in fiscal year 1986. Money has been expended in fiscal years 1987 through 1989, and a demonstration date is set for October of this year; $3.3 million remains unspent and available.

The question, then, is why an additional $10 million is needed for TMEPS so close to completion date when more money remains available than has been spent in fiscal 1989. What is this $10 million for? That $10 million is effectively intended to have the Congress send its signal to the Army on how to source select a specific contractor for tank engines. That earmark limits, not expands, source selection competition.

Second, there are strong and compelling reasons for Congress to continue to support the AIPS competition. That competition, which is between diesel and turbine technology for future incorporation in the Army's heavy armored vehicles, will terminate next fiscal year in a decision to go ahead with one or the other technologies. Earmarking $10 million for TMEPS does not induce further competition, it unfairly tilts competition in favor of one turbine contractor, not previously selected.

The dime store mystery is why TMEPS has been granted an additional earmark. My amendment does nothing more than reduce the Army RDT&E account by the amount of this mystery; it supports the authorizing decisions; and it sends a clear signal that this House supports fair, open and unpoliticized competition for the Army's next-generation powerplant.

My amendment has the support of the Appropriations Subcommittee's distinguished chairman, Mr. MURTHA, and I ask for the support of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle as well.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHARP. I yield to the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MURTHA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have no problem with this amendment.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHARP. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE].

Mr. McDADE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman was kind enough to bring the amendment to us and to discuss it. We are happy to accept it on this side.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the cooperation of the chairman and the ranking member of the subcommittee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, very briefly, I want to mention that we are now in the last, the 13th and last appropriations bill. All of these appropriations bills have met the targets within the budget resolution and on the budget authority side.

There have been few exceptions on the outlays but every bill has been within or below the target with regard to budget outlays or budget authority.

Mr. Chairman, with the passage of this bill, which is $1 billion, incidentally, below its discretionary budget authority, with the passage of this bill we are now well on our way to implementing the bipartisan summit agreement and the budget resolution.'

I congratulate the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA], and the ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE], for the job that they have done on this particular bill, in staying within their target.

I also take this opportunity to thank and congratulate the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], and his ranking member, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], for the work they have done in bringing all of these bills to the floor before the August recess.

The House is well on its way to implementing the budget resolution.

The next step is the reconciliation bill, and I look forward to continued cooperation with the Members in an effort to implement the budget resolution at that time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss the budget status of H.R. 3072, the fiscal year 1990 defense appropriations bill. As is customary, the Budget Committee has provided a "Dear Colleague" to all Members of the House discussing the relationship of this bill to the fiscal year 1990 budget resolution. H.R. 3072 is within the spending limits of the budget resolution and bipartisan summit agreement. The bill provides $1 billion less than its 302(b) allocation in discretionary budget authority and discretionary outlays equal to its allocation. I would like to congratulate Chairman Murtha for the timely action by the subcommittee on this bill.

Mr. Chairman, with the passage of this bill the House will have considered the 13th and last appropriations bill and will have met its ambitious schedule with regard to appropriations bills. This is the second year in a row that all appropriations bills will have been considered by the August recess.

The House is well on its way toward implementing the bipartisan summit agreement of last April and I congratulate the Appropriations Committee and the leadership for their help in implementing the budget resolution. However, when we return from the district work period, it will be necessary to move in a timely manner to enact a reconciliation bill in order to achieve the savings assumed in the budget resolution and prevent a fiscal year 1990 sequestration. The Appropriations Committee should be commended for making the first step with House passage of these bills. The process will not be easy but with the cooperation of the Members of the House, I am sure we can achieve that goal.

COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, DC, August 3, 1989.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Attached is a fact sheet on H.R. 3072, Department of Defense Appropriations bill for Fiscal Year 1990. This bill is scheduled for floor consideration on Friday, August 4, subject to a rule being adopted.

This is the thirteenth and the last annual appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990. The bill, as reported, is $998 million below the 302(b) subdivision for discretionary budget authority and equal to the subdivision for outlays. Therefore, it is consistent with the 1990 Budget Resolution and the Bipartisan Budget Agreement.

I hope this information will be helpful to you.

Sincerely,

LEON E. PANETTA,
Chairman.

[Fact Sheet]

H.R. 3072, DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1990 (H. REPT. 101-208)

The House Appropriations Committee reported the Department of Defense Appropriations Bill for Fiscal Year 1990 on Tuesday, August 1, 1989. This bill is scheduled for floor action on Friday, August 4, subject to a rule being adopted.

COMPARISON TO THE 302(b) SUBDIVISION

The bill, as reported, provides $286,331 million of discretionary budget authority, and $281,773 million of discretionary outlays. This is $998 million less in discretionary budget authority than the Appropriations Subdivision for this Subcommittee. The Budget Act provides a point of order, if the target for discretionary budget authority is breached. Since it is not, there is no such point of order against this bill. The bill is equal to the subdivision for estimated discretionary outlays. A detailed comparison of the bill to the spending and credit subdivisions follows:

COMPARISON TO SPENDING ALLOCATION

[In millions of dollars]

	Defense appropriations bill		Appropriations Committee 302(b) subdivision		Bill over (+)/over (−) 302(b) subdivision
	BA	O	BA	O	BA	O
Discretionary	286,331	281,773	287,329	281,773	−998
Mandatory	155	155	155	155
Total	286,486	281,982	287,484	281,928	−998

Note: BA—New budget authority; O—Estimated outlays.

COMPARISON TO CREDIT ALLOCATION

The bill provides no credit activities.

Pursuant to Section 302(b) of the 1974 Budget Act as amended by P.L. 99-177 (Gramm-Rudman-Hollings), the Committees of the House are required to subdivide the spending authority and credit authority allocated to them in the Budget Resolution for Fiscal year 1990 (shown in H. Rept. 101-50). The Appropriations Committee reported its 302(b) subdivisions on June 21, 1989 (H. Rept. 101-97). These subdivisions are the official scorekeeping targets for appropriations subcommittees.

The following are the major program highlights for the Defense Appropriations Bill for Fiscal year 1990, as reported:

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

[Budget authority in billions of dollars]

	Request	Reported
Military personnel	79.2	79.1
Operation and maintenance	89.6	89.6
Procurement	78.4	80.5
Research and development	39.6	35.6

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FAZIO

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FAZIO: Page 70, strike out lines 11 through 18 and insert in lieu thereof the following: the State of California: Provided, That no funds shall be used for such purpose until the Secretary of Defense, the Administrator of General Services, and the purchaser of the Sale Parcel reach an agreement resolving all disputes relating to the withdrawal of Landfill No. 26 and buffer acreage from the original Sale Parcel, except that funds may be expended on any and all preconstruction or related activities and may be expended to the extent required under Federal or State law.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, this is a technical amendment to section 9066 of the bill relating to the cleanup of Hamilton Air Force Base. It has been worked out in cooperation with the Defense Subcommittee and its chairman, Mr. MURTHA, as well as the appropriate members of the House Armed Services Committee. In particular, I would like to thank Mr. MURTHA and his staff for their support in this effort.

The amendment has two purposes. First, the amendment clarifies that the cleanup at Hamilton Air Force Base shall be carried out in accordance with all existing Federal and State regulatory requirements. While there was never any intention that this provision would direct the Department of Defense to do otherwise, the amendment clarifies that all existing State and Federal cleanup requirements apply to the cleanup at Hamilton.

Second, the amendment clarifies that the Department of Defense, and no other nonregulatory entity, shall be a party to the cleanup plan as prescribed in the proposed "Record of Decision" relating to Hamilton. Here again, it was never intended that section 9066 would permit the inclusion of any party other than the Department of Defense and the appropriate regulatory authorities in the implementation of the "Record of Decision."

Again, Mr. Chairman, this is a technical, clarifying amendment, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAZIO. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA].

Mr. MURTHA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have no problem with the amendment.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAZIO. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE].

Mr. McDADE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have no objection on this side to this amendment.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate both gentlemen supporting this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to take a moment to congratulate the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee and its chairman, Mr. MURTHA, and ranking member Mr. McDADE, for their support of fast sealift in this bill. The committee has certainly indicated its desire to move in the general direction specified in both the House- and Senate-passed authorization bills.

I would like to point out one feature of the fast sealift initiative that was specifically included in the authorization bill research and development to bring forth a fast sealift ship that will meet our national security needs in time of war and will also provide some commercial viability in time of peace. I would assume that the appropriation measure would fund this research and development.

Unless these new fast sealift ships can be made commercially attractive they will end up being a drain on the Treasury and the Defense budget as they sit idle next to the pier waiting to be used in time of emergency. Unless they are sailing the seas in commercial use we may find it difficult to find crews for these ships when we need them.

There are concepts available that could very well lead to ships that will have both military utility and commercial viability. Fast sealift ships that can be put to use in peacetime will not drain the treasury and will have crews available in time of emergency.

I am glad this appropriation bill will give a forward thrust to fast sealift and that the funds provided in this bill can be used, to the limited extent as needed, to provide ships that can be expected to have both military and commercial use.

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the penultimate word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to talk about one part of the defense bill which is not given a lot of attention but which is terribly important in terms of the good working relations that we have developed between our committee and the subcommittee on appropriations and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA] and that is his willingness in this bill that when he goes beyond what the House Armed Service Committee had authorized by the account level, that they have put in the bill "subject to authorization." I would like to commend the gentleman for doing that.

This is a very, very important issue for the members of the Committee on Armed Services, and we have had a very, very good working relationship with the new chairman, Mr. MURTHA.

I would like to commend him for that and encourage him to bring that same provision back in conference when we have these differences because differences will exist. But in order to maintain a good working relationship it is important that we do this, and I commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his efforts.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PANETTA) having assumed the chair, Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3072) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

□ 1030

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PANETTA). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant of Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 312, nays 105, not voting 14, a follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Ray for, with Mr. Edwards of California against.

Messrs. PACKARD, BARTLETT, NIELSON of Utah, SOLOMON, LELAND, CLINGER, McMILLAN of North Carolina, ARCHER, and SPENCE, Mrs. ROUKEMA, and Messrs. TOWNS, LEWIS of Georgia, CALLAHAN, DANNEMEYER, HOLLOWAY, and THOMAS of California changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. MOORHEAD changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, today I was unavoidably delayed and missed rollcall No. 218 on the Department of Defense appropriations bill. Had I been here, I would have voted "aye."

I was delayed due to a meeting with farmers in our district regarding a congressional hearing to be held by the Agriculture Committee on September 18 on the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

ADVANCED SUBMARINE TECHNOLOGY PROGRAM

(Mr. KOSTMAYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my 1 minute is to engage in a colloquy with the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA].

This bill contains $145 million for the Advanced Submarine Technology Program within the defense advanced research projects agency. This research program is designed to ensure that adequate research is being conducted on potential technological advancements of our Nation's submarine fleet.

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, that is correct. The committee believes that technology developed under this program will enable the Navy to improve the performance of U.S. submarines and to ensure submarine survivability in the coming decades. The committee believes this program constitutes a key component of our effort to ensure the future viability of the sea-based leg of the triad. The committee strongly supports the Advanced Submarine Technology Program in the bill.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. This program includes the development of composite materials based on the innovative use of advanced weaving technology, does it not?

Mr. MURTHA. That is correct. The development of new composite materials for submarine hulls will allow the Navy greater flexibility in submarine design. New composite materials will also help make Soviet detection of U.S. submarines more difficult. The committee believes this composite research is a vital part of the overall submarine technology research effort.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the subcommittee chairman for this clarification.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. LEWIS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this 1 minute for the purpose of inquiring of the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] the calendar for the remainder of the day.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, having finished the last appropriation bill, it will now be our intent to ask unanimous consent in a few moments to declare recesses at any time. We would perhaps take some matters on commemorative days and other matters, but there will not be votes until we get the conference report on the savings and loan bill back from the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, we will try to give Members 1 hour's notice of when that will likely happen so that they can get back into the building. The word on that will come through the Cloakroom facilities. That will take 1 hour of consideration.

Upon the completion of that conference report, if it is passed, we then have the matter of the debt ceiling, which may or may not require a vote, but it will come after the S&L conference.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we have an adjournment resolution that will have to be passed later this afternoon before we could finally leave.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Might I inquire further if the majority leader by chance is smelling on his side of the aisle those gasoline fumes from the airport that seem to be drifting around this side of the aisle?

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I wish I could give a definite time. We feel that S&L bill will be here around 2 o'clock, take 1 hour of consideration, and then, of course, after that we have the debt ceiling and the adjournment resolution, if there are votes on those two matters.

So, Mr. Speaker, it could be that we will be finished around 3. I would say that would be a fair guess.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Inquiring further, Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to have a conference of our Members shortly in order to discuss some of the aspects of those potential conference reports. Could the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] give the House an indication of what he anticipates regarding conference reports as we end the recess going into September?

□ 1100

Mr. GEPHARDT. The gentleman, I think, is inquiring about conference reports in September. It is likely that we will be seeing a number of these appropriation bills coming back. At this time, I am not able to give the gentleman or other Members a clear picture of which ones will be coming first, but I think we can suspect and we hope that the appropriation conferences will be coming back soon.

I would like, if the gentleman will yield further, to quickly run through the first week in September. When we come back on Monday, September 4, the House will not be in session as, of course, that is Labor Day.

On Tuesday, September 5, we will not be in session. That will be the completion and a travel day for the Labor Day district work period.

On Wednesday, the House will meet at noon and consider two bills: H.R. 1668, the NOAA and Coastal Programs Authorization Act; H.R. 2427, the NOAA Atmospheric Satellite Programs Authorization, fiscal years 1990-92. Both of those are subject to a rule.

On Thursday, the House will meet at 10 and take up H.R. 1594 to extend most-favored nation status to Hungary for 5 years; and H.R. 2869, the Commodity Futures Improvement Act, both subject to a rule.

On Friday, September 8, the House will not be in session.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

I want to say that I do not want to surprise the leadership nor do I want to surprise the gentleman from Texas [Mr GONZALEZ], but I have no intention, nor am I afraid a lot of Members, have any intention of voting for the S&L bailout bill, now that it is intended to be off-budget.

Mr. Speaker, I will not impose further upon the time of the House.

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER TO DECLARE RECESSES AT ANY TIME TODAY

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for the Speaker to declare recesses at any time today, subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PANETTA). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1989

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday, September 6, 1989.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER TO ACCEPT RESIGNATIONS AND TO APPOINT COMMISSIONS, BOARDS, AND COMMITTEES AUTHORIZED BY LAW OR BY THE HOUSE, NOTWITHSTANDING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding any adjournment of the House until Wednesday, September 6, 1989. The Speaker be authorized to accept resignations and to appoint commissions, boards, and committees authorized by law or by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

COMMEMORATIVES

(Ms. SCHNEIDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, Congress spends a great deal of time designating commemorative days, weeks, months, and years. The 100th Congress enacted 258 commemoratives or 36 percent of all public laws. This is five times the number of commemoratives enacted just a decade ago.

And yesterday, the majority of Congress agreed that something needs to be done. Yesterday, my bill, H.R. 746, the National Observance Advisory Act, got its 218 cosponsor. H.R. 746 would set up a commission—roughly similar to the Stamp Commission—to designate commemoratives.

This is not to say that commemoratives are bad, in fact, they are an excellent way of raising public awareness about an issue. However, given the amount of staff time devoted to commemoratives, and independent commission would be more fiscally responsible—and, furthermore would provide for an impartial review of commemorative proposals.

This is an idea I have been working on with my distinguished colleague from Oklahoma, DAVE MCCURDY. And our bipartisan effort to clean up the commemorative process deserves the cosponsorship of the rest of the House.

So, Mr. Speaker, the majority of Congress agrees—we should do something about commemoratives. The post Office Committee has pledged hearings in short order. I urge the remainder of my colleagues to support the Schneider-McCurdy plan to redo the commemorative process.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO REPEAL THE MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT

(Mr. DONNELLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous material.)

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing legislation, for myself, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER], and a bipartisan group of cosponsors, to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. I take this action having become convinced over the past several months that America's senior citizens simply do not want this program.

Mr. Speaker, as one of the authors of the Catastrophic Coverage Act, as a conferee on the bill. I worked to create a reasonable, acceptable benefit.

However, in the past several months, all of us have heard from our constituents, expressing their opposition to the program. The committee on ways and means has worked hard to respond to those concerns, and I've participated in those drafting sessions. By now, I've reached the conclusion that there is no way to solve the controversies surrounding this program. It has to be repealed. We have to go back to square one, and start putting together a package that the senior citizens want, and one that makes good fiscal and health policy sense.

But in the meantime, we should not force on America's senior citizens a program that they oppose. The recent changes agreed to by the Ways and Means Committee make the program worse, more regressive, and more unfair to Medicare beneficiaries. There is only one fair solution: Scrap the program and start over again. That is what our constituents want, and that is the responsible thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, I include a technical description of my proposal with my remarks.

TECHNICAL DESCRIPTION OF THE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE REPEAL ACT OF 1989

(1) REPEAL OF MEDICARE BENEFIT EXPANSIONS

The bill repeals all of the Medicare benefit expansions enacted as part of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act (MCCA). Thus, the legislation's Medicaid expansions (such as spousal impoverishment) are not repealed and remain in effect. In addition, the provisions relating to the blood deductible, the Medicare buy-in, the study of tax incentives for purchasing long-term care insurance, the study of adult day care services, the voluntary certifications of "Medigap" policies, the distribution of Medicare benefit notices, and the monetary penalties for certain HMO/CMP practices are not repealed.

My bill also retains the provisions of the MCCA which holds Medicare beneficiaries harmless against Part B premium increases which exceed the Social Security COLA. It also retains the home health benefits commission and the U.S. Bipartisan Commission on Comprehensive Health Care. Finally, the bill repeals the Federal employee rate reduction, the case management demonstration projects, and generally repeals the MCCA's maintenance of effort provisions.

(2) REPEAL OF SUPPLEMENTAL AND FLAT PREMIUMS

The bill repeals the supplemental premium enacted as part of the MCCA, as well as the Part B premium increase. The supplemental premium is repealed on enactment. The flat premium is repealed on enactment as well.

(3) TRANSITIONAL ISSUES FOR MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES

The bill repeals all benefits, generally effective on January 1, 1990. However, to the extent that a beneficiary is receiving benefits under the bill on that date, the beneficiary is generally held harmless. Thus, if a beneficiary was hospitalized in 1989, the days of hospitilization in that year are not treated as a spell of illness. In addition, a beneficiary who is hospitalized on January 1, 1990 will not have to pay a second deductible during that spell of illness.

(4) REIMPOSITION OF MEDIGAP REGULATIONS

Under the bill, the provisions of prior law relating to certification of Medigap policies are re-imposed. Thus, policies would have to be consistent with the Medicare program's benefits (as amended by this legislation) within a specified time period.

(5) REIMBURSEMENT TO HOSPITALS

With respect to hospitals reimbursed under the prospective payment system, the Secretary would be required to adjust DRG payment rates, outlier cutoff points and weighting factors to reflect the increase in payments to hospitals by or on behalf of Medicare beneficiaries. With respect to PPS-exempt hospitals, a similar rule is provided for adjustments in the target rate of increase.

(6) BUDGET IMPLICATIONS

The Congressional Budget Office is estimating the budgetary impact of this legislation. My intention is to offer this legislation as an amendment to the Budget Reconciliation legislation for FY '90, with a request for a waiver of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON SCIENCE, SPACE, AND TECHNOLOGY, TO HAVE UNTIL FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1989, TO FILE REPORT ON H.R. 1759, NATIONAL AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ADMINISTRATION AUTHORIZATION

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology have until September 1, 1989, to file a late report on the bill (H.R. 1759) to authorize appropriations to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for research and development, space flight, control and data communications, construction of facilities, and research and program management, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

PRESIDENT'S RESOLVE HELPS TO DEFUSE HOSTAGE CRISIS

(Mr. COUGHLIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my great relief over reports that threats by the Hezbollah to murder my constituent Joseph Cicippio have been frozen.

I am certainly grateful to all those who have worked to prevent further violence to the hostages in Lebanon. Though we are by no means completely out of the woods, I want to express my appreciation for administration efforts to defuse this situation.

I believe the President's resolve in this matter has been instrumental in bringing us to the point at which we now find ourselves. His efforts at diplomacy have been effectively coupled with the deployment of Navy ships to the seas around Iran and Lebanon, offering the kidnapers and their allies both an opportunity to resolve this matter and the option of suffering the consequences for failing to do so.

On the basis of recent reports I am also very cautiously optimistic that Iranian leader Hashemi Rafsanjani may be seeking to deescalate the current crisis. I am hopeful that President Rafsanjani will see it as being in Iran's interest to reduce United States-Iranian tensions and provide some groundwork for an improvement in ties between our nations. The ball is in Iran's court.

Finally, I want to take this opportunity to appeal to all those who have been involved to forestall further violence to the hostages to continue their work. We need to bring all the Americans being held hostage home, and the sooner the better.

REPEAL OF CATASTROPHIC HEALTH INSURANCE NOT FAVORED BY ANY GROUP OF SENIOR CITIZENS

(Mr. LEVIN of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, repeal of catastrophic health insurance is not favored by any group of seniors. That is true even of the most ardent critics of the funding mechanism. Just in the last 24 hours, for example, the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare has risen.

We are pleased the Ways and Means Committee has begun action to improve the program, rather than recommending repeal or delay, and we hope that we can work together toward that goal, that is, of reform.

□ 1110

A recent poll shows that seniors in the middle-income brackets are the ones most incensed, and they are, about the funny mechanism, and the Committee on Ways and Means cuts the supplemental by one-half. Let us not throw out the baby with the bath. There are other important benefits in this program that we should keep.

The answer is not repeal but reform. The Ways and Means bill is the first step. It may not be perfect, but let us keep working to improve that program rather than going back light-years by repealing this program.

REPEAL SECTION 89 OF THE TAX CODE

(Mr. WALSH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to appeal to my colleagues to accept nothing less than the outright repeal of section 89 of the Tax Code. The complicated rules required to comply with this legislation unfairly discriminate against small businesses as it forces them to spend an inordinate percentage of their resources financing their employee-benefit plans.

I commend the Appropriations Committee for its decision to attach section 530 to the Treasury-Postal Service spending bill. Section 530 prohibits the expenditure of Treasury funds for the implementation of Internal Revenue Code section 89 in fiscal year 1990. In particular, I want to thank Mr. CONTE, Mr. DELAY, Mr. LAFALCE, and all my other colleagues who have worked so diligently to repeal this law. In addition, I commend the Rules Committee and its distinguished Chairman JOE MOAKLEY for their inspired decision to grant appropriators a special waiver from House rules. It would have been highly unlikely that this provision would have passed without this waiver.

The purpose behind section 89 legislation was for businesses to provide the same health care benefits to all its employees. Unfortunately, due to the complexity and confusion caused by the myriad of regulations in this bill, it has been virtually impossible for firms to implement section 89, especially for those small businesses that do not have the accounting resources that are available to large firms. The paperwork requirements and the cost of running the new tests are astronomical.

Furthermore, there is evidence that suggests that the current claims that existing plans discriminate against low-paid workers are grossly exaggerated. The net result of these burdensome rules is that they will reduce the level of health insurance benefits available to workers. Any reduction in health benefits will only hurt the average wage earner because it sharply curtails the medical options available to employees.

I am pleased to see that we have taken the first step toward eliminating section 89 regulations. We must be persistent in our pursuit of this goal; therefore, I urge my colleagues to continue to support any and all efforts to repeal section 89.

WE MUST REMAIN READY TO USE MILITARY FORCE

(Mr. BRENNAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, there was a positive sign coming from Iran this morning when the Iranian President Rafsanjani announced Iran's willingness to engage in dialog with the United States regarding the fate of our hostages held in Lebanon. I urge President Bush and Secretary of State Baker to follow up this offer of assistance to determine whether Iran is sincere in offering to help resolve a shameful situation.

Our hostages, some held for over 4 years, deserve our full diplomatic efforts to bring them home. Our Nation remains firm in our commitment to refrain from negotiating with terrorists. However, all avenues of dialog to obtain their release must be kept open to help to obtain their release.

With the lingering threats of death being posed against our captured citizens, we must retain the option of using our military forces to strike against those responsible for this tragedy. However, our use of force must not be indiscriminate, but those who threaten us must be certain of our resolve to respond. I know that the people of Maine share my outrage at the execution, or apparent execution, of Lieutenant Colonel Higgins and would support military action if the terrorists resort to continued violence.

We must take full advantage of this hopeful signal from Iran and seek a peaceful resolution of this long hostage ordeal, but remain ready to use military force in response to further violence against our citizenry.

SHAME ON YOU, ROBERT MOSBACHER

(Mr. RAVENEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RAVENEL. Mr. Speaker, whoever would have dreamed during the campaign that candidate George Bush could, within a year of his election, be condoning the drowning of threatened and endangered sea turtles in shrimpers' nets, this in clear violation of article VII of the Endangered Species Act? That is exactly what is happening, thanks to Bush's gutless Secretary of Commerce, Robert Mosbacher, who has bowed to threats of violence from shrimpers in the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, what a crime against the environment Mosbacher's shameful actions are. They have saddened and outraged millions of Americans.

What has Bush given us in Robert Mosbacher? Is he the James Watt of the Bush administration? Shame on you, Robert Mosbacher, for killing endangered sea turtles. Shame on you.

A SIMPLIFIED TAX RETURN FOR TAXPAYERS OVER AGE 65

(Mr. PICKLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks).

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, taxpayers with relatively straightforward tax issues have for some time been able to file simplified tax returns. These forms, the Form 1040A and the Form 1040EZ, have been a worthwhile addition to the Internal Revenue Service's stable of forms. Filling out a tax return may never be entirely painless, but taxpayers have found these forms to be more "user-friendly" than the regular Form 1040. They are written in relatively plain English, and are significantly easier to read and understand than the full-length Form 1040. According to IRS estimates, it takes taxpayers 5 hours more to keep the necessary records, learn about the law, and fill in the form when they use a regular Form 1040 than when they use the Form 1040EZ. Taxpayers using the Form 1040A typically spend 2 hours less completing these chores than taxpayers who use the Form 1040.

There is one problem with these simplified forms, however; only certain classes of taxpayers are eligible to file them. If you are over 65 years old, you cannot use the Form 1040EZ. There is no age restriction for the Form 1040A, but you are not eligible to file it if you have pension income or have taxable Social Security benefits, you cannot use the Form 1040A either. So, a significant proportion of taxpayers over age 65 have to fill out the full-length 1040.

There are about 12 million taxpayers over age 65. For some time I have felt that it was unfair to exclude many in this group from the simplified reporting benefits of the Forms 1040A and 1040EZ, and I urge the IRS to try to figure out a way to fix the forms for these taxpayers. Yesterday the Ways and Means Oversight Subcommittee held a hearing on tax forms. At the hearing the Commissioner of the IRS announced that the IRS has developed a model simplified form that will be available for taxpayers over age 65 with pension income and taxable Social Security benefits. The IRS will soon begin testing the form, and if all things go well, as I hope they do, many taxpayers over age 65 should find it a lot easier to fill out their tax return when the 1990 filing season rolls around.

MOTOR VEHICLE EMISSION CONTROL ACT OF 1989

(Mr. SKAGGS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today the toughest legislation yet to control air pollution from cars, trucks, buses, and motorcycles. The Motor Vehicle Emission Control Act of 1989 is stronger than all previous legislative proposals to reduce motor vehicle pollution, including a similar bill I introduced during the 100th Congress.

Throughout the 1980's, Congress has failed to reauthorize and strengthen the Clean Air Act, the flagship statute among our Nation's environmental laws, even though authority to fund implementation of the act expired in 1981. We have allowed political and parochial concerns to keep us from protecting the health of our Nation's people. This should be the year, before this decade ends, when we finally break through our self-imposed and self-defeating deadlock and pass a meaningful clean air bill.

The need is great and clear. At stake is both the current quality of life in this country and, ultimately, perhaps the very ability to sustain life on this planet. We have only one atmosphere. We're not going to be able to get a new one if we continue to poison this one past the point of no return.

The way to begin taking better care of our air is to strengthen the Clean Air Act. With the original enactment of this legislation in 1970, Congress established some basic goals which, when finally achieved, will protect people from the direct health threats of air pollution. Foremost among those goals are the national air quality standards—the levels of pollution that threaten people's health when exceeded.

Nineteen years after the passage of that act, we still haven't achieved those air quality goals. A key reason for that failure is the enormous amount of pollution continuing to be produced by our motor vehicles, which are the major sources of urban air pollution.

I had hoped that President Bush's clean air proposal would, as promised, make really dramatic strides toward reducing air pollution. Although there are a number of good provisions in the President's recently unveiled proposal, it misses the target by a mile when it comes to car and truck pollution. In fact, the President's bill would actually weaken emissions standards for new cars by allowing "emissions averaging." To attack air pollution without attacking its chief source makes little sense from either a practical or an environmental perspective. It's simply illogical, ill-conceived, and inadequate.

But what's more is that cities will still have to meet clean air standards regardless of whether the President supports tighter controls on automobile emissions. So, if the Federal Government fails to fulfill its special and exclusive responsibility to tighten tailpipe standards, all additional emission reductions will have to be achieved by State and local governments. And that means relying on the more costly, more time consuming, less effective, and less popular measures available to them.

Why should people accept the inconvenience and costs of mandatory no-drive days when something as simple and relatively inexpensive as cleaner exhaust can achieve the same goals?

The amendments to the Clean Air Act that I am introducing today would finally establish the motor vehicle emission controls we need to be able to meet our national, health-based air quality standards. The bill would do so by mandating tough, new standards for car and truck emissions.

With the vehicle emission standards mandated by Congress, first in the original Clean Air Act and then in the comprehensive amendment to it passed in 1977, dramatic progress has been made in reducing emissions from each newly manufactured vehicle. But increases in the number of vehicles on the road, and in the miles each travels, have prevented translating the reduction in emissions from individual vehicles into a comparable reduction in cumulative emissions from all motor vehicles.

If we continue on the present course, continuing increases in the number of vehicles and in vehicle miles traveled will lead to a resumption of an increase in total motor vehicle emissions, even after all older, dirty vehicles have been replaced by newer, clearner ones. So, unless the Government places new controls on exhaust emissions, Coloradans and others living in nonattainment areas, will see levels of CO_2 and ozone going up again by the end of this century. In short, the gains we have made in our fight for clean air will be lost.

And this is the good news. We haven't even begun to address other motor vehicle pollution problems.

Representative HENRY A. WAXMAN, the chairman of the Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Health and the Environment and the House's leading proponent of strong clean air legislation, has introduced the most sweeping clean air bill in years. That bill, H.R. 2323, one of three clean air bills he is proposing this year, includes a full range of additional measures needed to finally achieve the national air quality standards, including many excellent proposals to reduce motor vehicle polluton. I joined him as an original cosponsor and testified in strong support of his bill before his subcommittee. I have also decided to introduce this separate bill to propose important additional measures, beyond those in H.R. 2323, which I believe should be included in the comprehensive clean air bill that I hope Congress will pass this year.

The Motor Vehicle Emission Control Act of 1989 includes comprehensive amendment to title II of the Federal Clean Air Act, to strengthen pollution control requirements for cars, trucks, and other motor vehicles. The bill incorporates all of the major title II improvements that are in H.R. 2323—the clean air legislation introduced earlier this year by Congressman HENRY WAXMAN—and adds several important new proposals. These include: A technology-forcing provision which would require long-term reductions in carbon dioxide emissions from the in-use fleet of all categories of vehicles; a tougher carbon monoxide standard for cars and trucks; an aromatic hydrocarbon content standard for diesel fuel; a prohibition on particulate emissions from diesel-fueled buses; provisions to improve section 207(c) recall compliance; permanent authorization for high altitude test centers; and, the addition of high altitude standards for all motor vehicles.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert in the RECORD at the end of these remarks a brief summary of the major provisions of my legislation.

Mr. Speaker, this is the year for clean air. We have a President who is willing to work with the Congress and we have a Congress which is committed to action. But what's most important—we have a Nation of people who simply cannot wait any longer for clean air to breathe. Let's work together for survival. It's our future, it's our children's future, and it's our planet's future.

SUMMARY OF THE MOTOR VEHICLE CONTROL ACT OF 1989

EMISSION STANDARDS

The bill would tighten virtually every federal standards for emissions from motor vehicles. It would strengthen seventeen separate standards in two phases—first, short term reductions and second, long term, technology-forcing reductions. In addition, the bill would require light duty trucks, which functionally have become another form of passenger vehicles, to meet the same emission standards as automobiles.

The bill would essentially prohibit soot (particulate) emissions from buses, thus inducing manufacturers to shift to the production of methanol-fueled buses.

The following table outlines the emission standards that would be established under the Motor Vehicles Emission Control Act of 1989:

TABLE 1.—EMISSION STANDARDS FOR GASOLINE AND DIESEL FUELED LIGHT DUTY VEHICLES WEIGHING LESS THAN 3,750 LBS

Pollutant	Model years	Standard [1]
HC	1993 through 1999	0.25 gpm.
HC	2000 and after	0.125 gpm.
NOX	1993 through 1999	0.4 gpm.
NOX	2000 and after	0.2 gpm.
CO_2	1992 through 1994	3.4 gpm.
CO	1995 and after	1.7 gpm.
PM	1992 and after	0.08 gpm.

[1] Standards are expressed in grams per mile (gpm).
[2] Applicable in California as well as other States notwithstanding section 209(b).

TABLE 2.—EMISSION STANDARDS FOR GASOLINE AND DIESEL FUELED TRUCKS AND BUSES

Vehicle or engine type	Pollutant model years	Standard [1]
Trucks (3,750 lbs or more but less than 5,750 lbs).	HC 1993 and after	0.5 gpm.
Do	NOX 1993 and after	0.5 gpm.
Do	CO 1993 and after	4.0 gpm.
Trucks (5,750 lbs or more but less than 10,000 lbs.	CO 1993 and after	5.6 gpm.

Vehicle or engine type	Pollutant model years	Standard [1]
Do.	HC 1993 and after	0.5 gpm.
Do	NOX 1993 and after	1.0 gpm.
Heavy duty trucks	NOX 1994–6	4.0 gpm.
Do	NOX 1997 and after	1.7 gpm.
Do	PM 1991–3	0.25 gpm.
Do	PM 1994 and after	0.1 gpm.
Do	PM 1991–3	0.1 gpm.
Do	PM 1994 and after	0.01 gpm.

[1] Standards are expressed in grams per mile (gpm) or grams per brake horsepower hour (gbh).

CARBON DIOXIDE REDUCTIONS

This bill would break new ground in the effort to reduce greenhouse gases as well as transportation-based pollution. It would require the Administrator to promulgate regulations within 18 months of enactment designed to achieve a reduction of carbon dioxide emissions from the in-use fleet of all categories of motor vehicles. The bill requires a 20% reduction in CO_2 emissions by 2005 and at least a 50% reduction by 2025.

We have a serious CO_2 problem, and there is compelling evidence that motor vehicles contribute significantly to the problem. Therefore, it makes sense to begin the process for reducing CO_2 by targeting cars and trucks. This is technology forcing in its purist form—we do not know how these ambitious goals will be achieved. However, this is entirely consistent with the approach taken in 1970 Clean Air Act, which required a 90% reduction in emissions of NO_x, CO, and HC, before technology existed to meet those targets.

COLD WEATHER COMPLIANCE

The bill would require EPA to ensure that cars meet carbon monoxide emission standards at cold temperatures—20 to 68 degrees—instead of just at warm temperatures. Currently, cars are tested only at 75 degrees and if they meet the standards at that temperature they can be certified. Cars so certified emit much more carbon monoxide at lower temperatures. As a result, the average temperature during violations of the carbon monoxide air quality standard is 45 degrees, with no violations occurring at temperatures higher than 65 degrees.

HIGH ALTITUDE COMPLIANCE

The bill would require all types of vehicles to meet national emission standards at high altitudes as well as at sea level. Currently, only light-duty vehicles (cars)—not light-duty trucks, heavy-duty trucks, or motorcycles—are required to meet the emission standards at high altitudes. In addition, the bill permanently authorizes funding for a high-altitude test center.

MANUFACTURERS' WARRANTIES

The bill would extend to ten years or 100,000 miles (whichever comes first) the period for which a properly-maintained car must meet the national emission standards. If a car fails to meet the standards during this period, the manufacturer would be liable for the costs of fixing the car so it does. Currently, this manufacturer warranty only lasts for five years or 50,000 miles. Extending the warranty period will require manufacturers to make cleaner cars to begin with, and would make manufacturers, not motorists, liable for more of the costs of cleaning up cars found out of compliance even though properly maintained.

ENHANCED INSPECTION AND MAINTENANCE

The bill would require the EPA Administrator to take into account information collected from state inspection and maintenance programs when determining which automobile models do not conform to federal standards for the purpose of enforcing section 207(c) recall provisions.

Currently, there is only a 50% compliance rate with recall notices. The bill directs the automobile manufacturers to devise the incentives necessary to increase recall compliance to 75%. It would also require non-attainment states to include measures in their SIP revisions which will increase recall compliance.

EMISSION STANDARDS FOR LOW POLLUTING VEHICLES

The bill directs the Administrator to establish tailpipe standards for autos fueled by low-polluting alternative fuels such as ethanol, methanol, propane, and natural gas.

NON-ROAD USE ENGINES

The bill directs the Administrator to establish standards for emissions of CO, HC, and HO_x, from internal combustion engines not designed for road use.

ONBOARD DIAGNOSTICS

The bill requires EPA to establish requirements providing that new vehicles include onboard diagnostic equipment to evaluate the effectiveness of emission control systems.

OXYGENATED FUELS

The bill would require that, beginning next winter, gasoline sold between October 1 and April 1 of each year in all areas exceeding the carbon monoxide air quality standard must have an oxygen content of at least two percent. According to various studies, this use of oxygenated fuels could reduce the carbon monoxide emitted from pre-1981 vehicles by 20 percent or more.

SULFUR CONTENT OF DIESEL FUELS

The bill would require EPA to establish standards to reduce the sulfur content of diesel fuels to no more than 0.05 percent by 1990. This would be an 81% reduction in the sulfur content of diesel fuel, and would be the most cost-effective way to remove particulates from diesel exhaust. A study done for the Denver Metropolitan Air Quality Council estimates that setting standards reducing the sulfur content of diesel fuel could reduce particular emissions by 33% or more.

AROMATIC HYDROCARBON CONTENT OF DIESEL FUELS

The bill would also limit the aromatic content of diesel fuels to 10%. California has already passed legislation limiting aromatics. Other states, including Colorado, are considering similar restrictions. It is far more cost effective to adopt such fuel standards on a national basis.

EVAPORATIVE GASOLINE EMISSIONS

The bill would require EPA to establish a standard providing that the volatility of gasoline sold during summer months (when ozone problems are most severe) not exceed nine pounds per square inch. The bill also would require that all motor vehicles be designed to capture gasoline vapors emitted during fueling. Both of these provisions would reduce the escape of gasoline vapors during vehicle fueling, and thereby reduce a major source of ozone.

LEADED GASOLINE

To ensure lead pollution from gasoline continues to decline, the bill would prohibit the manufacture of any vehicle that could use leaded gasoline.

WHAT ABOUT A REAL INVESTMENT IN THE FUTURE AND OUR CHILDREN?

(Mr. SARPALIUS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SARPALIUS. Mr. Speaker, as we complete the funding for the 1990 appropriations bill, we spend billions of dollars on bombers and ships and bridges and highways, and we have even given money to other countries who have never supported us in the United Nations.

But what about a real investment in the future? That is the future in education and in our children.

Only 2 cents out of every dollar go to education, but yet today close to a third of our children are quitting school. It costs $40,000 to keep an inmate in the penitentiary, but yet it only costs $3,000 to keep a kid in school.

Ninety-five percent of our inmates in our prisons are people who quit school. It is my hope that in the future that this body will pay more attention to education and the problems that are facing our children.

DO NOT ALLOW TERRORIST LIES TO DRIVE WEDGE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND ISRAEL

(Mr. ENGEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, it now appears very likely that the Shiite terrorists who murdered Col. William Higgins did so a long time ago, and not in retaliation for Israel's capture of the terrorist, Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid. It becomes apparent that the terrorists, seeking to create bad feelings between the United States and Israel, are trying to perpetrate a fraud by making it appear that the murder of Colonel Higgins was in retaliation for the capture of the Sheik.

Indeed, this is the same pattern that the terrorists have used before. Another slain U.S. hostage, William Buckley, reportedly was tortured to death in 1985, but his captors hid his death for more than a year, and then claimed they killed him in retaliation for a 1986 Israeli air strike against the PLO.

In the case of Colonel Higgins, U.N. sources say that they believe that Higgins was killed for revenge shortly after the United States battleship Vincennes shot down an Iranian jetliner over the Persian Gulf on July 3, 1988.

Indeed, the video that shows the hanging of Higgins lacks any kind of time element, such as a newspaper headline to validate where it took place, and Colonel Higgins' body has not been released, which would show exactly when he died. The videotape was delivered to a Beirut news agency for release less than 1 hour after his supposed execution, raising doubts as to how it could be made and delivered so fast.

In short, Mr. Speaker, let us not allow the lies of terrorists to drive a wedge between the United States and Israel.

ENCYCLOPEDIA OF THE U.S CONGRESS

(Mrs. BOGGS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, as we draw near the conclusion of our work for this summer, our 200th anniversary year of the House of Representatives, I would like to address the House on a very positive note.

Last week we got underway the remarkable project on the Encyclopedia of the Congress. It is a joint effort by the United States Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution of the United States, the LBJ School at the University of Texas, and the lead agency for the government, the Library of Congress. Its editors include people from the political, the journalistic and the academic world, and it is being met with great excitement in all of those communities.

It is a very interesting note that in our 200th anniversary year that a great deal of interest has been generated in the history of the Congress, in its actions, and in its projected future. This is one of the finest of all of the projects that have been undertaken by the Bicentennial Commission of the Constitution, in collaboration with the Congress and with the academic and journalistic worlds.

WOMEN'S ECONOMIC EQUITY PACKAGE

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week the Congressional Caucus on Women's Issues, which is a bipartisan group of men and women who really have worked very hard to bring equity for American women, introduced our fifth economic equity package. This is the fifth in a row, and it is for this session of Congress.

It is a compilation of 26 different bills dealing with the quality of education for women of all ages, all levels, in the business community, in education, in retirement, the whole nine yards.

Many Members of this body have been cosponsors, and I hope many more will. Eighteen of the bills cost less than $1.8 million. These are all bills that we put together that would not have been needed to be put together if the Equal Rights Amendment had passed. However, we know that it did not.

Since we collect equal taxes from women, it seems it is very important to make this move to try and get at least equal benefits for women in these dfferent areas. I hope many Members will join in sponsoring this fifth economic equity package that the women's caucus has put together.

ADDITION OF NAME OF MEMBERS AS ORIGINAL COSPONSOR OF H.R. 3030

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentlewoman from Maryland, [Mrs. BYRON] be added as an original cosponsor to the bill H.R. 3030, which is the President's Comprehensive Clean Air Act legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARCIA). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE DAY

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 253) designating September 8, 1989, as "National Pledge of Allegiance Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, under my reservation I yield to my dear friend and colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT], who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, continuing my reservation of objection, I yield to my colleague, another gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 253, introduced by our good colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOEHLERT] designating September 8, 1989, to be "National Pledge of Allegiance Day."

Our American flag serves as a beacon of hope and freedom throughout the world. It is the symbol that men and women have pledged themselves to, in the belief that "liberty and justice for all" are ideals to be defended. The cost of freedom has often been high, but never has the burning desire to throw off the yoke of tyranny been extinguished. The young students who courageously spoke out against their own repressive government in China, only to be brutally massacred in Tiananmen Square, understood full well the tenets of the American pledge of allegiance. Tragically, Mr. Speaker, many were made to pay the ultimate price as they sought to fulfill their vision.

Today, my distinguished colleague Mr. BOEHLERT asks that we pay tribute to the pledge of allegiance and to its author, Mr. Bellamy, by declaring September 8, 1989, to be "National Pledge of Allegiance Day." Our colleague from New York also proposes to include the centennial observance of the pledge as part of the 1992 Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee celebration—an idea already endorsed by the event's organizers. I support him in this effort.

It is of great importance that we, as Americans, reaffirm our faith in the ideals of our pledge of allegiance, by declaring September 8, 1989, to be "National Pledge of Allegiance Day."

Accordingly, I urge our colleagues to join with us in support of this worthy legislation.

□ 1130

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is threefold: first, it designates September 8, 1989 as National Pledge of Allegiance Day and calls upon the President of the United States to urge the American people to observe this day by displaying the U.S. flag and participating in other appropriate activities. The second purpose of the resolution is to recognize the author of the pledge to our flag, Francis Bellamy of Rome, NY, in my congressional district. And the third purpose is to urge the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commission to include the centennial observance of the pledge in its commemorative activities. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the Columbus Commission has already enthusiastically endorsed this resolution.

Many people have talked about the Pledge to the flag—particularly this year. But I don't think many people are particularly familiar with it. Let me point out a few facts for my colleagues. Francis Bellamy grew up in Rome, NY, and graduated from the Rome Free Academy. He studied theology at what is now the University of Rochester and for a time, worked as a Baptist minister in Little Falls, NY. But his interest in journalism drew Mr. Ballamy away from the ministry and he embarked on a journalism career in Boston, working for a magazine with young people of the day called Youth's Companion. For many years, the magazine had spearheaded a drive to have the American flag flown over every schoolhouse in America.

During 1892, as part of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, Bellemy wrote the pledge to encourage schoolchildren nationwide to honor and salute their flag on a national holiday. Youth's Companion first published the pledge on September 8, 1892.

The original pledge contained just 23 words, and I remember them well, as I'm sure do those of my colleagues who were growing up at the same time:

I pledge allegiance to my flag, and to the republic for which it stands, one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

Since 1892, the words have changed a little bit; the appropriately added phrase "under God," for example. In 1942, Congress made the pledge an official part of the U.S. Flag Code and it has certainly become one of America's truly great traditions; unique among all other nations.

And so Mr. Speaker, with this little history, it is a particular pleasure to me to be able to have this resolution before the House of Representatives. And I want to thank all of my colleagues who were so responsive to my request that they join in cosponsoring this important resolution. I particularly want to thank my colleagues, Mr. SAWYER of Ohio, chairman of the subcommittee of jurisdiction, and my good friend, colleague, and classmate, Mr. RIDGE of Pennsylvania.

I think we would all do well, Mr. Speaker, to observe the pledge in so many different ways. This resolution pinpoints one particular way that we as a nation can pay tribute to our pledge, to its author Francis Bellamy, and to the 500th anniversary of the discovery of our continent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARCIA). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 253

Whereas Francis Bellamy wrote the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag in 1892 in observance of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America;

Whereas The Pledge of Allegiance first appeared in print in the September 8, 1892, edition of The Youth's Companion magazine;

Whereas in 1942, the 77th Congress passed, and the President approved, legislation concerning the display and use of the United States flag, which included the Pledge of Allegiance; and

Whereas the Pledge of Allegiance is one of the most widely recited verses of American literature: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. NATIONAL PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE DAY.

September 8, 1989, is designated as "National Pledge of Allegiance Day". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe this day by displaying the United States flag and by participating in other appropriate activities.

SEC. 2. USE OF THE PLEDGE DURING CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS QUINCENTENARY JUBILEE ACTIVITIES.

It is the sense of the Congress that the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commission, created pursuant to Public Law 98-375 to commemorate the 500th anniversary in 1992 of the discovery of America, should include the centennial observance of the Pledge of Allegiance in its commemorative activities.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL NEIGHBORHOOD CRIME WATCH DAY

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 136) designating August 8, 1988, as "National Neighborhood Crime Watch Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to our colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. HUGHES. I thank the gentleman from Pennslyvania for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 293, which seeks to designate August 8, 1989, as "National Neighborhood Crime Watch Day."

This resolution is intended to promote public awareness of the growing crime prevention organization across this country, and their increased effectiveness in fighting crime. The central event of this day will be a "national night out," when an estimated 18 million people from 6,000 communities in all 50 States across this country will participate in an anticrime demonstration by gathering in front of their homes with their neighbors between 8 and 9 p.m. in a show of solidarity against crime.

The purpose of the "national night out" and other related programs, ceremonies, and activities is to promote several goals: increase the cooperation between community watch programs and their local law enforcement authorities; heighten crime prevention awareness; generate support for and participation in local anticrime programs; strengthen neighborhood spirit in the crime prevention campaign; and send a message throughout the community to let our citizens know that neighborhoods are ready and willing to combat crime.

The National Association of Town Watch which is coordinating this program is a leader in crime prevention awareness, and in 1986 received the prestigious National Crime Prevention Award from the National Crime Prevention Coalition and the U.S. Department of Justice. In my own State, the NATW works closely with the New Jersey Crime Prevention Officers Association to promote neighborhood crime watch organizations and activities. In fact, as a result of their collective efforts, New Jersey is one of the leaders in community participation in the national night out. Communities throughout Atlantic, Gloucester, and Cape May Counties, in my congressional district, are helping to make the fight against crime a winning battle by their active participation.

I commend the neighborhood watch groups of the Nation for their efforts to combat crime. Their activities demonstrate the growing effectiveness of crime watch and the increased unwillingness of Americans to allow the fear of crime to rule their everyday lives. It is my hope that the valuable example of these citizens will encourage others to join in the fight against crime.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important resolution to recognize the efforts of groups like NATW and its public-spirited members all across this country. I want to thank my colleague BILL MCCOLLUM of Florida for his outstanding support and leadership in bringing this resolution to the floor of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I also thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], who is always in the forefront of efforts to combat crime and substance abuse.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDGE. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 293, introduced by my good friend and colleague the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], who also serves as the distinguished chairman of our Crime Subcommittee, designating August 8, 1989 to be "National Neighborhood Crime Watch Day."

The terrible violence and suffering associated with the national scourge of illicit drug abuse, has helped energize the public's outcry against all crime. While personal efforts by individual citizens is important, organized community action is indispensable if the war on drugs and other crime is to be won.

A neighborhood can effectuate positive change, when in cooperation with local law enforcement officials, it mobilizes its members in an effort to eradicate crime from its streets and homes.

National Neighborhood Crime Watch Day is designed to coincide and complement the National Night Out, an anticrime event celebrating its sixth anniversary. An estimated 20 million people from over 7,000 communities in all 50 States of this country, will unite in this nationwide event on August 8, 1989.

I invite my colleagues to join in support of this worthy legislation, encouraging the involvement of our neighborhoods in our war against crime.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I again thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] for yielding to me and the chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER] for so efficiently and ably bringing this joint resolution to the floor.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 136, to designate August 8, 1989, as "National Neighborhood Crime Watch Day."

This Nation is currently engaged in a battle against crime throughout many of our communities. This struggle requires the cooperation of law enforcement officials and citizens, alike.

Senate Joint Resolution 136 proclaims August 8, 1989, as a National Night Out. On this night, an estimated 20 million people from 7,500 communities in all 50 States will take to the streets of their communities in an anti-crime demonstration. I believe that National Night Out, as well as the other programs and activities planned to coincide with National Neighborhood Crime Watch Day, are important in heightening community awareness that citizens can, and must, take an active role in the fight against crime.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Congressman HUGHES and Congressman MCCOLLUM for all of their efforts in getting this resolution to the floor today.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 136

Whereas neighborhood crime is of continuing concern to the American people;

Whereas the fight against neighborhood crime requires people to work together in cooperation with law enforcement officials;

Whereas neighborhood crime watch organizations are effective at promoting awareness about, and the participation of volunteers in, crime prevention activities at the local level;

Whereas neighborhood crime watch groups can contribute to the Nation's war on drugs by helping to prevent their communities from becoming markets for drug dealers;

Whereas citizens across America will soon take part in a "National Night Out", a unique crime prevention event which will demonstrate the importance and effectiveness of community participation in crime prevention efforts by having people spend the period from 8 to 10 o'clock post-meridian on August 8, 1989, with their neighbors in front of their homes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That August 8, 1989, is designated as "National Neighborhood Crime Watch Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE PROPOSED COMPROMISE IS THE BEST DEAL WE'RE GOING TO GET OUT OF THIS ADMINISTRATION

(Mr. MCMILLEN of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MCMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, although I am pleased the President has agreed to compromise to split the S&L package partly on-budget and partly off-budget, we all know that the on-budget treatment would be more honest, would be more fiscally responsible and more economical.

We would save $5 billion, based on the interest rate spread, and much more, by giving Treasury the flexibility to issue different kinds of maturities for the bonds. But the issue that we are missing is the fact remains that the bailout has geen grossly underestimated by the administration. That is because the assumptions that the administration is using are basically bogus. They are: no recession for 10 years, interest rates falling from 7.5 percent to 4.4 percent, deposit growth in the S&L industry averaging 7 percent when we have seen massive withdrawals in the last few months. And because of the perverse incentives in the Southwest deals that were cut last December, which will inevitably cost us a lot more money, we will probably come back to this body in 2 to 3 years asking for another $30 billion.

I think it incumbent we save every last nickel for the taxpayers.

The compromise being proposed is the best deal we are going to get out of this administration.

I think we should move forward with it.

COMMENDING CITIZENS OF SIOUX CITY, IA, TRISTATE AREA IN UNITED AIRLINES FLIGHT 232 DISASTER

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 379) commending the citizens of the Sioux City, IA, tristate area for their heroism and spirit of voluntarism in selflessly providing assistance and life-saving services to the passengers and crew of United Airlines flight 232, and ask for its immediate consideration.

□ 1140

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DELLUMS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRANDY], the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. GRANDY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman and the subcommittee for bringing this resolution to the floor in a timely manner.

Mr. Speaker, this is a somewhat unusual resolution, because it is commending an entire community, an entire area. And these people are still alive. We are commending an accomplishment that took place less than a month ago. Normally, we reserve this time to commend people that are no longer on this planet or we set aside days.

We are doing neither in this particular, unusual instance because of the extraordinary unusual accomplishment that took place in my hometown of Sioux City, IA, at the Sioux Gateway Airport on July 19 of this year.

The Sioux City Tristate Area, Mr. Speaker, is made up of Sioux City, IA; South Sioux City, NE, represented by our colleague [Mr. BEREUTER]; and North Sioux City, SD, represented by our colleague Mr. TIM JOHNSON.

However, we are commending today a network of towns and cities and people who rose up in the wake of an extraordinary disaster and tragedy, and turned that tragedy into a miracle. When United flight 232 crash landed at the Sioux Gateway Airport, any person who saw that footage, could have only believed, that anyone involved in that flight could not have lived—296 people were on that flight; 111 died; but miraculously, 185 survived. Survived because of the combined efforts of the captain and the crew of flight 232, the air traffic controllers, and then the citizens of the Siouxland Tristate Area who responded with heroism and volunteerism in a manner that this Congress and this country does not often see.

Before I go any further, I want to particularly again thank my friend from Ohio for bringing this resolution so expeditiously to the floor. Normally, as our colleagues know, it takes 218 signatures to get a resolution to the floor, and it takes time in the press of legislative business, to go around and solicit the signatures. This takes quite a bit of time. This resolution took less than 2 days. I want to thank all of my colleagues who signed on to this resolution, and in so doing said to me, personally, "You have a lot to be proud of. Your community has shown us what a model of volunteerism and community spirit should be."

I wrote the President last week and said:

Mr. President, if you ever wanted an example of a thousand points of light, it is happening in Sioux City.

Now, I would like to, in the time that I have, talk about some of the people that I think we should say a particular thanks to, who turned this tragedy into a miracle. First of all my constituents and all of the people from the Siouxland area owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to Captain Haynes and the crew of 232, who under the most difficult, almost impossible circumstances, landed that plane. Incidentally, when Captain Haynes gave his press release, as he got out of the hospital a week after the tragedy, he in particular paid tribute to an air traffic controller named Kevin Bachman who was in the Sioux Gateway Airport. Captain Haynes said, "Without his help, without that calm voice, I never would have brought that plane in." Kevin Bachman is one of the heroes of the Sioux City Tristate area. We also in this resolution commend the Woodbury County Disaster Committee which is largely responsible for the coordinated success of the rescue effort. Gary Brown, the director of the Woodbury County Disaster Committee is the person that put this group together, and is the person, along with the 185th Tactical Fighter Group of the Iowa National Guard, who was rehearsed and ready to go with a rescue effort that is unparalleled. The city of Sioux City was honored this week to have the Secretary of Transportation, Mr. Samuel Skinner, not only commend the citizens for their timely response, but to say this is a model for disaster and rescue efforts that is not only unprecedented in the Nation, but perhaps in the world. This was coordinated and put together by the likes of Gary Brown and the Woodbury County Disaster Committee, Lt. Col. Dennis Swanstrom, of the 185th Tactical Guard Unit based in Sioux City, and 38 small communities, 38 towns around the Nebraska, South Dakota, and Iowa region, that responded to that disaster, some of them from over 150 miles away. We did not use all of them. But, they all came. This is another example of voluntarism beyond the call of duty.

We had to laugh, although it was obviously a very grisly night on July 19, because the tension was somewhat eased by humor when on the Larry King show, Larry King, I am sure, inadvertently, said, "Do you have a hospital in Sioux City?" Not only do we have a hospital in Sioux City, Mr. Speaker, we have a burn unit and trauma unit, where 100 doctors were waiting for the patients that were brought into those facilities, within 15 minutes after the crash. As anybody who knows anything about medicine can tell Members, the first hour after a person sustains trauma is the determinant as to whether that person lives or dies or will have crippling injuries the rest of his or her life. Not only 100 doctors, 150 IV's and gurneys in the corridors of the Marian Health Center and St. Luke's Hospital and nurses and backup health care professionals waiting to go, many of them, giving up their days off, coming in, responding to the needs of the injured, and this may be the most extraordinary example of the volunteer spirit, 450 pints of blood volunteered and contributed without one appeal requested.

I sent my staff up to those hospitals when I learned the extent of the tragedy and said, "Go up there and do whatever you can, hold hands, make phone calls," and by the time they got there, they were told, "Congressman, thank you, but we cannot use your people, we have too many volunteers."

I want to thank Dr. David Greco, medical director of the emergency department of the Marian Health Care Center, for marshalling those forces and saving those lives.

Finally, whenever there is a disaster, there are the people who have survived, happily, but there are also the victims and their families. Briar Cliff College and Morningside College in Sioux City took those people in and opened up their doors and made beds and had students and faculty waiting to comfort those who physically had survived the crash, but emotionally, still were terribly injured. Sister Margaret Wick, the president of Briar Cliff College, and Robert Sheehan, director of the Boys and Girls Home in Sioux City, held hands and provided hugs and took care of those families who came to Sioux City for what amounted to a death watch. Their contribution is above and beyond the call of duty, and the more stories I hear, the prouder I am of my hometown.

I can tell Members that I have grown up in Sioux City and lived there much of my life. It is a Midwestern city, probably not unlike the chairman's community of Akron or the gentleman from Pennsylvania's home town. We do not get much recognition. We do not ask for much. We do not expect much. However, prior to this disaster, I would assume if Members knew anything about Sioux City, IA, Members probably knew it had a major stockyard there, and was the previous home of Dear Abby. Now when people mention Sioux City, that is not the first thing that comes to their lips, Mr. Speaker. They talk about the people and they speak with pride.

In the time that I have remaining, I would like to merely say, regardless of this heroic effort, we can never mitigate the horror of losing 111 lives. Children lost their mothers in this crash. Mothers lost their children. An entire family from St. Albans, VT, was killed in this tragedy. But, the nameless heroes that participated, in some way, perhaps, added a note of hope and optimism to a tragedy that otherwise could have been one of the great catastrophes in American aviation history, and turned it into one of our heroic events.

One final note. Last week, a week after the disaster, a Northwest Airlines flight en route from Minneapolis, radioed the tower in Sioux City and said, "We have only one engine, we may have to have an emergency landing." When that plane landed safely the medical units, the 185th Tactical National Guard Unit, and all the medical personnel were in place and ready to go, Mr. Speaker, for what happily did not occur. But they were prepared.

Mr. Speaker, I would at this time like to insert in the RECORD a copy of the letter to Siouxland that Secretary Samuel Skinner read.

OPEN LETTER TO CITIZENS OF THE SIOUXLAND AREA

On behalf of President Bush, employees of the Department of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration, I want to express my heartfelt appreciation to all the citizens of the Siouxland area for your generosity, compassion and professionalism during the aftermath of the crash of United Airlines Flight 232 at the Sioux City airport on July 19. From helping victims at the scene, to donating blood and food, to just being there to hold someone's hand and provide support, your response to this tragic situation typified what America is all about. Beyond the professional effort of those trained in getting people to the hospitals and those who served the long hours aiding the survivors, was the collective expression of people just eager to help their fellow man.

You did all of this not for money or for headlines; you did it because it typified the spirit of the heartland of America. You did it because it was the right thing to do.

SAMUEL K. SKINNER.

□ 1150

Mr. Speaker, let me just read these final lines that sum up what I am trying to say in my remarks. This is the response of the Secretary of Transportation to the people of Siouxland.

He said:

You did all of this not for money or for headlines. You did it because it typified the spirit of the heartland of America. You did it because it was the right thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, my home town, Sioux City, has been saluted by the Washington Post, CBS News, and the Secretary of Transportation. It is only fitting that we in Congress officially express the thanks of a grateful nation.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRANDY] has certainly said it all. It was an incredible effort by an incredible group of people in that tristate area.

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDGE. I am pleased to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in commending my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER] and my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE] for bringing before us this resolution of commendation for the people of Sioux City, IA. That is a place with which I am familiar, having been in and out of Sioux City, IA, many years ago, helping them to improve the standard of living of the people who are employed in the stockyards of that city.

Not only do I want to commend the medical officials and the city officials and the volunteers who joined in this rescue mission, I want to commend that crew, that captain and that entire crew, who exercised what I, as well as many other people, consider to be commendable skills and, yes, cool heads that enabled them to save those 185 lives. While we mourn the 111 lives that we lost, we must recognize that that crew did more than they ever should have been expected to do under those circumstances.

This is not a military situation. If it were, I know there would be a military medal of honor available for them. But if there is any way this Congress could see its way clear to honor them further with some kind of recognition of the kind of role this crew played in saving the lives of those people, I think we ought to do it. If it means bringing that captain before this Congress and taking a couple of minutes of the time of the Congress to recognize that role, I think we ought to do it.

Mr. GRANDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDGE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GRANDY. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to associate myself with the remarks of my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES], and say that I would be pleased to work with him on any kind of commendation that honors that great crew, all the way down to the stewardesses who participated in the rescue operations that followed that disaster.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DELLUMS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 379

Whereas United Airlines Flight 232 tragically crashed while making an emergency landing attempt at the Sioux Gateway Airport in Sioux City, Iowa, on July 19, 1989;

Whereas the skills and courage of the pilot, flight crew, and air traffic controllers, and the immediate mobilization of State and local rescue units from Iowa, Nebraska, and South Dakota, significantly contributed to the survival of 185 of the 296 passengers aboard the flight;

Whereas the disaster plan which had been designed by the Woodbury County Disaster Committee was largely responsible for the remarkable success of the rescue effort;

Whereas the people of the Sioux City, Iowa, tri-State area mobilized without hesitation to provide aid and comfort to the injured;

Whereas by the time that United Airlines Flight 232 touched down, the Sioux Gateway Crash Fire and Rescue Squad, the 185th Tactical Fighter Group of the Iowa Air National Guard, members of city police forces and county sheriffs' departments, municipal firefighters, Red Cross workers, and other local rescue teams were on the scene to immediately begin to help the wounded and transport them for treatment;

Whereas the physicians, nurses, and other personnel of St. Luke's Regional Medical Center and the Marian Health Center worked exhaustively to treat the injured;

Whereas hundreds of people in the Sioux City, Iowa, tri-State area donated blood at a local bloodbank without solicitation to assist in the treatment efforts;

Whereas Briar Cliff College and Morningside College opened their dormitories to the survivors, the families of the survivors, rescue teams, and investigators while residents contributed blankets, clothing, and food; and

Whereas had it not been for the remarkable speed, skill, and preparedness of the emergency crews, and the assistance and generosity of the people of the Sioux City, Iowa, tri-State area, the number of survivors would likely have been much lower: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the citizens of the Sioux City, Iowa, tri-State area are commended for their heroism and spirit of volunteerism in selflessly providing assistance and life-saving services to the passengers and crew of United Airlines Flight 232, and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation making such commendation.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SAWYER

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAWYER: Page 3, Paragraph 3, strike "Crash Fire and" and insert "Crash, Fire, and".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MENTAL ILLNESS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 55) to designate the week of October 1 through October 7, 1989, as "Mental Illness Awareness Week," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I simply take this time to recognize the efforts of our colleague, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN], who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 55, to designate the week of October 1, 1989, as "Mental Illness Awareness Week."

Historically, persons suffering from mental illnesses have been feared and misunderstood by others. Mental illness is a disability that when properly recognized can be treated accordingly. In most cases, persons suffering from mental illnesses, who have received a correct diagnosis and treatment, are able to recover and lead normal lives.

Unfortunately, the perceptions of many Americans about mental illness remain in the dark ages, when victims of mental illness were shut away from society forever. The passage of this resolution will send a message to the public that mental illness is a treatable disease. The resolution also will assist in removing the stigma society places upon those suffering with the disease.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Congressman WYDEN for all of his efforts in getting this worthy resolution to the floor today.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 55

Whereas mental illness is a problem of grave concern and consequence in American society, widely but unnecessarily feared and misunderstood;

Whereas thirty-one to forty-one million Americans annually suffer from clearly diagnosable mental disorders involving significant disability with respect to employment, attendance at school, or independent living;

Whereas more than ten million Americans are disabled for long periods of time by schizophrenia, manic depressive disorder, and major depression;

Whereas between 30 and 50 percent of the homeless suffer serious, chronic forms of mental illness;

Whereas alcohol, drug, and mental disorders affect almost 19 percent of American adults in any six-month period;

Whereas mental illness in at least twelve million children interferes with vital developmental and maturational processes;

Whereas mental disorder-related deaths are estimated to be thirty-three thousand, with suicide accounting for at least twenty-nine thousand, although the real number is thought to be at least three times higher;

Whereas our growing population of the elderly is particularly vulnerable to mental illness;

Whereas estimates indicate that one in ten AIDS patients will develop dementia or other psychiatric problems as the first sign of the disease and as many as two-thirds of AIDS patients will show neuropsychiatric symptoms before they die;

Whereas mental disorders result in staggering costs to society, estimated to be in excess of $249,000,000,000 in direct treatment and support and indirect costs to society, including lost productivity;

Whereas mental illness is increasingly a treatable disability with excellent prospects for amelioration and recovery when properly recognized;

Whereas families of mentally ill persons and those persons themselves have begun to join self-help groups seeking to combat the unfair stigma of these diseases, to support greater national investment in research, and to advocate an adequate continuum of care from hospital to community;

Whereas in recent years there have been unprecedented major research developments bringing new methods and technology to the sophisticated and objective study of the functioning of the brain and its linkages to both normal and abnormal behavior;

Whereas research in recent decades has led to a wide array of new and more effective modalities of treatment (both somatic and psychosocial) for some of the most incapacitating forms of mental illness (including schizophrenia, major affective disorders, phobias, and phobic disorders);

Whereas appropriate treatment of mental illness has been demonstrated to be cost effective in terms of restored productivity, reduced utilization of other health services, and lessened social dependence; and

Whereas recent and unparalleled growth in scientific knowledge about mental illness has generated the current emergency of a new threshold of opportunity for future research advances and fruitful application to specific clinical problems: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the seven-day period beginning October 1, 1989, and ending October 7, 1989, is designated as "Mental Illness Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe that week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL WILDERNESS WEEK

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 67) to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the Wilderness Act of 1964 which established the National Wilderness Preservation System, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I simply want to acknowledge the efforts and the work of our colleague and friend, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL], who is the chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and also the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDGE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of Senate Joint Resolution 163, to designate the week of September 3, 1989, as "National Wilderness Week."

This year marks the 25th anniversary of the Wilderness Act of 1964, which established the National Wilderness Act of 1964, which established the National Wilderness Preservation System. Prior to the enactment of the Wilderness Act, the Federal Government was protecting approximately 14 million acres of wild land, much of it designated as "primitive areas" in national forests. Today, the Wilderness preservation System contains over 90 million acres of land, in 44 States, which can be found in national parks, national forests, national wildlife refuges, and land overseen by the Bureau of Land Management of the Department of the Interior.

The Wilderness Act of 1964 provided that:

A wilderness, in contrast with those areas where man and his own works dominate the landscape, is hereby recognized as an area where the earth and the community of life are untrammeled by man, where man himself is a visitor who does not remain.

I believe this description accurately states the importance of designating areas as wilderness. These public lands are owned and managed by the Federal Government, in their natural state, for the enjoyment of all people. A wilderness designation allows us to preserve ecological, geological, scientific, educational, scenic, and historical values.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Congressman UDALL, chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs which has jurisdiction over all of our public lands, for his lifelong dedication to protecting our environment and for his efforts in getting this worthy resolution to the floor today.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to join with 231 cosponsors to bring before the House a joint resolution designating the week of September 3, 1989, as National Wilderness Week to commemorate the silver anniversary of the Wilderness Act.

Twenty-five years ago the Wilderness Act was signed into law. The act established the first system of protected wilderness in the world. The protection of our lands through parks and wilderness areas is a uniquely American idea. Americans are leading the world in setting aside and protecting the world's most valuable resource, our irreplaceable lands. In this time of increasing pressures on our environment it is fitting that we take time to honor those who had the foresight to protect our lands and to relish the wondrous places we have preserved.

Since passage of the Wilderness Act over 90 million acres of land have been included in the National Wilderness Preservation System. Magnificent areas in every State have been protected as wilderness. Congress has not completed its job of review and designation of wilderness. And completing the process is important not only to add areas to the wilderness preservation system but also to remove the cloud of indecision hanging over lands under review.

Our task is not complete but this anniversary gives us the opportunity to pause and celebrate our accomplishments as we renew our commitment to the preservation of wilderness. It is particularly fitting at this time of increasing threat to our globe by acid rain and the greenhouse effect to preserve and protect our wilderness areas.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this resolution designating National Wilderness Week.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 67

Whereas 1989 marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the National Wilderness Preservation System;

Whereas wilderness areas were created to secure for the American people the benefits of an enduring resource of wilderness;

Whereas Congressionally designated wilderness is an area of undeveloped Federal land where earth and nature are untrammeled by man, and where man is a visitor who does not remain;

Whereas wilderness areas allow us to preserve ecological, geological, scientific, educational, scenic, and historical values;

Whereas wilderness provide outstanding opportunities for solitude and primitive recreation;

Whereas in 1924 the Gila Wilderness in New Mexico was the first administratively designated wilderness in the nation, and became statutory wilderness in 1964;

Whereas there are four hundred and seventy-four units totaling nearly ninety-one million acres in forty-four States that comprise the National Wilderness Preservation System today;

Whereas a wide range of individuals, organizations, and agencies with differing perspectives have worked with Congress to promote preservation of wilderness areas;

Whereas the Forest Service, the National Park Service, the Fish and Wildlife Service, and the Bureau of Land Management are entrusted to protect and manage our wilderness heritage;

Whereas the Wilderness Act passed in both houses of Congress with a strong sense of bipartisan support; and

Whereas the Wilderness Act was signed into law on September 3, 1964 by President, Lyndon Baines Johnson: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of September 3 through September 9, 1989, is designated as "National Wilderness Week". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate activities and programs.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL HOSPICE MONTH

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 78) to designate the month of November 1989 and 1990 as "National Hospice Month," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to take this time to acknowledge the work of our colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON], who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. Res. 78

Whereas hospice care has been demonstrated to be a humanitarian way for terminally ill patients to approach the end of their lives in comfort with appropriate competent and compassionate care in an environment of personal individuality and dignity;

Whereas hospice advocates care for the patient and family by attending to their physical, emotional, and spiritual needs and specifically, the pain and grief they experience;

Whereas hospice care is provided by an interdisciplinary team of physicians, nurses, social workers, pharmacists, psychological and spiritual counselors, and community volunteers trained in the hospice concept of care;

Whereas hospice is becoming a full partner in the Nation's health care system;

Whereas the enactment of a permanent medicare hospice benefit and an optional medicaid hospice benefit makes it possible for many more Americans to have the opportunity to elect to receive hospice care;

Whereas private insurance carriers and employers have recognized the value of hospice care by the inclusion of hospice benefits in health care coverage packages; and

Whereas there remains a great need to increase public awareness of the benefits of hospice care: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the month of November in 1989 and 1990 is designated as "National Hospice Month". The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all government agencies, the health care community, appropriate private organizations, and people of the United States to observe each of those months with appropriate forums, programs and activities designed to encourage national recognition of and support for hospice care as a humane response to the needs of the terminally ill and as a viable component of the Health care system in this country.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL DRIVE FOR LIFE WEEKEND

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 127) designating Labor Day weekend, September 2 through 4, 1989, as "National Drive for Life Weekend," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I simply take this time to acknowledge the good work of our colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY], who is the chief sponsor of this joint resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 127

Whereas drunk driving is the most frequently committed crime in the United States, with arrests for driving while intoxicated totaling more than three times the number of arrests for all violent crimes combined;

Whereas one individual in the United States was killed every twenty-two minutes in a drunk-driving-related crash in 1988, an average of sixty-five individuals each day;

Whereas more than twenty-three thousand individuals were killed in the United States in drunk-driving-related crashes in 1988;

Whereas two out of every five individuals in the United States will be involved in a drunk-driving-related crash at some point in their lives;

Whereas the estimates of the economic costs of drunk driving in the United States are as high as $24 billion;

Whereas Drive for Life is a public awareness campaign which asks all Americans to pledge to be responsible by driving sober on the Drive for Life Day and thereby demonstrate a commitment to reduce significantly the tragedies of drunk driving, and which serves to educate the public about the dangers of drunk driving;

Whereas Americans are also asked to turn on their headlights while driving on Drive for Life Day as a remembrance of those killed by drunk driving;

Whereas on the second annual National Drive for Life Day, the toll of individuals killed in drunk-driving-related crashes in the United States was 28.6 per centum lower than the number of deaths due to drunk-driving-related crashes on Labor Day weekend Saturday, in 1987, reflecting the success of this campaign;

Whereas the second annual National Drive for Life campaign featured endorsements from all fifty Governors, more than two hundred and seventy-five mayors, and all fifty State police departments; and

Whereas the third annual National Drive for Life Day will occur on September 2, 1989, the Saturday of the Labor Day weekend, when drunk-driving-related crashes are traditionally at their peak: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Labor Day weekend beginning on September 2, 1989, is designated as "National Drive for Life Weekend". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe that weekend with a pledge to be responsible by driving sober and encouraging others to do the same.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL ALCOHOL AND DRUG TREATMENT MONTH

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 132) designating September 1 through 30, 1989 as "National Alcohol and Drug Treatment Month" and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DELLUMS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to engage in a colloquy with my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER], first of all to identify the chief sponsor and whether or not the requisite signatures were obtained.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIDGE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, the House sponsor is the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY].

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY] here?

Mr. SAWYER. The Senate sponsor for this resolution is Senator SASSER.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY] here?

Mr. SAWYER. I do not believe so.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I just want the RECORD to make clear who is the chief sponsor of the joint resolution.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will continue to yield, it was unclear at the time when I made the motion whether or not this particular joint resolution had the requisite number of signatures. It appears that it does not at this point, and so I withdraw the unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER] withdraws the unanimous-consent request.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the joint resolutions just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

HOW WE CAN FIND OUT WHO IS SUPPLYING EXPLOSIVES TO TERRORISTS

(Mr. SCHULZE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, today, on behalf of the congressional sportsmans caucus, I am introducing a resolution calling on all nations which produce high explosives which detonate, to make them with a pre-blast detection taggant. Airport security could then detect them before innocent lives are lost, a welcome contrast to pictures of investigators searching about the wreckage of sabotaged planes for clues on what blew them from the sky.

High explosives have become a favorite tool of the demented terrorist trade, and are produced by many countries, including Czechoslovakia, Iran, and Yugoslavia. If countries agree to tag their explosives, we can find out who is supplying the terrorists, and then let worldwide pressures run their course.

Hopefully, our resolution will send a necessary and definitive message that the Congress is fully committed to wiping terrorists and terrorism off the face of the globe. I urge my colleagues to add their names to our resolution against the weapons of terrorism.

COMMEMORATING THE BICENTENNIAL OF THE U.S. COAST GUARD

(Mr. GEJDENSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join with Americans all across this Nation in celebrating the bicentennial of the U.S. Coast Guard. Today, the Coast Guard begins a yearlong celebration of its 200th anniversary.

In 1789, the Lighthouse Service, previously run by the local States joined the Treasury Department to form the Coast Guard; in 1967, the U.S. Coast Guard became part of the newly formed Department of Transportation. Since its inception, the mission and responsibility of the Coast Guard has expanded. We depend on the Coast Guard to minimize loss of life, injury, and property. We depend on the Coast Guard to defend our shores in times of war. We count on the Coast Guard for enforcement of international maritime laws and agreements. We depend on the Coast Guard to maintain the safety of vessels, ports, and waterways. In addition, the Coast Guard has been given responsibility for protecting the marine environment and enforce environmental laws. For instance, the Coast Guard has been given responsibility to prevent the dumping of sewage sludge and to enforce the ocean dumping laws.

In addition, the Coast Guard has taken the lead role in the oilspill cleanup in the Prince William Sound. On March 24, 1989, 11 million gallons of crude oil were spilled into one of America's most pristine coastlines. Crude oil has spread into a slick covering more than 1,600 square miles. The Coast Guard has taken the lead in the cleanup of that spill.

In addition, in the Narragansett Bay, off the coast of Rhode Island, a disaster was avoided because of the quick action taken by the Coast Guard to contain the spill of a Greek tanker that hit a reef and spilled nearly a million gallons of highly toxic fuel oil. This spill was quickly contained because of the swift movement of the Coast Guard and an environmental disaster was averted.

Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to comprehend how important the Coast Guard is to the health, safety, and security of this country. The Coast Guard has taken an increasing role in fighting the war on drugs. The Coast Guard has taken responsibility for drug interdiction to prevent illegal drugs from coming into this country. In 1987, on an average day, Coast Guard personnel saved 16 lives or 1 life every 91 minutes. During the same period, the Coast Guard assisted 361 people and saved $2,482,357 in property. On an average day Coast Guard personnel completed 154 search and rescue cases. Coast Guard marine safety personnel worked 23 oil and hazardous chemicals. They boarded 43 vessels for port safety checks.

In its effort to fight the war on drugs, the Coast Guard interdiction efforts netted 3,568 pounds of marijuana and 35 pounds of cocaine during that average day and helped other agencies confiscate 243 pounds of marijuana and 26 pounds of cocaine. Each day, on average, the Coast Guard arrested two drug smugglers. The street value of the illicit drugs seized by Coast Guardsmen on an average day was $6,431,507 or $12,034 every minute.

The Coast Guard Academy, founded by Congress in 1876, began in the following year with nine cadets. In 1929, the U.S. Coast Guard Academy found its permanent home in New London, CT, and continues to expand its curriculum to adjust emerging the technological and societal changes. The Academy trains the nearly 900 young men and women to fulfill the expanding mission of the U.S. Coast Guard every year. I am very honored to serve as a member of the Congressional Board of Visitors and am even more proud to have this excellent institution in my congressional district.

To help meet the challenges presented to it in the effort to fight the war on drugs, in finding ways to prevent oil and chemical spills, to find better ways to clean up spill once they have occurred and to more effectively carry out its mission, the Coast Guard has placed a great deal of emphasis on its research and development work. In particular, the Coast Guard Research and Development Center in Groton, CT, has been the leader in those efforts. The Research and Development Center has been a leader in the development of a process of oilspill identification by "oil fingerprinting." This allows the Coast Guard and State authorities to differentiate one oil sample from another and determine who is responsible for a spill.

In addition, the R&D Center has been a leader in developing technology to fight the war on drugs more effectively. Work at the center has led to the development and implementation of unmanned blimps with radar. This enables the Coast Guard and other drug enforcement agencies to see farther than surface ships and detect drug traffickers attempting to smuggle shipment of illegal drugs into the United States. I hope the Coast Guard and the Congress will continue to support the work done at the Research and Development Center in Gorton which enables the U.S. Coast Guard to carry out its important and expanding missions effectively.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of the work done by the Coast Guard and am proud to be associated with them. It is often a thankless job, but it is one that is vital to the health and safety of the American people and to the security of the United States. At this time, I would like to encourage my colleagues and all of the American people to rise and salute the U.S. Coast Guard for 200 years of dedicated service.

PENALTY REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCHULZE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Texas for his leadership in developing legislation to simplify and reform the civil tax penalty provisions in the Internal Revenue Code. His sustained dedication has helped forge a consensus on this issue.

I want to reinforce the remarks made by our subcommittee chairman. Over the years the penalty provisions in the tax law grew in a haphazard, patchwork fashion. Often the need to meet some revenue goal in a deficit reduction bill prompted us to create a new penalty or increase an old penalty.

The total effect of numerous such changes was a source of confusion both for taxpayers and the IRS. There was a need to simplify and consolidate tax penalties. Tax penalties should not be viewed as a source of revenue. In a perfect situation the Government would collect no tax penalties because there would be perfect compliance. The purpose of tax penalties is to improve compliance rather than to dispense punishment.

In order for tax penalties to promote compliance they need to be understood by the average taxpayer and perceived as fair. A taxpayer will not be motivated to comply with a tax provision if he doesn't know that it exists or views it as unfair. A driver cannot be expected to obey the speed limit if he cannot understand the traffic signs. The old penalty system had passed the point of diminishing returns in using more and more penalties to improve compliance.

The objective of the Oversight Subcommittee was to develop a penalty reform package which would improve compliance by simplifying the law, rather than adding new layers of punitive provisions.

Several reforms will bring welcome relief to small businesses taxpayers. For example, the current penalty for the late deposit of payroll taxes is 10 percent. The penalty is 10 percent whether a business is 1 day late or months late. This is not fair. Often a small business may be a few days late because the bookkeeper was absent or ill. Yet such a small error is penalized as severely as a business which is months late in making a tax deposit.

The subcommittee determined that the payroll tax deposit penalty should be changed to a time-sensitive, sliding-scale approach. In particular, the penalty now will be only 2 percent for deposits up to 5 days late; 5 percent for deposits between 6 and 15 days late; and 10 percent for deposits over 15 days late. A fourth tier penalty of 15 percent applies to excessively late tax deposits.

Another provision would safeguard the ability of small businesses to submit tax information to the IRS on paper forms and not allow the IRS to force them to use magnetic tape. The IRS will not be able to force businesses with less than 250 information returns to use magnetic tape. Otherwise a small business could be forced to buy high-priced computer equipment or else incur the expense of hiring a service bureau to prepare a magnetic tape for the IRS.

Individuals benefit from penalty reform because the negligence penalty will be targeted to apply only to the negligent portion of the tax return. Under current law the negligence penalty applies to the entire understatement and not just the portion attributable to negligence. The current structure of this penalty can result in a small amount of negligence leading to a very large penalty amount.

Another change which will help the average taxpayer is the repeal of the provision which presumes a person is negligent when the IRS document matching program identifies an apparent discrepancy between a taxpayer's return and the information supplied by some third party. In many, many cases the discrepancy has an honest explanation and the taxpayer has not tried to underreport his income. For example, the taxpayer may have identified the payor of his money market interest in a different way than the payor identified itself to the IRS. The IRS computers will flag this as a discrepancy and send the person a notice which presumes he negligently failed to report his money market interest. Although the person should eventually clarify the discrepancy, in the meantime he has been intimidated and offended by the IRS. This presumptive negligence provision fosters the image of the IRS as an unreasonable bully.

Mr. Speaker, these few examples illustrate the improvements which the committee's penalty reforms will accomplish. We do not expect that anyone will ever like tax penalties. But we have removed the unreasonable provisions and hidden booby traps which effect unwary taxpayers.

EXPERTS AGREE: TIME FOR NEW TRADE APPROACH TO JAPAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, once more, I stand before this House and address the issue of United States-Japanese trade. But this time, I do not stand alone. The cover story in Business Week magazine—August 7, 1989—is entitled "Rethinking Japan."

This article traces a change in the traditional perception many Americans have held toward international trade, and Japan in particular. Free trade, a fiercely held American principle, simply cannot be a concept applied to Japan. The new school of thought, called revisionism, has been embraced and espoused by wide array of individuals, including both academics and business leaders.

Trade with Japan cannot be discussed in the usual terms of open and free trade. Factors such as Japan's culture and history have created a complex economic and political system. This system has served to frustrate U.S. efforts at negotiation over resolving economic differences.

A $52 billion annual trade deficit with Japan—a billion a week—has caused Americans to rethink their previous approach to bargaining. And rightly so. We must find some alternative means of negotiating with such a unique country as Japan. We must go beyond our traditional means and push for reforms such as trade management and capping the deficit.

New approaches should not be construed as anti-Japan or protectionist. Japan is a valuable ally and offers numerous opportunities to the United States, whether they be commercial, scientific, or otherwise. We cannot afford to jeopardize our friendship with Japan by continuing to bicker over our trade differences.

Four years ago, I proposed legislation that could head off further deterioration. I hope Members will agree with the Business Week analysis and support my legislation. I reintroduced that bill as House Joint Resolution 249 on April 25—see E1341 in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for a discussion of the issue.

Instead of arguing and debating every single area of trade, let's put a cap on the deficit. This method would mean no more negotiations and hassles over regulations. The more Japan buys from us, the more she can sell. Simple as that.

I will not indulge in a "I told you so." But the growing number of people who advocate new approaches to bargaining with Japan seems to signal support. We can, if we act soon, salvage both American trade and an important friendship with an important ally.

HUGHES TELEPHONE CO. SALE APPROVED JULY 26

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with my colleagues this article printed in the August 2 edition of the Meridian, MS, Star. It reports on the sale of Hughes Telephone Co. to South Central Bell.

For nearly 80 years, Hughes has been serving the people of east Mississippi. It has been one of the truly successful family-owned telephone companies in this country because of the commitment its owners have had over the years to doing the job right. I want to take this time to commend Hughes president Bertha Lee White for what the company, from top to bottom, has done to make life a little easier for consumers in the five counties it has served. I am confident South Central Bell will work hard to uphold the tradition and reliability that has been practiced by Hughes since 1911.

SOUTH CENTRAL BELL TAKES OVER HUGHES—OFFICIAL SAYS CUSTOMERS WON'T SEE IMMEDIATE CHANGES

Hughes Telephone Co. became a wholly-owned subsidiary of South Central Bell Monday.

The sale of the family-owned company was announced last October, pending approval of the Mississippi Public Service Commission and the Federal Communications Commission, which gave its final approval July 26.

The sale will not immediately affect operations, said Bertha Lee White, Hughes president, "Nothing changes." Hughes customers will continue to call the same numbers they always have to discuss billing, service changes or repairs.

The transition from Hughes operation to South Central Bell will take eight months to a year, Mrs. White said, adding that after that time, its business office will be turned into a museum and renamed the Hughes Memorial Foundation.

The site will serve as a memorial to the founders, Dolphus Edward and Ollie Denton Hughes, her parents, she said.

For her part, Mrs. White said she will retire, but will be working with the foundation.

Hughes, which began its operation in 1911, maintains about 6,000 stations at present, Mrs. White said, including coin-operated phones, as well as business and residential lines in Kemper, Lauderdale, Neshoba, Newton and Noxubee counties, north of Meridian.

"Hughes has a respected tradition of good service to its customers, and we look forward to continuing that tradition," said Kelly Allgood, vice president of South Central Bell's Mississippi operations, in a news release.

"We're pleased that, when Hughes owners decided to sell the family-owned company, South Central Bell was considered to be a company that would continue the tradition of good service, dedication and concern for customers and employees, and that our offer was selected by Hughes stockholders," he said.

"We have a tremendous business," Mrs. White said. "We have one of the best businesses in the nation."

However, she said, as offers became more attractive, the company's stockholders—four daughters and 16 grandchildren—decided to take them seriously and approached South Central Bell.

"We were familiar with the company," Mrs. White said. "Down through the years, we've always had a good relationship with South Central Bell."

In fact, she said, it was not unusual for the manager of South Central Bell of Meridian to lunch with the Hughes family.

"We look forward to working with Hughes to provide further service improvements and enhancements for Hughes customers," Mr. Allgood said. "We're committed to keeping Hughes customers well informed in a timely manner about any changes that would affect them," he said.

HISPANIC HOUSING CRISIS, AND POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC CHANGES IN TAIWAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUSTAMANTE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, I stand before you today to talk about the terrible state of housing among the Hispanic population, as well as the outrageous cost that Hispanics must pay for even substandard shelter.

There are Hispanics in south Texas who spend 7 to 9 percent of their annual income on housing. With an average annual income of only $6,700, many Hispanic citizens cannot afford adequate housing.

In an average Hispanic family in the barrios, not only do both parents work but often the teenage children drop out of school to work at minimum wage or less.

Even with the whole family working, many homes are without water or sewage facilities or flood protection. Families must wash clothes, dishes, and themselves in untreated water. Often this water is polluted by sewage runoff and other unhealthy elements.

In this great country, one out of every seven Hispanic households experience substandard living conditions. Hispanics are three times as likely as whites to live in totally inadequate housing. Among all minorities, Hispanics are two times more likely to live in substandard housing.

These people are slipping further and further into the cesspools that surround their homes. These people need our help. Let us no longer neglect the neediest among us. Let us give them what they need so desperately.

While the scandals at HUD continue to receive publicity because of the terrible waste of taxpayers moneys, let us not forget the other more human side of the problem.

Not only was the money wasted, but the potential to help people who desperately need it was lost. Let us work together to assure that this never happens again. Let us assure that housing programs designed to help the most needy reach the helpless people most in need.

Let me say in this area, Mr. Speaker, all of us are familiar with the champion in this area of housing, and that is the very distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ], the chairman of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs. Chairman GONZALEZ has worked hard and long in this area and has been the champion not only of the poor of our Nation, but also of the working people of this great country of ours and for all Americans, and for that we applaud Chairman GONZALEZ for his efforts in this area of housing.

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC CHANGES IN TAIWAN

Mr. Speaker, even though the winds of change have been halted by staunch headliners in Communist China, it is very important not to forget the democratic changes occurring just off Mainland China on the island of Taiwan, the Republic of China.

As I am sure everyone recalls, the United States officially changed diplomatic recognition of China from Taipai to Beijing on January 1, 1979. Since 1979, the Government in Taiwan has made significant strides in liberalizing the political process on the island. Martial law was abrogated in 1987, and democratic reforms have become an important part of the Government's agenda.

Major efforts have been instigated to rejuvenate the Parliament. On Janaury 26, the Parliament finally passes a law establishing the procedure for aging Parliamentarians to retire on a voluntary basis. This law would allow more new locally-elected officials an opportunity to participate in the National Assembly, the main law-making body in the country.

The importance of freedom of the press has not gone unacknowledged by the Government. If you were to visit Taiwan today, it would not be unusual to find independent newspapers at the newstand with articles critical of Government policies and operations.

In addition, a law permitting a multi-party system was enacted on January 20, 1989. Since then, 15 new parties have received official Government recognition including the major opposition party, the Democratic Progressive Party [DPP]. In recent legislative elections, many opposition candidates have run successful campaigns for office.

Believe it or not, policies toward Mainland China have become much more relaxed. Since the Government announced in late 1987 that citizens of the Republic of China of Taiwan would be allowed to visit their relatives on the mainland, more than 400,000 people have visited the mainland. In order to foster cultural exchange between both sides, in mid-April, the Government decreed that journalists, film makers, performing artists, and teachers would be permitted to visit the mainland. Also, direct trade between the two sides increased 60 percent in 1988, reaching $2.5 billion. And Taiwan's investment of the mainland through indirect channels reached more than $520 million last year.

The political liberalization that the Republic of China is experiencing is no doubt connected with the island's economic boom. Taiwan's strong and vibrant economy is the result of the hard-work ethic ingrained in the hearts of the people and, of course, the business atmosphere of free markets and open competition. In the past few years, annual trade has exceeded $80 billion, making Taiwan the world's 13th largest trader and the United States 5th largest trading partner.

Over the past three decades, Taiwan has shifted from an agriculturally-based economy to a system rooted in technology-intensive products. Presently, the nearly 20 million citizens contribute to a yearly economy of over $97 billion and per capita GNP of almost $5,000. The projected growth rate in 1989 is set at 7 percent. And international imports are expected to reach $57.4 billion, a growth of 15 percent.

In an attempt to open the Republic of China's business markets, the Government, between 1985 and 1987, reduced tariffs on over 3,500 items and abolished tariffs on over 70 items. In addition, nine U.S. insurance firms were allowed to establish branch offices in Taiwan. And there are over 30 foreign banks operating on Taiwan, 13 of which are American.

After reviewing the political and business changes in Taiwan such as lifting martial law, lifting a ban on publishing new newspapers, allowing the establishment of new political parties, cutting and abolishing certain tariffs, and opening up financial markets, one sees that the wheels of democracy are well in motion.

These progressive changes should not be obscured by the recent Communist suppression on the mainland. Instead, Taiwan should be seen as a reassuring sign that democratic reforms can succeed in Asia.

THE 28TH ANNUAL ROLLCALL CONGRESSIONAL BASEBALL GAME

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR], is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I take to the well this morning as a man bruised by defeat. Tuesday night at Four Mile Run Park in Alexandria, VA, the Republicans handed the Democrats a loss at the 28th annual rollcall congressional baseball game. Before a crowd of thousands that included major league baseball commissioner A. Barlett Giammatti and broadcast great Joe Garagiola, the Democrats slugged it out and came out at the short end of an 8 to 2 final score.

For those of my colleagues who weren't able to make it Tuesday night, I borrow from the fine tradition of my colleague from Arizona, MO UDALL and my colleague from Massachusetts, SILVIO CONTE, the man who initiated this annual rite.

The clouds rolled in to issue their warning,
Russo, Synar and, Richardson warmed up.
The tension had been building since early that morning
And it peaked as the umpire shouted
"Batter up."

Before a crowd of thousands,
Levine climbed up the mound.
Mike Oxley made his way to first,
Before Fields hit him around.

A Bonior-Schuette collision
Suggested a Dem strategy of attrition
But Newt Gingrich asked Giammatti
To file a complaint with the Commission.

The drama was at its height with Jim Moody behind the plate.
Gallegly and Schuette tried to score
But they both got there too late.

Early on in the game Sabo shouted "Freshman Beware."
As he picked off Jim Walsh
And gave the GOP a scare.

Walsh, Weldon, and Herger
Hit as well as Captain Coats
But Senate Democrats yanked Dan
With timely roll call votes.

As the number of Barton victims
The Democrats despaired,
Things were not going well.

Heavy hitter Mel Levine,
Was heard to have sighed
When pinch runners Neal and Mfume
Neglected to slide.

Then a hole in the wall provided Democrats with relief.
Bucky Staggers raised his hands
To keep Fields' base-burning brief.

In the bottom of the last, the Dems started to rally,
A bloop single to center and Carper filled in to run.
Then Downey hit a shot to give the Dems
another tally,
But alas, Buechner caught a pop-up and the Grand Old Party had won.

SOVIET DAY OF SHAME

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on August 21, the people of Czechoslovakia and Americans of Czechoslovakian descent will commemorate the 21st anniversary of the 1968 invasion of Czechoslovakia by the Soviet Union.

On this sad day—this Soviet Day of Shame—over 500,000 soldiers were sent by the Communists to overrun the Czechoslovakian borders, shattering the hopes and dreams of this peace-loving nation. The reform-minded government of Alexander Dubcek was crushed, and the Soviet Union once again demonstrated its commitment to the policy of stopping any attempt by individuals to assert their inherent rights of freedom, liberty, and self-determination.

Today, the Communists continue to remain in control of Czechoslovakia, and we in America, must persist in our support of the people of Czechoslovakia who are devoting their lives to reestablishing a free homeland. Although Mikhail Gorbachev has called for sweeping reforms under glasnost and perestroika, in Czechoslovakia these changes have been very slow and tentative.

At this point in the RECORD, I would like to share with my colleagues in the House of Representatives excerpts from an article which appeared in the June 16 edition of the Christian Science Monitor describing the reluctance of the Communists in power in Czechoslovakia to institute changes. The excerpts follow:

[From the Christian Science Monitor, June 16, 1989]

CZECHOSLOVAK LEADERS SOFTEN THE HARD LINE

(By William Echikson)

PRAGUE.—Inside the baroque Lucerna Dance Hall, long-haired youngsters swing to the incessant beat of loud music and acid lyrics such as, "Skinhead, Skinhead, Bang! Bang! Bang!"

"A few years ago, I was thrown in jail for promoting such music," marvels Karel Srp, the ebullient leader of the outlawed Jazz Section. "It's progress, it's glasnost [openness]—but limited progress, limited glasnost, nothing like in Hungary or Poland."

Czechoslovakia is trying to change. Long a leader of East European resistance to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's reforms, its orthodox communist regime now is buffeted by new pressures, from East and West, and from below. As the Lucerna rock concert shows, the hard-line leadership has responded by allowing more independent cultural activities.

But diplomats, dissidents, and even Communist Party functionaries doubt the depth of Czechoslovak glasnost. Official reform efforts remain defensive, they say, marked by caution and repression, while unofficial pressure from the long-passive population remains too weak to force an acceleration.

"The changes here just aren't systematic. They don't touch the roots of the totalitarian abuses," says one Western diplomat.

"People are bitter, but still not optimistic, and until they become optimistic, I don't believe they will be able to force reform on the authorities."

This conclusion suggests some staying power for East Europe's hard-line bloc: Bulgaria, Romania, East Germany, and Czechoslovakia are all resisting Soviet perestroika [restructuring] and glasnost. The so-called "Gang of Four" appears tentative, on the defensive. But it will be some time before these hard-liners start dancing to Gorbachev's tune.

Among this group, Czechoslovakia represents a crucial test case. Unlike Bulgaria, it boasts a strong democratic and industrial tradition. Unlike Romania, it is not ruled by a ruthless autocrat like Nicolae Ceausescu, who is willing to resist reform by starving his own people. And unlike East Germany, whose status as part of a divided nation makes any change potentially destabilizing, Czechoslovakia does not oppose the Soviet Union—at least not publicly.

"The East Germans say, 'We know what we're doing; we don't need perestroika,'" explains Jaroslav Jiru, a journalist at the underground Lidovie Noviny magazine. "Our leaders say, 'We need perestroika, but we must be careful, and do it our way.'"

Communist Party leader Milos Jakes epitomizes this cautious perestroika. After the 1968 Soviet invasion, he directed the purge expelling almost half a million people from the party. University professors were turned into window washers, engineers into stokers, and lawyers into taxi drivers. Now Mr. Jakes is trying to shed his image as a colorless apparatchik.

In recent months, he has ousted hardliners in the ruling Presidium and even taken to Gorbachev-style street chats. But at the same time, he expelled the Presidium's leading reformer, Lubomir Strougal.

"Jakes must go. He is impossible," says Jiri Dienstbier, a leading dissident. "Whenever he tries to play Gorbachev and go out on the street, he talks nonsense and people laugh."

Attempts to bridge the division between officials and the opposition have deteriorated. In December, the regime moved to silence criticism of its record on human rights by naming its own human-rights committee and authorizing it to make contacts with independent organizations such as the Charter 77.

Some meetings were held, but to no avail. The officials insisted on treating Chartists as private individuals, not members of an organization. The Chartists declined, fearing a ploy to co-opt them. Even after dissident writer Vaclav Havel was released, they still complain about a rise in politically provoked harassment and jailings.

"The idea of this official human-rights group was to divide us, into those for and those against cooperating," argues a bitter Peter Uhl, a leading Chartist. "Worst of all, we saw that it had no real power to make decisions. We still count more than 100 people in prison on political charges."

Official half steps and hesitations also mark the cultural thaw. According to Josef Simon, editor-in-chief of Odeon Publishers, the official Writer's Association has decided to return books by more than 200 banned authors to libraries this fall. But despite rumors that the works of famed émigré novelists such as Milan Kundera and Josef Skvorecky soon would be released. Mr. Simon says that such a decision still remains far off.

"It's going to be a gradual process. Most of the [unbanned] books are by dead authors," he says. "We still don't have the courage to start dealing with the live authors."

This lukewarm glasnost puts Prague in almost constant conflict with its more adventuresome neighbors. When Poland's Prime Minister Miecyzslaw Rakowski attended the opening night in Warsaw for a performance of Vadav Havel plays, all of which are banned here, the Czechoslovaks issued an official protest. Earlier this month, Hungary shocked its neighbors, first by stopping work on an expensive joint project to dam the Danube River, and then by showing a television interview with Alexander Dubvek, the ousted leader of 1968 Prague Spring.

"Poland and Hungary are going through a political crisis," judges Milan Jelinck, foreign editor of the Communist Party daily Rude Pravo. "We want to take concrete small steps, to reform socialism, not destroy it."

The only real formula which will convince skeptical Czechoslovaks that their rulers are serious about change would be the rehabilitation of the hundreds of thousands of capable people who found their careers ruined after 1968. That means Gorbachev must admit that the Soviet invasion was a mistake. So far, the Soviet leader has backed away from taking such radical action, supporting the stability of the status quo over the uncertainty of a rapidly reforming Czechoslovakia. If his preference changes, Czechoslovakia also could change—fast.

"Sooner or later, the question of the Soviet invasion will be opened," Vaclav Havel predicted following his release from prison. "Our leadership, which bases its legitimacy on this invasion, will crumble once that happens."

Mr. Speaker, on this 21st commemoration of the Soviet Day of Shame, I join with Americans of Czechoslovakian descent in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois, which I am honored to represent, and all freedom-loving people throughout the world, in their hopes and prayers that democratic reforms in Czechoslovakia will ultimately triumph, so that its people will one day live in liberty in their beloved homeland, free from the tyranny and domination of the Communists.

INTRODUCTION OF GLOBAL WARMING BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Speaker, the Earth's climate is changing in ways we don't fully understand. But the scientific consensus is clear. We are altering the balance in our atmosphere at an ever-increasing rate.

As we burn fossil fuels, cut down rainforests, and produce ozone-destroying chemicals, we are increasing carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases in the atmosphere. The results, heat waves, drought, and flooding—could be catastrophic, and far beyond any environmental challenge humankind has ever faced.

Mr. Speaker, unless we take steps now to slow the buildup of greenhouse gases, I fear that the heartbeat of life on a fragile planet may begin to fail, and all our hopes for a future of sustained economic growth and opportunity will fade.

That is why today I am introducing legislation to address the problem of global warming. The National Energy Policy Act of 1989 calls for substantial reduction of greenhouse gas emissions through energy conservation, efficiency, forestation, and concerted international action.

The United States is responsible for one-quarter of the total global greenhouse emissions. Although this is more than any other nation, we alone cannot solve the problem. But American ingenuity led the world in industrial development, and Americans can take the lead again in creating new technologies and protecting a fragile environment.

In the first public appearance as Secretary of State several months ago, Jim Baker urged action to deal with global climate change. "Time will not make the problem go away," he said.

Mr. Speaker, Jim Baker was right.

The longer we wait, the fewer will be our opportunities for effective action. I call on the Bush administration—and the Congress—to take on the challenge. Let's hold hearings, let's pass the best legislation, and let's give to future generations a global environment as hospitable to life as the one we inherited.

I invite my colleagues to join me.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUCOIN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I am glad the gentleman took time to express his interest in this particular legislation.

I want to also compliment him for the leadership he gives in high-technology areas, particularly in the defense field. I know for a fact that he has been one of the most active Members in the entire Congress in it, and I am pleased to see him take leadership in this high definition television approach. It is the project of the future, and all across America it is going to be the new buzzword as well as the new challenge for all of us.

It is good that we point the way, and it is good that the gentleman down in the well has given that leadership to us. I compliment him on it.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the gentleman from Texas and appreciate the support he has given to those of us who have worked in those fields he has described. I look forward to his support in the legislation that I introduce today.

THE CIVIL TAX PENALTY REFORM BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FLIPPO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a comment about the civil tax penalty reform bill that Mr. PICKLE our distinguished subcommittee chairman, and other members of our Subcommittee on Oversight in the Committee on Ways and Means have been working on now for a number of months to try to reform the civil-penalty section of the IRS code.

Over the last few years, as our code has become more complex, we have found that the revenues coming in from civil penalties have grown enormously, and we have such complexity in the code and complexity in the administration of penalties that we found ourselves also having American taxpayers whose penalties were stacked, and in many cases the penalties exceeded the amount of underpayment of taxes. We had Americans being charged automatically for negligence when they were trying everything they could to comply with the IRS code, and so under the leadership of our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE], he tried something that I think is rather unique in the Congress.

He called in people from all over the country who had an interest in having a fairer tax code that was easier to administer and was fairer to the American taxpayer. He called in such people as the American Bar Association, the American Institute of CPA's, everyone involved in the tax-preparer industry. Former commissioners of the Internal Revenue Service were asked to render their service, current members of the Treasury Department and IRS were there, as well as people who have expertise in various sections of the code.

Over a period of months these individuals sat together, and with give and take, these very knowledgeable individuals explored every aspect of the tax code, and they worked out and were able to obtain a consensus on about 80 percent of the penalties in the Tax Code. They came back, after rendering that great service, and our distinguished chairman and members of the committee began to work on it and to develop a civil penalties tax reform which I think every Member of the House can be very, very pleased and proud of. We are attempting to pass that legislation now under our distinguished chairman's leadership.

Many of the Members who participated in that have told me privately that it was so unique to have a group of informed and interested individuals come in and have input into a major reform of the tax code, and I think they were pleased to participate, and they rendered great contributions.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLIPPO. I yield to my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I would like to point out that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FLIPPO], a recognized leader in the field of certified public accountants, was able to give leadership to this task force, and it was through his leadership and that of the gentleman from Florida, [Mr. SHAW] and others that we put together, I think, one of the best tax reform packages we have had.

A little later today I hope to have a special order of civil tax penalties going into more detail on what we have done and how we came about it, and copies of this bill will be available in our offices. It has been an exercise that has brought about I think more fairness, more simplicity to tax penalties.

We have gone from 13 penalties, in 1954, to where in 1987 we had 150 civil tax penalties. Every time we passed a law we would pass another penalty, and it seemed to just be a topsy-turvy type of growth.

Now we have tried to cut them back and simplify them and make them more fair.

So I compliment the gentleman for his service and his expertise, because he added a great deal to what we have accomplished.

Mr. FLIPPO. I thank the gentleman for his remarks and look forward to working with him for the passage of the civil penalties tax reform package.

THE ED ZORINSKY LAKE AND RESTORATION AREA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DELLUMS). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOAGLAND] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOAGLAND. Mr. Speaker, I am here today to encourage our colleagues to join the effort to name a lake, Omaha dam site 18 after Senator Ed Zorinsky, our former senior U.S. Senator who passed away in March 1987. I am here to ask for Members' support and their names to help in renaming dam site 18 in western Omaha the Ed Zorinsky Lake and Restoration Area.

Senator Zorinsky was a friend to all Nebraskans and to this Nation. He was a man who was known for his concerns, and he parlayed that into sound American policy as ranking member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and as an important member of the Senate Agriculture Committee. He understood Nebraska's needs in agriculture very well. He served our State very well in that capacity.

Senator Zorinsky was born to immigrant parents who had come to Nebraska from Russia. His father built a successful small business that Ed started into in his mid-20s. It was in this business that Ed learned about leadership, about frugality, all of the lessons that he needed to enable him to lead Omaha so well as its mayor quite a few years ago.

During his tenure as mayor we had a tornado in 1975 that destroyed a number of houses in west central Omaha, and Mayor Zorinsky responded to that crisis in a terrific manner and generated a lot of confidence throughout the community, and showed a lot of excellent local leadership.

From there he moved on to the U.S. Senate where he was known by his colleagues to be independent, to be courageous, a man respected by persons on both sides of the aisle. Most of all, the Senator stuck up for Omaha and stuck up for Nebraska.

Recently, Nebraska's fine Senators, JIM EXON and BOB KERREY, supported an amendment to the 1990 energy and water appropriations bill naming this lake for Ed. The bill is currently in conference committee, and I call on the members of this conference and will be sending a letter to members of the conference asking them to support the Senate amendment so that we can name that lake after Senator Zorinsky.

AFGHANISTAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, as we prepare to I hope adjourn today, and I hope very much that within the next couple of hours, under the leadership of Chairman GONZALEZ that this full House will pass the savings and loan so-called bailout, which it is not at all, we know, because none of the dollars goes to savings and loans or their shareholders, but simply ensures the deposits, but as we get ready to adjourn today I am not laboring under the illusion that as our colleagues, Mr. Speaker, prepare to go home that they will be rushed by their constitutents with questions like: "What's happening in Afghanistan?" I know it is not a priority item. People are going to be asking about the savings and loan crisis, people are going to be asking about the budget deficit, they are going to be asking about taxes, they are going to be asking about the wonderful news we got this morning that the employment rate dropped by one-tenth of 1 percent. There are going to be a wide range of issues which constitutents are going to be asking our colleagues about, Mr. Speaker.

But I think it is very important that an issue which has been on the forefront throughout this entire decade be discussed, and I would like to take the next few minutes to address some concerns which correctly have been raised by many of our colleagues, Mr. Speaker, by many in the media, and I hope to rebut some frustrations which I have felt over the past several months, and would like to take just a few moments to look historically at Afghanistan, look at what we are hoping for in the future.

First of all, I have had the opportunity to be down here many times talking about this issue, but I would like to begin by talking about what happened on December 27 of 1979, exactly 10 years ago this coming December. It was when the Soviets brutally rolled into Afghanistan and, Mr. Speaker, I know you cannot quite see it from the rostrum, but I have a sneaking suspicion at some point you may be able to see it, I have a map here of Afghanistan, and it is surrounded by the Soviet Union on the north, Iran to the west, and Pakistan to the east and south. It is a very important part of South Asia.

This has historically been a very proud country. If one goes all the way back to 456 B.C., historically it is very well known that Alexander the Great stormed through that very famous Khyber Pass. So when on December 27, 1979, 10 years ago, the Soviets rolled in to continue to pursue their quest for a warm-water port, they made an attempt to impose their will and their brutal military control on the people of Afghanistan, and we found that the Afghan people were literally fighting with sticks and stones. They believed that they were in the midst of holy war, and they truly are fighting as the Afghan people throughout history have done, to retain their country and their own dignity.

□ 1240

And I am very pleased that while a great many lives have been lost, a real tragedy has taken place in Afghanistan throughout this decade, that we on February 15 this year saw the Soviets withdraw their troops.

Well, the decade has been a really difficult one for the people of Afghanistan, Mr. Speaker.

The prewar population of Afghanistan was 15 million. There were 15 million people in that country. Since that time, since this horrible war which has gone on, 1.5 million people have been killed.

Mr. Speaker, fully a third of those 15 million people, 5 million people, have been forced into creating what is the largest refugee population on the face of the Earth.

We often hear about refugee situations in all parts of the world, but not a lot of people are aware of the fact that Afghanistan in the Soviet invasion there has created the largest refugee population on the face of the Earth.

What happened, where did those refugees go? I have this nice pointer here, which is the only gift given to me by my colleague, the gentleman from California, [Mr. DORNAN] and he has insisted that I use it today.

Mr. Speaker, 3.2 million of those refugees have been forced into Pakistan, along the border here, a tremendous burden on the population of Pakistan.

The population of Pakistan is about 110 million. 3.2 million Afghan refugees have fled into Pakistan; and in neighboring Iran to their west, 1.8 million Afghan refugees, creating a total of 5 million refugees.

I know that everyone in this House is concerned about that situation. It is a challenge which we will face in the years to come.

How have these people been killed?

Mr. Speaker, I have held this up here in the well many times, and this is what is known as a butterfly bomb. This little green piece of plastic is one of 200 little butterfly bombs which are placed end to end in a cartridge and they are shot from the MI-25 Hind-D, attack helicopter, which is the most powerful helicopter ever known to man. It has the ability to deploy chemical weapons and these little butterfly bombs.

Mr. Speaker, let me tell you what these butterfly bombs do. They basically become landmines. These float to the ground, Mr. Speaker, and though I do not like to repeat this because it is a very difficult thing for me to even imagine, but I know it because I have seen photographs of the byproduct of this: just enough explosives are placed in this little butterfly bomb so that when a 6-, 7-, 8-year-old child picks it up, it blows his or her hand off.

The tragic thing is that throughout history children have been the victims of war; but the unfortunate thing, Mr. Speaker, is that throughout this decade children in Afghanistan have not just been the victims of war, they, through devices like this, have been the targets of war.

So understandably, Mr. Speaker, the Afghan people are very distraught with what has happened to them throughout this decade. They very much want to see an end to this war, but they do not plan to take it lying down.

This butterfly bomb is just one of the many different devices used. This is the little click pen—what I have here is my pointer, it is not a click pen—a child picks it up, clicks the pen and it blows their hand off.

The most reprehensible mine that I know of, Mr. Speaker, is the candy stick, which is placed around in Afghanistan by the Soviets and, needless to say, you can guess what happens with a candy stick bomb with an explosive in it when a child takes a bite out of it.

So it is very tragic, the situation there.

One of the things that concerns a great many of us is that there are still some 30 million of these landmines on the ground in Afghanistan. One of the greatest problems that we face is dealing with these landmines and trying to clear them so that refugees will have the ability to move back into Afghanistan.

Mr. Speaker, that historically tells us a little bit about what has taken place in this decade. I will say that we have had a policy over the past several months which has been geared toward bringing about an end to the Soviet presence in Afghanistan and, as I said a few moments ago, as of February 15 we saw the Soviets withdraw.

There were many people, Mr. Speaker, who believed that within days or weeks of the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan that we would see the puppet regime which the Soviets imposed on the people of Afghanistan, led by Dr. Najibullah, who had been an intelligence officer himself, that that Government would crumble immediately. Many said that; however my colleague Mr. DORNAN and I found out yesterday that our intelligence reports which had been announced would be predicted that the puppet government of Dr. Najibullah would crumble within 6 to 12 months of the Soviet troop withdrawal from Afghanistan. Mr. Speaker, we are today at just about the sixth month mark of that troop withdrawal. And based on reports which we have seen in the media, Dan Rather and others have told the American people that we have seen nothing but internecine struggles among the seven political parties, the alliance in Afghanistan, and we have seen virtually every attempt made for victory on the part of the Mujahidin, the freedom fighters there, as a defeat.

But Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. The reports which we have been provided are untrue. First of all, to address the question of the internecine struggles, yes, there have been some battles among members of the seven-party alliance in Afghanistan. But that is nothing new.

So the way the media has reported this is that only after the Soviets withdrew did we see the battles take place among the members of the alliance. But that is not the case.

We hope very much, and we have a policy of encouraging, Mr. Speaker, this alliance to stick together.

We know that we have now an ambassador, Peter Thompson, our special envoy to what is known as the AIG, or the Afghan Interim Government, put together by members of that alliance, it is a very positive sign.

He is struggling with trying to deal with that. He is having, I am pleased to report to our colleagues, a great deal of success in dealing with that alliance and dealing with the organization which he is trying to help hold together.

The second point which has come out in the media by a wide range of reporters is the fact that we are continuing to lose these battles and that food is being held back from the people of Afghanistan and that they are suffering defeat, one right after another.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this map very clearly shows—and I have sent, Mr. Speaker, to you and every one of our colleagues in the past day or so a dear-colleague letter printed by my very able office staff; Roberta Myers, put this in green, the Afghan color.

I hope very much before the recess that you, Mr. Speaker, and our colleagues will look at this. I have had this map blown up here.

What I would like to outline here is the areas which are surrounded by these red lines, areas which in May of 1988 were held by either the Soviet troops or the puppet Government.

The letter follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, August 2, 1989.

CONGRESS MUST RENEW OUR COMMITMENT TO A FREE AFGHANISTAN

DEAR COLLEAGUE: I am sure that you share my frustration over the lack of progress the Mujahideen have had in their battle against the Soviet-installed Najibullah regime following the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan. However, I have learned that there are positive aspects of the war which the media is not reporting. When evaluating press accounts, we must bear in mind that journalists reporting on the war from inside the country are constrained by the tightly-controlled Afghan society.

I recently met with our Special Envoy to the Afghan Resistance, Ambassador Peter Tomsen, and others on the situation inside Afghanistan. Despite the recent reports on Mujahideen performance and morale, the Afghans continue to share an important common objective: their bitter opposition to the Soviet-imposed regime in Kabul. The fact that the Resistance has yet to score a single dramatic success is due primarily to two factors. With the departure of the Soviet forces, the Resistance has had to adjust to a more conventional kind of warfare. In addition, the Soviets continue to supply the Kabul regime with a level and sophistication of weapons which dwarf the military aid going to the Resistance.

Nevertheless, I have attached a map which portrays at a glance the overwhelming position of strength the Afghan Resistance maintains in the Afghan war. As you know, Afghanistan is an agricultural country with the majority of Afghans living in rural areas controlled by Mujahideen commanders. The unpopular and vulnerable Kabul regime holds only a limited number of towns. These locations and the roads connecting them are under growing Resistance military pressure. In light of these facts, the trend—and time—is on the side of the Mujahideen.

Although the final victory is taking longer than expected, the Afghan Resistance will prevail in the end. At this critical and pivotal time in the Afghan war, I would urge that the Congress continue to stand firmly with the Administration in projecting a common resolve to stay the course in support of these freedom fighters. Our resolve will continue to be vital to the success of the Resistance.

Sincerely,

DAVID DREIER,
Member of Congress.

Again, what we have been told by many in the media, that we have seen such failure by the Mujahidin. I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to report that as of June of this year, June 18, 1989, the areas, if they can be seen, Mr. Speaker, in the dark red around Kabul, Jalalabad, other areas here throughout the country, and in the western region which are in dark red, are the only areas, Mr. Speaker, which are presently held by Dr. Najibullah, the puppet government in Afghanistan.

The point is, the people of Afghanistan primarily live in rural areas. The puppet government has moved dramatically and held its strength only in the urban areas, but Members can see by this map that within the past year, and even within the past few months, Mr. Speaker, this area has shrunk. The area of the Najibullah government's control has shrunk, so while we continue to hear that the Majahidin are losing, in the press, that is not the case. In fact, this map which was provided to Members, it is unclassified, provided by our government officials, shows very clearly that the success of the Majahidin has been very great. It needs to be greater. I will get into that in a few moments, some of the things that we need to do.

At this point, I would like to yield to the gentleman from Orange County, California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I know the gentleman is somewhat of an expert on House rules, so he knows we cannot refer to the electronic audience that I hope grows daily, watching the proceedings of this House, and he knows we cannot refer to our visitors in the gallery, but they have eyes and ears, to see and hear with, and we can refer to our fellow colleagues.

Mr. DREIER of California. We may even have some in the gallery here, with opera glasses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FRANK). The Chair would remind Members that references to the gallery are not in order.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to continue to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. As I pointed out, the gentleman well knows the rules, that we cannot do that, but this debate is expanded through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, expanded tomorrow, available through schools and libraries all across the country and the Free World.

As a matter of fact, CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS from this House and proceedings and speeches about the plight of our hostages has made their way into dungeons in Beirut, because I have had the handful of hostages to return, tell me that they have been thrown a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to read about the congressional speeches, mentioning their heroic plight there in Beirut.

However, people to track the proceedings of this House in the RECORD, can never see grass, or chart economic situations. That is probably merciful. They cannot see grass or charts of plagues or diseases that are hitting the world, or hitting our country. It is a sin that they cannot see maps. The first book in my library as a child, I was 8 years of age, after the childhood books of "Winnie the Pooh" and "Alice in Wonderland," was an atlas, purchased across the street from St. Patrick's Cathedral on the island of Manhattan, and a Rand McNally atlas. I hope every parent gives their children atlases, one per child, so that they have contact with this increasingly dangerous world. This map is significant because it shows that whether a person is biased or their predilection is left or right and a person colors the world, we tend to color a country all red, if that is our choice, if it is under communist domination; all black if it is under fascist domination; or brown if it is under, like Italy was under Mussolini. A person cannot color this troubled nation of Afghanistan all red or all pink, because the Communist puppet government, as the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] has carefully pointed out, is restricted to a few key highways, some contested ground on either side of the highways, and a few metropolitan, which is a rough word to use, but I have been to Kabul twice. A few urban areas. Here is what I would like to add to this, and too bad occasionally we cannot get this in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a chart or a graph, so that people can get a visual representation of the imbalance of aid that has gone into this area.

The Soviet Union has put into this area $70 billion, seven zero followed by zeroes to the end of the page, $70 billion.

Mr. DREIER of California. The sum of $70 billion is absolutely correct, and I think we should point out throughout this decade, there have been between 115,000 and 125,000 Soviet troops occupying Afghanistan.

Mr. DORNAN of California. If the gentleman will further yield, that is exactly right. Someone might ask, "OK, Mr. Dornan, how much have we put into this area to add to the agony of the Afghan people?" Why do we not let them choose the kind of government they want, and keep our nose out of it? With $70 billion of Soviet money in there, a person can be assured they will have a puppet government under Najibullah. If a real freedom fighter comes along, that is a statesman, that fights with a pen instead of a sword, as Jan Masaryk in Czechoslovakia, he will be thrown out a window and it will be called suicide, and that is $3 billion—$3 billion to $70 billion.

Mr. DREIER of California. If the gentleman would let me reclaim my time, I think that a very important point needs to be made, too. That is, we talk about the $70 billion which the Soviets have put into repression in Afghanistan, obliterating the people with these butterfly bombs and other kinds of devices, and juxtapose that to the $3 billion which the United States has provided in support, and many people believe that as of February 15 of this year, when we all watched the dramatic removal of the Soviet troops, really, for the first time in history, the Soviet troops beat back out of the country, we assumed that the war was over, the Soviets were out, the Soviets were doing nothing at all. We know full well, Mr. Speaker, that to this day, the Soviets are providing $250 million a month. They have recently deployed 600 armored personnel carriers and tanks into Afghanistan, and this was outlined in the very eloquent testimony which was provided by Ambassador Peter Tomsen.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to be able to incorporate the entire testimony of Ambassador Tomsen and a couple of very important questions which he responded to in the hearing before the Select Committee on Hunger.

The testimony referred to follows:

TESTIMONY OF AMBASSADOR PETER TOMSEN

MR. CHAIRMAN: My colleagues and I welcome this opportunity to appear before your committee to review developments in Afghanistan, U.S. bilateral and UN multilateral assistance programs, and U.S. policy toward Afghanistan. I would be pleased to discuss my recent three-week visit to Pakistan, during which, as U.S. Special Envoy to the Afghan Resistance, I met hundreds of Afghans, individually and collectively. Many traveled to the three Pakistan-Afghanistan border points I visited to provide their personal views to me firsthand.

My conversations with Afghans in the past three weeks at times reflected their traditional differences along tribal, regional, ethnic and other lines. Such divisions in Afghan society are familiar to many Americans who have read popular novels, history and literature about Afghanistan. Yet, there was one common objective shared by all Afghans whom I met: their bitter opposition to the Soviet-imposed regime in Kabul, led by Najib and the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, the PDPA.

Since the Afghan Resistance forced the Soviets to withdraw their forces, Moscow has been pumping unprecedented amounts of military hardware into Afghanistan to keep Najib and his regime in power. The Soviets have created a virtual airbridge to Kabul. They have transferred over 600 APCs and tanks, hundreds of SCUD surface-to-surface missiles, each with 2000 pound warheads, and thousands of tons of artillery, aircraft ordinance, plus other weapons and munitions. These supplies dwarf the assistance going to the Resistance.

The PDPA regime has abandoned the mountains and most of Afghanistan's valleys, basically fortifying themselves in major towns and cities. With the departure of the Soviet forces, the Resistance has had to adjust to a more conventional kind of warfare.

After the initial weeks, the Resistance has avoided frontal assaults on fortified positions. Instead, it is surrounding them, attempting to cut off connecting roads and airfields, and to negotiate the surrender of garrisons. Since February, the Resistance has made slow, incremental progress in this strategy, but to date has scored no single dramatic success.

Mr. Chairman, time is on the Resistance's side. It will prevail. The Afghan people reject Najib and the PDPA as a regime imposed by Afghanistan's powerful northern neighbor. The PDPA regime will eventually meet the same fate as many other Afghans placed in power by outsiders over the centuries.

The war has seriously disrupted the Afghan economy. Recent UN analysis suggests that production of wheat, Afghanistan's most important crop, may be less than half of pre-war levels. Irrigation systems have been severely damaged, mines have made agricultural land unusable, villages unsafe, and transport difficult. Livestock has been decimated, and supplies of seed and fertilizer seriously reduced. Agricultural exports have fallen 40 percent since 1977, and most of the traditional trade ties through Pakistan broken or impaired. In the rural areas, social services were historically minimal, but have now been virtually eliminated except where supported by international efforts.

Since 1985 the U.S., through A.I.D., has been providing humanitarian assistance to Afghans inside Afghanistan. In the fall of 1988, the A.I.D. strategy was revised from providing assistance to all liberated areas of Afghanistan. It now emphasizes areas to which the majority of the refugees are expected to return.

We expect the UN and the World Bank to take the lead in the reconstruction of Afghanistan, a task that requires greater resources than donors can supply bilaterally. The objectives of A.I.D.'s program through 1991 are to meet the pressing needs of repatriation and rehabilitation. The priority is ensuring food security and restoring agricultural production. To achieve these goals, we will support projects to clear mines, improve transportation capacity, supply fertilizer and seed, and provide essential commodities. A key element of our strategy is and will remain to reduce narcotics production.

As we work toward repatriation, the international community must still provide adequate resources for the care and maintenance of the refugees in place. A total of 3.2 million Afghan refugees live in approximately 230 camps in Pakistan. Contrary to what we had all hoped, they have not yet gone home. Indeed, an additional 70,000 refugees have fled to Pakistan in recent months, primarily to escape fighting around Jalalabad. In the current fiscal year, the U.S. is contributing $20.5 million for care and maintenance programs, $5 million for ICRC's emergency medical program and $2.5 million for the UN trust fund. We have also donated $35 million in food assistance for Afghans to the World Food Program.

The United Nations has done an excellent job of mobilizing resources for the refugee camps in Pakistan. However, much work remains to be done on building the capacity to support the eventual repatriation of the refugees. The UN Coordinator for Afghanistan mobilized contributions of nearly $900 million from 30 donor countries in FY-89. Although this figure is exaggerated by valuing the $600 million in-kind Soviet pledge at the official exchange rate. We are working with the UN system on the ground in Pakistan to help the UN get ready to use these resources for repatriation and reconstruction.

Regarding the return of the refugees, I regret to inform that my personal conversations with refugees in Pakistan produced the uniform answer: the great bulk will not return until the Communist regime in Kabul is gone. To date, only a very small percentage have returned; others have arrived from areas of continuing conflict in Afghanistan to replace them. My own judgment is that the great bulk of the refugees will return only when the PDPA relinquishes power, through a political settlement or otherwise.

Mr. Chairman, you have asked that I describe U.S. policy. The United States has pursued four consistent goals on Afghanistan since the Soviets commenced their brutual occupation in December 1979:

Withdrawal of Soviet forces;

Self-determination for the Afghan people;

Return of the refugees in safety and honor; and Restoration of Afghanistan's sovereignty and independence.

The first goal—Soviet withdrawal—has been accomplished. The Afghans themselves won the victory. Pakistani and U.S. support was vital. The three other goals remain to be achieved. During the June visit of Prime Minister Bhutto to the United States, President Bush declared:

"The Mujahidien . . . struggle for self-determination goes on—a goal that both the United States and Pakistan continue to support. Prime Minister Bhutto and I discussed ways to encourage a political solution in Afghanistan that will lead to a non-aligned representative government, willing to live in peace with its neighbors, to replace the illegitimate regime in Kabul. The United States and Pakistan will continue to explore any serious avenue towards this end."

The United States, Pakistan, and the Resistance stand for a political settlement that will transfer power away from the PDPA to an Afghan entity truly representative of the Afghan people. The settlement should satisfy the objectives of self-determination, return of the refugees and the re-emergence of an independent Afghan nation—not one under the influence of an outside power, but one that has good relations with all of its neighbors. The Resistance needs our continuing support to maintain a position of strength as it pursues a political settlement incorporating these objectives.

AFGHAN INTERIM GOVERNMENT

The United States welcomed the creation of the Afghan Interim Government in late February as an important step. We encourage the leadership of the AIG to do everything possible to broaden its base of support to include all major elements of Afghan society, such as shias, commanders and shuras inside Afghanistan and prominent Afghans abroad. We urge its development as a representative body, a valid alternative and replacement for the illegitimate Kabul regime imposed and protected by an outside power. My recent talks with AIG leaders and many other Afghans revealed that, notwithstanding problems, the AIG has staffed many of its ministries whose services are relevant to its struggle. It is beginning to forge additional links with shuras and commanders, and to implement new assistance activities and rehabilitation programs inside Afghanistan.

PAKISTAN

Pakistan's relationship with the Resistance, both political and military, was forged early in the Resistance struggle. The Afghans are clearly grateful for Pakistan's sustained help. During her talks in Washington, Prime Minister Bhutto stated:

"Pakistan remains committed to a political solution of the Afghan problem, whereby the brave people of Afghanistan will have the right to freely choose their own government without interference from outside. Pakistan's commitment to peace and democracy are fundamental."

THE SOVIET UNION

In 1986, President Gorbachev termed Afghanistan "a bleeding wound." The wound was inflicted by Moscow. Soviet blood is no longer flowing. Afghan blood continues to flow from the wound. Moscow is in a position to apply the tourniquet. We urge the Soviet Union to cooperate actively in achieving a political settlement that recognizes the right of the Afghan people to determine their own form of government.

UNITED NATIONS

The Afghans themselves must work out the future political course of their country. We do not believe it is either appropriate or possible for the Unit d Nations to try to force a settlement in Afghanistan at this time. The current role of a Special Representative of the Secretary General accompanying UNGOMAP observers is appropriate for now; he is in the area, actively sounding out parties, probing for openings, and available to work with the parties when or if an opportunity arises.

Mr. Chairman, here in Washington, we have just concluded productive talks with Pakistan on Afghanistan at the experts level. We will be conducting further exchanges with the Soviets on Afghanistan in the coming weeks. We hope our Soviet colleagues will adopt a more constructive approach than heretofore in cooperating to produce a political settlement that permits self-determination in Afghanistan, free of outside interference. We remain confident that the U.S. policy of working toward a political settlement while continuing our support for the Resistance will be successful if we have the patience and steadfastness to stay the course.

TO AMBASSADOR PETER TOMSEN

Can you explain the attitudes of Kabul's population as reported in the Western press?

The reporting should be assessed with the understanding that Kabul regime intelligence/security assets are pervasive in Kabul, as in Beijing or Moscow. Kabulis talking to Western reporters will inevitably be questioned—or worse. Freedom of speech does not exist in Kabul. Some opinions expressed must genuinely reflect the speaker's views. Many cannot.

What is the trend on the ground?

There have been no dramatic military victories; but the Resistance has made incremental military progress. The Mujahidin position today is stronger than it was on February 15, 1989, when the Soviets completed their withdrawal, and now. Virtually all indicators point to continuation of this trend in the months ahead.

What is the future of the Afghan Interim Government?

The AIG is beginning to function. It is attempting to reach out to more commanders and shuras in the field, to broaden its base to include more of Afghan society.

Mr. DREIER of California. I would like to make a few other points, that $250 million a month, $2 to $3 billion a year, is still flowing from the Soviet Union. That is in military aid, Mr. Speaker, to the puppet government of Dr. Najibullah in Afghanistan.

So, least American people believe that as of February 15 of this year the war is over, it is, in fact not over. The struggle continues.

Mr. DORNAN of California. If the gentleman will further yield, heaviest fighting will stop about October 1, when winter sets in.

Mr. DREIER of California. Actually, more like November 15 to December 1.

Mr. DORNAN of California. If the gentleman will further yield, that is if the weather allows and follows the pattern 1 year out of 5. Around October 1 they are looking for the weather to change. If it falls in the weather pattern of last year, it can go until about November 1, and on a very mild year, they could fight into December. Then it shuts down. We have seen the river running at 45 degree angles from the Himalayan run-off, and it is hard to get around that area. However, what is being said, at the rate of $250 million, not rubles, our hard currency, not the worthless currency of a Communist country, in our terms of economic clout, in 4 months, it is $71 billion, and by April, in the fall, when the fighting starts again, in earnest, it will be $72 billion.

Mr. DREIER of California. The gentleman is absolutely correct. I would like to underscore the fact that throughout the winter it is no secret, that in this area of the country, this is further south, the battle continues. The war will continue throughout that time, and it is apparent that the Soviets have used the highway as their supply route will be continuing to provide a flow of munitions and equipment into this area, so that they can continue to try to repress the people of Afghanistan.

Mr. DORNAN of California. If the gentleman will yield, if a Member wants to picture that area, I have flown over it several times in noncombat periods. It looks like a drive from Los Angeles to Las Vegas after a person gets to Barstow. It is desert area. It is tank area. As a matter of fact, to relate to a rather frivolous movie in the popular culture, one of the "Rambo" films involved Afghanistan. Wherever they shot that, the art direction was very well matched to what Afghanistan is like.

Mr. DREIER of California. It was actually shot in Israel.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Then it is the arid country, the desert area, the Negev Desert, Israeli topography, which is naked desert, very similar to this area. So the gentleman is correct, the fighting can continue around the clock.

I do not know whether the gentleman covered this, because I got his message rather late to come here and join him, but we suggest a press conference once in front of a facility in the gentleman's district to show that it was not just the Reagan doctrine that succeeded in Afghanistan when the troops left on the Ides of February, the 15th of February, but that it was an interesting decision that took 5 years to congeal, and it was actually to the State Department's credit—and they do take much beating—that they pushed this over to the intelligence agencies. But the Stinger, made in the gentleman's GD Pomona division, that did the job, if I am correct.

Mr. DREIER of California. Yes, it is produced by General Dynamics, and the gentleman is absolutely right, the Stinger missile is the single item which turned this war around, because the Stinger missile has been the only thing that can truly take the MI-24, which is the version used by the Soviet Union—since the MI-25 is the export version—to take the Hind helicopter out of the air.

Before the gentleman joined me here, I outlined the capability of the Hind helicopter, the strongest, most powerful helicopter known to man, labeled as "the flying tank" by many. But thanks to the Stinger missile, it was labeled by Soviet helicopter pilots as "the flying coffin."

That is in fact what turned this war around, the Stinger missile, and it has provided, very interestingly, a tremendous base of support for the people within Afghanistan. There was a debate in this country as to whether or not we should provide this kind of sophisticated weapons system for the Mujahidin.

It is interesting to the gentleman from California, the gentleman from Orange County, CA, and to me, that we happened to see the storage facility in Islamabad where the chart was blown up.

Mr. DORNAN of California. That was from Soviet sabotage, yes.

Mr. DREIER of California. From Soviet sabotage, yes.

Mr. DORNAN of California. It cost the free world between $110 million and $130 million.

Mr. DREIER of California. Yes, absolutely, and it cost about a thousand lives in Islamabad, Pakistan.

But the gentleman and I saw this around Thanksgiving in 1987.

Mr. DORNAN of California. That was in the museum.

Mr. DREIER of California. Yes, in the museum. We saw a chart which outline the success rate of the Mujahidin versus U.S. trained military, and we saw that the success rate of the Mujahidin was substantially greater than that of the U.S. trained military, meaning that these people have a tremendous resolve and a tremendous ability to take on this problem.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Yes, I remember there was a young man, and they went to tell us his name and I said. "Please don't tell us his name. I don't want to know his name," because we were told there was a bounty on his head. That was one Afghan freedom fighter. He was not all that young, but still a youngish man, 26. He had shot down enough airplanes that if he had jumped an inch in the air when he pulled the trigger on the Stinger, that would been an air-to-air kill, an he would have been an double ace.

We did not get one of those in Vietnam. We had one Navy and one Air Force ace; there were five each. This man had shot down at last count 13 Soviet Hind "flying tanks," or Migs.

We recall the Mig canopy section, the seat in the canopy, and the helmet of a Soviet pilot who must have died, because Afghan dirt was dug into his visor along the side of his crushed helmet, and there was a name in the helmet and blood stains—"Moskowitz." That was a poor young Soviet fighter pilot named Moskowitz who met his fate over the plains of Afghanistan because of a Soviet missile.

If you remember, in the museum there was quote from—and I want to tell the Soviet agents not to go out and blow up the museum. This was a little military museum, an ad hoc museum on a military compound—there was a quote there from Rudyard Kipling, who spent much of his early years in this area.

Mr. DREIER of California. That museum is gone.

Mr. DORNAN of California. That museum is gone? It is all dust?

Mr. DREIER of California. Yes, that has all been taken care of. Is the gentleman trying to provide the Rudyard Kipling quote?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Does the gentleman have it memorized?

Mr. DREIER of California. I can start. Let me make an attempt.

When you are wounded,
Lying on the Afghan plain,
And the women come to cut up what remains,
Roll to your rifle and blow out your brains,
And go to your God like a soldier.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Exactly. Very good.

That told the story of the British Empire then from a great English writer and then to us now, that the Afghan people will fight to the last person for their freedom.

But here comes the problem and the essence of the gentleman's special order. Are we going to bleed these heroic people down to the last Afghan woman taking up a captured Soviet rifle to avenge all of her sons, her husband, her brothers, and her father? Are we going to bleed them the way we did the Vietnamese or the Cubans on the beach at the Bay of Pigs? That was a merciful 3 days only of betrayal, as opposed to 10 years in Vietnam. Are we going to take them out, as we do the freedom fighters or the resistance fighters in Central America, in Nicaragua, or are we going to put them under the pressure you and I have learned about, because of the fear of being cut off from the free world and from American aid where they are now engaged in open combat around Jalalabad, where the Soviets have used transport planes, Antonov-24's? I flew on one of those from Beijing to Ulan Bator. It is a transport plane, but they put bomb racks on it. You and I sat side by side in an airplane in Managua, Nicaragua and seen them do it down there. And they are now bombing above the altitude of the Stinger, which used to be classified until the New York Times published it, and they are bombing them out in the open. They are being pushed into improper—"improper" is not the word—into emergency military tactics because they are afraid we are going to cut them off at the end of this period. And I do not know about this Dan Rather quote, but that is the first shot across their bow from "Gunga Dan," who, as we know, crossed about 12 feet over the border and had himself filmed inside Afghanistan, when he had chosen, like some of the majority Members here who have never supported any direct aid——

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I think it is very important for us to underscore that we have been very fortunate, and I am proud of both Houses of the U.S. Congress because we have had in this instance virtual unanimity of thought. Virtually every single Member of both the House and the Senate has played a major role in providing support for the Majahidin, the freedom fighters, the resistance in Afghanistan.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I disagree with that, and I wonder if the gentleman would agree with me that if we put it to a secret vote, we might not lose. We do not have secret votes here except voice votes can be considered secret if we do not have enough guts to put our names up there in lights. But if we had a secret vote here, a valid secret vote tallied secretly, I believe 100 Members on the other side and maybe a handful on our side would cut off aid to the Mujahidin immediately.

Mr. DREIER of California. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, I would disagree with the gentleman, because I believe there still is a resolve in this House to support the Mujahidin, and possibly, after we provide this special order which outlines——

Mr. DORNAN of California. There will not be anybody then.

Mr. DREIER of California. No, then everyone will be supportive of this proposition.

Mr. Speaker, I want to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me just once more? Will the gentleman yield for just 1 second?

Mr. DREIER of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DORNAN of California. This is the first time we have ever disagreed on the floor.

I want to tell the gentleman that four Members have already told me to my face, two from Illinois, that they would cut off that aid instantly. I know there are others, because when they slip, they talk about American imperialism in Afghanistan, in Angola, and in Nicaragua. They see them all as one set piece. We see them from a different analysis as a set piece of the struggle for freedom.

I am glad that we gave assistance to Jonas Savimbi and the freedom fighters of Angola. I wish we had give Stingers to the freedom fighters in Managua in 1985, 1986, or 1987. If we had, there would be a free government in Managua right now.

But I do not want to give the impression that this whole House is unified as far as freedom fighting is concerned anywhere in the world, because the truth is that there is a majority—and that is a very important impression to get across—there is a majority who are supportive because of an outstanding Democrat named CHARLIE WILSON. But there are Members here who are isolationists in the other party and who do not want a nickel, let alone $3 billion, to go 12 time zones away from Salt Lake City to the other side of the world.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I still have to disagree with the gentleman, because I believe this House had demonstrated time after time its support of the Mujahidin, and I believe, as we have outlined the kind of success which we are having, that this House will continue to provide virtually unanimity in its support of the Mujahidin.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREIER of California. I am glad to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from California for calling this special order, because we are in a critical fashion in this conflict in Afghanistan, and I think it is especially important, given some of the misinformation that the Afghan Government puts out and that the Najibullah regime puts out. Mr. Najibullah was formerly head of the Afghan version of the KGB. The Khad is a known torturer and murderer.

□ 1310

Mr. Speaker, some of this information that has been put out by the Najibullah regime is picked up without discerning whether it is factual or not by a lot of the Western media, and it gets back into the United States in a somewhat raw form and appears on our radio, television and in our newspapers.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is doing a very important service here because it is important that the Members of the House, and that the American people, fully understand that the Soviet Union is still very much in Afghanistan.

Mr. DREIER of California. We have gone through that. We have talked about $250 million a month which is continuing to flow in to support the puppet government of Dr. Najibullah.

Mr. RITTER. Exactly. The gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is talking about the greatest airlift since the Berlin airlift. The Soviet Union has scored a major public relations victory by pulling out the large numbers of troops. But they have a puppet regime there that is in the ring of cities that is shown on the gentleman's map extremely, firmly, defensively entrenched with an enormous level of fire power. Ten thousand tons of munitions, tanks, mines are going into Kabul in this airlift weekly, and I guess what I have to say is, if this House is in support of an Afghanistan which determines its own destiny, then this House should also be in support of supplying the Mujahidin with appropriate ordnance to curtail this airlift of death, this most massive airlift since the Berlin airlift.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER] makes a very important point, and I would like to underscore something that he said. He talked about the tremendous public relations victory which the Soviets had with the troop withdrawal in Afghanistan. They have also, Mr. Speaker, had a tremendous public relations victory in that they, like Beijing, China, like Moscow, like Managua, Nicaragua, have a controlled society.

So, unfortunately the reports which the Western press has provided have been reports which have come from individuals in Afghanistan who have been afraid to speak ill of the puppet government because the word that I have gotten from two or three Western reporters wandering through Kabul is they interview a couple of people. Well, those people, Mr. Speaker, just like in other Communist countries, once interviewed, are immediately taken to headquarters and interrogated. So, the reports which we get which do not necessarily criticize the Najibullah government and may have criticized the Mujahidin are reports which have come from people who are literally scared to death to say anything against the government in power, and I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RITTER. Exactly. The gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] makes a good point.

Where are the Western reporters when it comes to the bombing of villages along the Salang highway and the raining down of death on women and children?

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER] probably remembers the reports which came out. The Salang highway bombings which have taken place launched by the Mujahidin were in U.S. reports very critical saying that the flow of food from the Soviets to the Afghan people were simply being blocked by the Mujahidin.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I was talking about the Soviet bombings of the villages along the Salang highway to completely depopulate the zones there so that no guerrilla forces could be supported by the local population.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER] is exactly right, but the reason I remember seeing this on the CBS news reports is that the Mujahidin were blocking the flow of food to the Soviet Union, to the people of Afghanistan.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, the biggest lie of all that the Soviets have been able to, along with their Afghanistan puppets, perpetrate is that this Najibullah regime, which is essentially an army armed to the teeth and a few camp followers, is even part of a political debate in Afghanistan. The people are 99.99 percent against these Soviet puppets, but these Soviet puppets who have played the game with the KGB and with the Soviet Army know that their only hope is in force of arms, and we also know that is Communist regimes very, very, very small numbers of people have been able to, through force of arms, through these kinds of vast supplies that they are getting on a weekly basis from the Soviet Union, cannot control the population. That is what is happening.

Mr. Speaker, these puppets and their camp followers are not a political force in Afghanistan. They are a very potent military force, but they do not represent at all the Afghan people.

Mr. DREIER of California. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER] is absolutely correct, and I think at this point it would be important for us to outline again something which has not come out in the Western press and reports on the situation in Afghanistan at all.

Mr. Speaker, that is the fact that this map clearly shows that there have been successes by the Mujahidin. The reports are that we have seen nothing but, as I said earlier, the internecine struggles and that they have not been successful at taking Jalalabad. They lost a spot called Sumer Kheyal. Fortunately that has been regained.

However, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is the Mujahidin are in a stronger position today than they were on February 15 when the Soviets withdrew. There have not been any dramatic military victories, but virtually all indicators which we have, Mr. Speaker, do point to further successes in the months to come, and one of the questions which is a very important one asked by many people: What is the status of the AIG, the Afghan Interim Government?

Mr. Speaker, I spoke earlier about our able Ambassador, Peter Thompson, who is our special envoy to the Afghan Interim Government dealing with this situation, and I am pleased to report that we are seeing the AIG, the Afghan Interim Government, beginning to function. It is actually attempting to reach out to the commanders and the Shuras, which are the bodies that are established there in the field, and they are working to broaden their base within the Afghan society.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this kind of success needs to be pointed out to the American people, and I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is absolutely right, and do not forget that this is a country that has never been unified under central government in the way that we in the United States think of.

Mr. Speaker, this is largely a tribal society. It is deeply decentralized and often divided among tribal lines, and to the extent that the non-Communist portions of Afghanistan have come together in this Afghan Interim Government, I think it is a very, very positive sign.

What we need to do is support these folks with humanitarian and military assistance that can make a difference against these incredibly well-armed Afghans with Soviet equipment.

At this time I should compliment our Speaker pro tempore [Mr. GONZALEZ] on the very able job that he is doing in expediting this savings and loan conference report which we are looking forward to have back here.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to second that and encourage the gentleman from Texas [MR. GONZALEZ], the Speaker pro tempore, to expedite even further so that perhaps some of us can meet our schedules with our families as we try to leave this town, however I know it is not all up to the chairman and the Speaker.

□ 1320

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield further to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER], who by the way, I should say, has been one who has provided me with a great deal of encouragement on this issue. He came here before I did. He is very expert, Mr. Speaker, in dealing with this issue, based on his extraordinary background and training. I want to thank the gentleman for the leadership role that he has played in dealing with the plight of the people of Afghanistan.

Mr. RITTER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I was just delighted when the gentleman from California came here and started on this issue, which has received very broad congressional support over the years, and it is our intent to maintain this support in the face of a Soviet diplomatic offensive, a political offensive, and a ferocious puppet military offensive.

Also, we have reports that are unconfirmed that some of these high altitude bombings which maintain radio silence and these precision bombings are actually being conducted by Soviet pilots. We do not have confirmation of that. It is very difficult to get confirmation when there is radio silence and we do not have planes shot down, but these reports continue to circulate in many sources in Pakistan and Afghanistan.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to point out some of the things we can do to move the side of self-determination and freedom for the Afghanistan people along a little more readily. We know that there are vast minefields surrounding the defensive positions in these major cities that the Afghan puppet regime has holed up in. So for the Afghan freedom fighters we need mine-clearing equipment. We need special equipment whereby the soldiers of the resistance can cross over the minefields. It is absolutely essential that this kind of equipment get into the fields in Afghanistan as soon as possible.

We need the kind of artillery that can reach from Mujahidin positions across these minefields and into these highly defensive positions of the puppet regime.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman makes a very good point on the issue of land mines. I mentioned it earlier. There are still, according to reports which we have seen, between 20 and 30 million of these land mines, and I held up, of course, as we have seen many times, this little butterfly bomb which is shot in a cartridge off the MI-Hind-23 attack helicopter. The problem this has created is that it has put a burden on the people of the surrounding countries of Iran and Pakistan, because the 5 million refugees obviously cannot return to the country with the prospect of 20 to 30 million land mines, so we have made the plea here and we have sent several letters, I know, to the United Nations urging them to ask the Soviets for some kind of map which would provide some kind of direction as to where these land mines are located exactly so that we can begin the clearing process.

Mr. RITTER. It is interesting when the gentleman mentions these butterfly bombs or these toy bombs that have been dropped from airplanes over the years, which are basically designed to cripple children, to blow off a foot or half a foot or to blow off a hand or half a hand or a forearm, at which point these crippled children tie up their parents and keep them preoccupied. This has been a strategy of the Soviet Government throughout the course of this war.

Mr. DREIER of California. We also should underscore as far as being victims that over 40,000 Afghan children have been kidnaped into the Soviet Union to be indoctrinated into Soviet propaganda.

Mr. RITTER. The gentleman and others have brought some of these children to hospitals in the United States to take care of them.

This is a state-sponsored atrocity on the order of the S.S. Forces in World War II, and it somewhat bothered me the other day, Mr. Speaker, when Marshall Akhromyeev was awarded such a kind of almost hero's welcome to our Armed Forces Committee and at a particular luncheon of the U.S.S.R. discussion group. It seems to me that somebody made the policy of dropping toy mines in Afghanistan, that somebody in the military had to sign off on this, and one would suspect that the chief of staff was responsible.

It seems to me that somebody in the Soviet military over the years was responsible for the kind of terrorist approach to civilian populations, the murder of women and children, the terrible atrocities against pregnant women in front of husbands, when the Soviet troops and Spetsnaz were seeking information.

I mean, it seems to me that these were no isolated incidents. This was not Mylai. This was a policy of the Soviet Government, fulfilled by their own troops and the troops of the puppet regime.

Frankly, I felt a little badly that when Marshall Akhromyeev came here that to some extent we did not hold him responsible as chief of staff of the Soviet military at this time. the idea of Marshall Akhromyeev and his cohorts saying when they crossed over the bridge at the end of the withdrawal that they were not looking back, I mean, that is sheer rank public relations, because the intensity of this war has not diminished an iota from their perspective. In fact, the way they have arranged themselves in this ring and the way they have forfeited themselves indicates one thing. They do not care about the country. They will bomb it into smithereens if they can, and American, French, and German reporters, will not be there when they do it.

What they care about is keeping holed up in those defensive positions long enough so that while this war goes on, the American people, the American Congress, and the American media get tired.

Now, we have not been great in the art of perseverance in these regional conflicts. We tend to get tired when victory does not come soon, so I think it is very important as the gentleman has pointed out that there has been progress, there have been victories. We have the vast majority of the land in the hands of those who seek self-determination and freedom from Soviet domination.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is absolutely right, and in light of that the real thrust of this special order, what we are trying to do, is to say to the American poeple that we do not want to see the Geneva accords, which were signed April 15 of last year, successful at allowing the Soviets to win at the bargaining table what they failed to win on the battlefield.

Mr. RITTER. Or win on the national media what they failed to win on the battlefield, knowing that the resolution of the United States and the West is never as firm as their own. This is where we are going to get into it. We are going to hunker down into a situation where we are going to have to keep up our side of the bargain, where we are gong to have to get the kinds of equipment that breach minefields, that can shoot over and across minefields into their defensive positions, 120 millimeter mortars, 122 millimeter artillery, and more accurate rockets.

The people are concerned about civil casualties. We need to get the kind of ordnance to the Mujahidin which can pinpoint targets more effectively.

Mr. DREIER of California. Because as the gentleman pointed out earlier, all we are attempting to do here is to provide the opportunity for the people of Afghanistan to have that right to self-determination, which is exploding around the world. There are 13 countries which have had free and fair elections in this decade that have not had them for years in the past. Pakistan is one of those examples where an election has been held last November, and all we want is to see that right to self-determination spill over into Afghanistan so that we can force the Soviet bear back into the Soviet Union.

Mr. RITTER. There is a population of 14 million in Afghanistan. About 1.5 million people have been killed in this war, largely by the actions of the Soviet forces before they left.

What is interesting is that there are on the order of 100,000 regime troops, puppet troops in Afghanistan. Those are the only people who support the regime, and maybe a few camp followers. The gentleman is talking about 14½ million people being rained havoc upon by an incredibly well-armed force of 100,000.

□ 1330

Mr. DREIER of California. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RITTER. That cannot go on for long.

Mr. DREIER of California. The gentleman is correct. Reports which we have gotten to the contrary saying that in some way the people have supported this repressive dictatorship are reports of people who are fearful of that dictatorship who cannot say to anyone anything to the contrary.

Mr. RITTER. There is a rocket attack by the resistance forces against Kabul, and it is reported on Kabul Radio, that is, the Communist puppet regime's radio station, and that information is taken directly from the radio station and put on AP wire services all around the world. There is no confirmation of this. Yet, the decimation of civilian populations in the area of Mujahidin activity from this high-altitude bombing, this at times carpet bombing, is so vast and so uncovered by the world media, and that is why the gentleman's special order today is so important, because he is an expert on this subject. He has devoted himself for years to helping this cause of freedom, this cause of self-determination, this cause of the Afghan resistance. He is perfectly well-suited to display some of his knowledge and understanding so that Members of Congress and the American people can become more familiar with the big picture there in Afghanistan.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend for his very kind remarks. I am not laboring, as I said at the outset of this special order, under the illusion that when we in Congress go home that our constituents are going to have on the tips of their tongues the question, "What is happening in Afghanistan." They will be asking about the savings and loan crisis and a lot of other issues, but I do believe it is important, and this "Dear Colleague" letter which I just sent to every Member of Congress, and a copy of this map, Mr. Speaker, which I have right here, so I hope that our colleagues will look at this map very closely and see the kind of success we have had and read this "Dear Colleague" letter before they go home, because this is an issue which we need to continue to inform the American people about.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN], because it looks as if he has a contribution which he would like to make here.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I just wanted to thank the gentleman for taking out the special order and, again, pointing out how little territory the Communist puppet government holds and to underscore again this word that is accepted inside this beltway among all the cognoscenti, that everybody agrees that the amount of Soviet aid going into Afghanistan is unprecedented. It is more than they put in when they had over 135,000 or 140,000 troops in that country. It is absolutely incredible what they are doing, but also the level of aid going into Nicaragua is at last year's level, which was then unprecedented. It is in complete disregard of everything that President/General Secretary Gorbachev has said about Afghanistan, about Angola, about Central America.

He talks one way, and the Soviet killing machine continues, and the Soviet military and economic aid flows in there.

Mr. DREIER of California. The gentleman is right. The General Secretary referred to Afghanistan as the Soviet Union's bleeding wound, and we say to him right now, Mr. Speaker, that we very much hope that he will patch that up and get out.

Mr. DORNAN of California. There is a reason that he does this. In the Washington Times, Monday, a week ago, there was a little, small article that said that there are officers in the KGB that have finally gotten an article published in one of the prominent military publications where they write that Mr. Gorbachev has created instability in the country, that he is not handling the coal miners' strike in Siberia and in the Ukraine well at all, and that as a bottom line, they will never forgive him, and this is KGB, high-ranking officers, for pulling out of Afghanistan.

What they did not tell us in that is that he has only pulled out the men. He has increased the killing machine.

Mr. RITTER. If the gentleman would yield, we talk about the pulling out of the men. When we met with Ambassador Dubinin, and the gentleman from California was there, the Ambassador, when we asked about the toy mines that have been dropped, blowing off the hands of children and the feet of children who have come back to the United States and, in fact, many have been in the district and the hospitals of the gentleman from California, he said that this was a figment of Western media. Right?

When we talked about children being taken from their homes, kidnaped from Afghanistan and brought to the Soviet Union, that this was a figment of the Western media, and then when we talked about the possibility of Soviet forces being there, he said, of course, that that is not true, but it is not really possible to know whether Central Asian forces are there. We know there are KGB there. We know there are military advisers there. We are not sure there are Soviet forces in many of those places in Afghan puppet regime uniforms, and we are not sure they are flying airplanes bombing the Afghan resistance.

Mr. DREIER of California. I thank my friend for yielding.

I simply want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I very much appreicate those who participated in this special order and also the resolve which this House has shown to solve a very difficult problem, the plight of the people of Afghanistan who are our responsibility, and I look forward to working with our colleagues, Mr. Speaker, in the months to come in hopes of clear victory and self-determination for these people.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 2727. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to establish a retirement and survivor benefit program for judges of the new United States Court of Veterans Appeals, and for other purposes;

S. 1016. An act to change the name of "Marion Lake", located northwest of Marion, Kansas, to "Marion Reservoir"; and

S. Con. Res. 59. Concurrent resolution correcting the enrollment of S. 85.

The message also announced that pursuant to Senate Resolution 106, 101st Congress, the Chair on behalf of the Republican leader, announces the appointment of Mr. MCCAIN, Cochairman; Mr. SYMMS; and Mr. MACK; to the Central American Negotiations Observer Group.

MATSUSHITA MAKES JAPAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, Konosuke Matsushita was a true Japanese hero. Born in 1885 at the height of the reawakening of Japanese civilization under the Emperor Meiji; Matsushita lived to see all phases of Japan develop as we know them today.

He lived to see Japan rise from the cultural and technological wilderness that it once was to the global power that it is today. He saw all the struggles of his country from the inside. Perhaps that is why many consider him the man who was most representative of Japan's development in the 20th century.

Mr. Matsushita passed away earlier this year, and, although I do not intend to mock him, I find it very interesting that his favorite phrase was a colloquial greeting of Japanese from the Kansai, his lifetime home. "Makarimakka," "Have you made any money today?"

This obsession for money has been the dominant theme in Japanese business for the last 35 years. It has been the driving force behind the actions of the nation's elite and policies of economic expansion have been a direct result.

I rise today to focus on Matsushita because, just as its legendary founder was in many ways a mirror image of his countrymen, Matsushita Electric, the electronics giant that bears his name is symptomatic of Japanese business.

Who is Matsushita in America?

Well, Americans know Matsushita products by other names. Perhaps the names Panasonic and National are more familiar. These brands dot the American consumer landscape.

Its all Matsushita and it amounts to a $2.7 billion operation. It is the largest producer of several categories of consumer electronics in Japan and this makes it one of the world's largest.

Matsushita is Japan's model corporation.

I suppose that it should come as no surprise, when, to find this corporate goliath at the very heart of Japan, Inc. More important, Matsushita has also been a driving force in all of the activities that Japan, Inc., has perpetrate in the unending pursuit of foreign technologies and markets.

"The Japanese Conspiracy," by Marvin Wolf, documents some of Matsushita's activities from its initial chapters. It seems that Matsushita was one of the original members of the Tenth Day Group.

I would like to remind the House of the events that are linked to this cartel of Japan's electronics producers.

On September 10, 1964, the Tenth Day Group held its first meeting. That was 25 years ago, when even color television was rare and considered a luxury. To put things in greater perspective, it was less than 1 year after the shooting of President Kennedy and a full 5 years before Apollo 11 landed on the Moon.

These meetings continued on the 10th day of every month, hence the name "Tenth Day Group." But these were not mere social gatherings, although most of the men involved had known each other for years. They were together for a purpose, to capture the world television market. Recalling the words of Mr. Wolf:

> The Tenth Day Group was so successful that it and other secret groups of these leading Japanese manufacturers were responsible for maintaining the high prices of TV sets in Japan, which in a few years were selling for almost twice as much as comparable Japanese sets in the United States. A Japanese color set whose "bottom price" was $700 in Japan would be sold for retail for less than $400 in the United States. The members of the Tenth Day Group has come together for a purpose that was more important for their companies—perhaps, they felt, ultimately more important to the Japanese nation—than the inflated profits the six companies received. In fact, the profits would not line the pockets of the Tenth Day Group or be offered as dividends to Japanese stockholders. The money was to be used secretly to offset the losses that their companies expected to suffer as they drove most of the American television manufactures out of business.

At the center of this collusion was Mr. Matsushita. On his insistence another group was organized, the Okura Group. Its purpose was to coordinate all aspects of the television-dumping operation. President Matsushita was a managing partner in the firm of "green tea and dirty tricks."

This Matsushita success story has spawned its fair share of imitators. In steel, where dumping by such companies as Nippon Steel and Kawasaki Steel proceeded unrelentingly, Japan's market share skyrocketed and steelmakers in this country saw their industry fall from world preeminence to the depths of its greatest depression in history.

In the auto industry, America's great corporations floundered through the decade of the seventies while the combined impacts of high oil prices and a wide open import market opened the flood gates for Toyota, Honda, Nissan, and others. In fact, this spring, MITI, Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry shuffled auto import quotas for Japan's car makers so that smaller producers could have greater market access.

Are they spreading the wealth? Not likely.

Matsushita was a visionary. He was able to foresee the future of what even back in 1964, Japan was becoming. Of course, it is seldom mentioned that his company was a leading creator of the history I have just read. The electronics maker glimpsed the future in the form of the mighty export machine that now operates Japan's business and political culture.

Japan says that it is reforming itself. The truth is that while the numbers may change the story remains the same. The economy of Japan is completely oriented toward exports and the livelihood of its people is resultingly oriented in this export-or-die mentality.

I recently noticed some figures that serve to illustrate this mentality. Of all 35 millimeter cameras produced by Japan, 88 percent are shipped overseas. The watch industry ticks to the tune of a 94.2 percent export percentage; 46 percent of motorcycles produced in Japan roll to foreign shores. Japan's VCR production to export ratio stands at 82.9 percent. The list goes on and on and on.

Mr. Speaker, in many areas these numbers represent lost American jobs.

Matsushita Electric is well represented in the Japan economic juggernaut. Taking a quick look down a list of leading manufacturers of domestically produced goods and services in 1987, the most recent available, Matsushita ranks very prominently. The conglomerate ranks ichiban—Japanese for No. 1—in, not surprisingly, color television production, as well as in home VCR's and industrial robots.

It has often been said that what comes around goes around. This seems to unyieldingly true in the case of Matsushita. The Wall Street Journal on July 28, 1989, notes the latest intrigues of Japan's giant electronics producer. The article entitled, "Ruling May Lead to Punitive Duties on Asian Phones," labels Matsushita as very obstructive in the Commerce Department's investigations on allegations of dumping in the business telephone systems market. In fact, the article states explicitly, "it—Matsushita—decided to stop cooperating with the investigation."

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 28, 1989]

RULING MAY LEAD TO PUNITIVE DUTIES ON ASIAN PHONES

(By Eduardo LaChica)

WASHINGTON.—The Commerce Department, upholding trade complaints filed by American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and Comdial Corp., issued preliminary rulings that manufacturers of business telephone systems in Japan, Taiwan and South Korea are "dumping" their products in the U.S.

The rulings, if upheld, could lead to punitive duties on the imports, which were valued at more than $1.3 billion in 1988.

Dumping is selling in the U.S. at prices below the cost of production or the home-market prices.

The department's handling of the cases could signal that it is taking a tougher stance in dumping cases. At least one foreign manufacturer, Japan's Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., said the department's requests for information were so onerous that it decided to stop cooperating with the investigation.

A Commerce Department aide said that because the agency couldn't obtain complete price data, it used the "best information available" to make its preliminary determinations. Much of that information was simply lifted from the AT&T complaint, he admitted.

That may explain some unusually high "dumping margins"—the department's calculations of the extent to which the systems are being dumped. For instance, the department said the margins were 178.93% on telephone systems manufactured by Matsushita, 136.77% on those from Toshiba Corp., and 129.73% on those from the Taiwanese subsidiary of Japan's Nitsuko Ltd. These margins, which allegedly represent the ratio between the products' U.S. and home-market prices, would equal the amount of penalty duties that will be imposed if the department's preliminary finding is upheld.

The department assigned much smaller dumping margins to South Korean suppliers, who reportedly cooperated fully with the inquiry. These margins were 9.33% for the Samsung Electronis Co. affiliate of Samsung Group, 6.09% for the Gold Star Co. subsidiary of Lucky Gold Star Group, and 7.79% for other Korean brands. The department said U.S. imports of the telephone systems totaled $775 million from Japan, $341 million from Taiwan, and $226 million from South Korea.

A spokesman for AT&T said the department's action "represents major progress on the way to the ultimate result we seek—elimination of unfair pricing in the U.S." He said the company is "committed to being a profitable competitor in the small-business communications marketplace, and once this pervasive underpricing ends, we intend to be very successful."

Mr. Speaker, I had to double check the paper to see that I was not reading from a paper sent out in 1965. This is the same old story and frankly it's very disturbing.

In this most recent case, AT&T is the whistleblower, but then again, so too were a host of TV corporations whose names were long ago swept away in the deluge of cheap sets, "Made in Japan." While I am not going to suggest that AT&T is gravely threatened by this particular action, I do not want to emphasize that this Government must recognize that such targeted dumping has claimed more than one U.S. industry. It will claim more unless America realizes that these destructive actions will eventually destroy the already weakened industry base.

To Matsushita Electric and all those who would follow it, it should be known that America is realizing your challenge. The ranks of those who now believe in fair or equal two-way trade are growing and the day is coming when Japan's greed-filled power elite will learn a new American phrase, "Crime does not pay."

A POINT OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FRANK). The gentlewoman will state the nature of the point of personal privilege.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Yes. Mr. Speaker, today in my office I received a letter dated August 3, 1989, accusing AUCOIN, BOXER, and SCHROEDER of "McCarthy-like," "deceitful," and many other things.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair inquires is that the letter that is here?

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In that event, the Chair having read the letter, recognizes the gentlewoman from Colorado for 1 hour on her question of personal privilege.

The gentlewoman is recognized.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I thank the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I take this time of the House, and I know it is a very busy time, but I must say that I was very saddened to read this "dear colleague" letter that came around today.

This has been a body where reasonable people can disagree, can have differences of opinion, differences of interpretation, but we try not to get personal.

And this is a letter where it is signed, we are called "blatantly deceitful," we are being called "disingenuous," "willful distortion," all sorts of things are being alleged in this "dear colleague" about the issue that confronted this House over the D.C. appropriations.

As you know, in the D.C. appropriations bill, Congressman DORNAN offered an amendment to strike language. Myself and several other Members stood up and fought that. And now Congressman DORNAN, who lost—and believe me, they have not lost very often on this—has not been too gracious in my viewpoint. Instead of being a gracious loser, he has decided to attack us personally, and that is outside the rules of the House.

And I just wanted to call it to people's attention because I really found it very, very shocking at best.

If you will look at what is happening, he also accused us of handing out faulty sheets of paper at the door. All we handed out was the language of the bill with brackets around what he struck.

Now I do not know how you can be more honest than that. That is probably the most honest type of thing to hand out. Rarely do we do that at the door.

But this time we just handed out the language of the bill that was stricken by the Dornan amendment.

When Members saw it and read it and were more thoughtful than they have been in the past on many different occasions, many Members changed their votes.

I think this caused him great consternation. And so rather than dealing with the issue straightforwardly he decided to attack three Members of the House, one of whom, who is not here but I feel just as surely that she would be here if she were present, Congresswoman BOXER, but he decided to attack Congressman AUCOIN, Congresswoman BOXER, and myself personally in this scathing letter.

Again it is way beyond the decency and standards of the House and parliamentary rules. I just wanted to point that out.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN], such time as he may consume.

Mr. AUCOIN. I thank the gentlewoman from Colorado for yielding to me.

As one of the Members who has been singled out for this personal attack along with the gentlewoman from Colorado, I want to rise and indicate how much I want to associate myself with the remarks that she has just made.

Mr. Speaker, I can understand Mr. DORNAN and Mr. DORNAN's supporters who have for the last 10 years consistently won on riders that would restrict funding for abortion services for poor women.

To suddenly now lose, I know what it is like to lose because I have been on the losing side of that fight, as has been the gentlewoman, for 10 years.

But something different happened on the floor of this House 2 days ago. The prochoice side won. They won because there is a mobilization of political action on the part of the prochoice community in this country. They are politically active, they are harnessing their political energy.

And Members of this House know, as we debated on the floor of this House, that it is not a free ride anymore. You just cannot throw a vote on this floor on the D.C. appropriation or on any other bill to the antiabortion forces and go home and figure you are going to get off scot-free because nobody is going to be there to hold you accountable.

It is not fun to lose, particularly on something that you care very much about. Mr. DORNAN cares very much about his position.

But I would make this distinction: When Mrs. SCHROEDER and I and others of us who are prochoice have lost over the years, we never once assailed the character or the integrity of Mr. HYDE, Mr. DORNAN, or any of those who won on those antiabortion amendments.

Now that our side has won, I resent very much having my character or the gentlewoman from Colorado's character or the gentlewoman from California's character being assassinated as it was in the "dear colleague" letter circulated to the colleagues, to the membership of the House of Representatives.

"Blatantly deceitful" is one of the terms that is used; "disingenuous," "McCarthyite tactics;" these are the allegations that were made.

Let me just say for the record, or cite for the record a section from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the day of the debate, on the day of the debate on the D.C. appropriations bill. When the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN], who authored this poison-pen letter, was defending his amendment, I asked him to yield to me. And on page H4928 of the RECORD of August 2, 1989, the following appears:

□ 1400

It is an accurate description of the exchange between the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] and myself. It goes this way: "I am looking at line 19 of the bill, from line 19 to 22 of the bill which," which the gentleman parenthetically (Mr. DORNAN—,) "also strikes with his amendment. The way I read that, the gentleman strikes funding for contraceptive devices."

So I then went on to ask Mr. DORNAN, who was standing in the well and yielding to me, "So is it also then true that Members, in voting for his amendment would be making a personal record that they oppose funding of contraceptive devices; is that not correct?" That is the question I asked. The RECORD goes on. Mr. DORNAN of California is answering my question in this way: "May I answer with a slight amplification. Technically again, the gentleman is correct, except there is a division in the minds I believe of a majority in this House between an abortifacient and it is simply a pill that stops contraception. We will be debating that I predict without fear of contradiction for the rest of our lives in this House."

Now in his letter he indicates there was misrepresentation on what the bill did or did not do on contraception. If I was inaccurate, in my interpretation, that was the time he should have corrected it, not at this hour, with Congress about to adjourn, when he is nursing his wounds, he and his colleagues, after having lost for the first time in a decade, on the question of whether or not a woman should have the right to freely exercise her conscience on the most significant, sensitive traumatic question she probably will ever be called upon to answer.

Therefore, I would just say, Mr. Speaker, I am deeply offended by this personal attack. I think it was far beyond the realm of proper conduct as Members of the House, and for those Members who were offended by the language, that denied protection for the life of the mother, which the Dornan amendment did strike, for people who were offended by that amendment, which struck protection for victims of rape and incest, for people who were offended by the striking of the language with contraception, I want them to understand that the "Dear Colleague" letter that went out today was McCarthyite in its own case. It seems to me, certainly unbecoming a Member of this House. I think the gentlewoman has every right to take a point of personal privilege on this question. I join her in her remarks.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to finish by saying we are not muggers, as we were accused of being here, that we did not hand out smear sheets. We handed out a blue piece of paper with the exact language of the bill in the brackets saying what it was he was talking out. He accused us, the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] of willful distortion, when she said his amendment would not allow funds to be used to terminate an ectoptic pregnancy. Well, that is not willful destruction, that is exactly what his amendment would do. He went on and on and said I was not dealing straight when I said that his amendment would take out language that would allow women to have birth control pills. That is exactly what his amendment would do. He may not want people to know what his amendment would do, but that is what his amendment would do.

To have Members being called deceitful, to also try and say that we are like the Jesuits—gee, I do not know, I thought the Jesuits were pretty good people. I just sent my young son to Georgetown. To go and say that this is a smear, I think instead they are smearing other Members, and I certainly hope this kind of personal attack stops in the House. I certainly hope that we can carry this level of discussion to a much higher level, rather than these end-of-the-session smear sheets being thrown out to Members before everyone runs for airplanes.

Mr. AUCOIN. If the gentlewoman will further yield, one of the important reasons why we take this point of personal privilege is for those Members who joined in the defeat of the Dornan amendment 2 days ago on August 2, it is extremely important for Members to know that they who voted against an amendment that struck a protection for the life of the mother, that struck a protection for victims of rape and incest, that struck language that provided funding for contraception, that they were not wrong, and they were not being duped by tricks played on the floor of the House by any Member. It is important for that to be a part of the RECORD.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. We did not mug one of them.

Mr. AUCOIN. If the gentlewoman would yield, I did see a single mugging, and I appreciate the gentlewoman taking this time.

CIVIL TAX PENALTY REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FRANK). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the House's attention the passage from the Committee on Ways and Means of a provision that I think is important for every taxpayer in America.

ATTACHMENT A—DETAILED DESCRIPTION OF IMPACT PROVISIONS

Description of exactly what some major provisions of IMPACT would do:

A. INFORMATION REPORTING PENALTIES

1. Failure to file correct information returns

IMPACT would modify the information return penalties provided under present law in order to encourage persons to file correct information returns even though such returns are filed after the prescribed filing date. Under IMPACT, any person who fails to file a correct information return with the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) on or before the prescribed filing date would be subject to a penalty that varies based on when, if at all, a correct information return is filed. If a person files a correct return after the prescribed filing date but on or before the date that is 30 days after the prescribed filing date, the amount of the penalty would be $15 per return, with a maximum penalty of $75,000 per calendar year. If a person files a correct information return after the date that is 30 days after the prescribed filing date but on or before August 1, the amount of the penalty would be $30 per return, with a maximum penalty of $150,000 per calendar year. If a correct return is not filed on or before August 1 of any year, the amount of the penalty would be $50 per return, with a maximum penalty of $250,000 per calendar year.

IMPACT also would provide a de minimis exception that would apply to incorrect information returns that are corrected on or before August 1. IMPACT provides a lower maximum penalty for small businesses. Small businesses would be defined as firms having gross receipts of less than $5 million. The maximum penalty for small businesses would be: $25,000 (instead of $75,000) if the returns are filed on or before 30 days after the prescribed filing date; $50,000 (instead of $150,000) if the returns are filed on or before August 1; and, $100,000 (instead of $250,000) if the returns are filed after August 1.

2. Failure to furnish correct payee statements

Under IMPACT, any person who fails to furnish a correct payee statement to a taxpayer on or before the prescribed due date would be subject to a penalty of $50 per statement, with a maximum penalty of $100,000 per calendar year.

3. Failure to comply with other information reporting requirements

Under IMPACT, any person who fails to comply with other specified information reporting requirements on or before the prescribed date would be subject to a penalty of $50 for each failure, with a maximum penalty of $100,000 per calendar year. The information reporting requirements specified for this purpose include any requirement to include a correct taxpayer identification number on a return or statement and any requirement to furnish a correct taxpayer identification number to another person.

4. Waiver, definitions and special rules

IMPACT would provide that any of the information reporting penalties may be waived if it is shown that the failure to comply is due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect. For this purpose, reasonable cause would exist if significant mitigating factors are present, such as the fact that a person has a history of complying with the information reporting requirements. IMPACT also would repeal the special information reporting requirements that apply to payments of interest and dividends; it would make those payment subject to the same general rules applicable to other types of information returns.

5. Uniform requirements for returns on magnetic media

IMPACT would provide uniform magnetic media requirements that apply to all information returns filed during any calendar year. Taxpayers who file more than 250 information returns a year would be required to file on magnetic media.

B. ACCURACY PENALTIES

IMPACT would reorganize the accuracy penalties into a comprehensive structure that eliminates any overlap of the penalties. Accuracy penalties are associated with a taxpayer's duty to file an accurate income tax return.

1. Accuracy-related penalty

IMPACT would create a single accuracy-related penalty, which would be imposed at a rate of 20 percent, that would apply to the portion of any underpayment that is attributable to (1) negligence or careless, reckless, or intentional disregard of rules or regulations; (2) any substantial understatement of income tax; and (3) any substantial valuation overstatement, any substantial overstatement of pension liabilities, and any substantial estate or gift tax valuation understatement.

(a) Negligence

If an underpayment of tax is attributable to negligence, the negligence penalty would apply only to the portion of the underpayment that is attributable to negligence rather than, as under present law, to the entire underpayment of tax. In addition, IMPACT would repeal the present-law presumption under which an underpayment is treated as attributable to negligence if the underpayment is due to a failure to include on an income tax return an amount shown on an information return.

(b) Substantial Understatement of Income Tax

The penalty that applies to the portion of an underpayment that would be attributable to a substantial understatement of income tax would be the same as the substantial understatement penalty provided under present law with three principal modifications. First, impact would lower the rate of the penalty to 20 percent. Second, the list of authorities upon which taxpayers may rely would be expanded. Third, IMPACT would require the IRS to publish, not less frequently than annually, a list of positions for which the IRS believes there is no substantial authority. The purpose of this list would be to assist taxpayers in determining whether a position should be disclosed in order to avoid the substantial understatement penalty.

(c) Valuation Overstatements, Overstatements of Pension Liabilities, and Estate or Gift Tax Valuation Understatements

The penalty that applies to the portion of an underpayment that is attributable to a substantial valuation overstatement would be the same as the valuation overstatement penalty provided under present law with five principal modifications. First, IMPACT would extend the penalty to all taxpayers. Second, a substantial valuation overstatement would exist if the value or adjusted basis of any property claimed on a return is 200 percent or more of the correct value or adjusted basis. Third, the penalty would apply only if the amount of the underpayment attributable to a valuation overstatement exceeds $5,000 ($10,000 in the case of most corporations). Fourth, the amount of the penalty for a substantial valuation overstatement would be 20 percent of the amount of the underpayment if the value or adjusted basis claimed is 200 percent or more but less than 400 percent of the correct value or adjusted basis. Fifth, the penalty would be doubled if the value or adjusted basis claimed is 400 percent or more of the correct value or adjusted basis. IMPACT would provide similar modifications to the penalty for overstatements of pension liabilities and the penalty for estate or gift tax valuation understatements.

2. Fraud penalty

IMPACT would retain the present-law fraud penalty, which is imposed at a rate of 75 percent and would apply to the portion of any underpayment that is attributable to fraud.

3. Definitions and special rules

IMPACT would provide special rules that apply to each of the penalties imposed under the consolidated structure. First, IMPACT would provide that no penalty is to be imposed if it is shown that there was reasonable cause for an underpayment and the taxpayer acted in good faith. The enactment of this standardized waiver criteria is designed to permit the courts to review the assertion of penalties under the same standards that apply in reviewing additional tax that the internal revenue service asserts is due.

IMPACT also would provide that an accuracy penalty be imposed only if a return has been filed. Under present law, a negligence or fraud penalty may be imposed in the case of a failure to file a return. Finally, IMPACT would repeal the higher interest rate that applies to substantial underpayments that are attributable to tax-motivated transactions.

C. PREPARER, PROMOTER, AND PROTESTER PENALTIES

1. Return preparer penalties

IMPACT would revise the present-law penalties that apply in the case of an understatement of tax that is caused by an income tax return preparer. IMPACT would provide that if any part of an understatement of tax on a return or claim for refund is attributable to a position for which there was not a realistic possibility of being sustained on its merits, and if any person who is an income tax return preparer with respect to such return or claim for refund knew (or reasonably should have known) of such position and such position was not disclosed, then that return preparer is subject to a penalty of $250. A reasonable cause exception is also provided.

2. Other penalties

IMPACT would modify the penalty for promoting abusive tax shelters, the penalty for aiding and abetting the understatement of tax liability, the frivolous income tax return penalty, and sanctions and costs awarded by courts.

Example of Single Accuracy Related Penalty

A taxpayer files an income tax return which is subsequently audited by the Internal Revenue Service. There are five different adjustments made to the taxpayer's return; some of which involve negligence conduct and some which do not.

The five items are for the following amounts:

1. Non-negligent conduct involved	$1,000
2. Non-negligent conduct involved	2,000
3. Non-negligent conduct involved	1,000
4. Taxpayer is negligent	2,000
5. Non-negligent conduct involved	2,000
Total additional tax owed by taxpayer	8,000

Under current law, the taxpayer would be properly subjected to the following penalties and amounts:

$400.00—5 percent negligence penalty which is calculated on entire $8,000 deficiency.

Under IMPACT:

$400.00—20 percent accuracy related penalty is imposed only on the $2,000 item which is attributable to negligence.

D. DELINQUENCY PENALTIES

1. Failure to file

IMPACT would modify present law by providing that the fraud and negligence penalties are not to apply in the case of a negligent or fraudulent failure to file a return. Instead, IMPACT would provide that in the case of a fraudulent or intentional failure to file a return, the failure to file penalty is to be increased to 15 percent of the net amount of tax due for each month that the return is not filed, up to a maximum of five months, or 75 percent.

2. Failure to make timely deposits of tax

IMPACT also would modify the penalty for the failure to make timely deposits of tax, in order to encourage depositors to correct their failures. Under IMPACT's four tier penalty structure, a depositor would be subject to a penalty equal to two percent of the amount of the underpayment if the failure is corrected on or before the date that is five days after the prescribed due date. A depositor would be subject to a penalty equal to five percent of the amount of the underpayment if the failure is corrected after the date that is five days after the prescribed due date, but on or before the date that is 15 days after the prescribed due date. A depositor would be subject to a penalty equal to 10 percent of the amount of the underpayment if the failure is not corrected on or before the date that is 15 days after the due date. Finally, a depositor would be subject to a penalty equal to 15 percent of the amount of the underpayment if the failure is not corrected within 10 days after the date of the first delinquency notice to the taxpayer. As under present law, no penalty would be imposed if the failure to make a timely deposit is due to reasonable cause, and not willful neglect. IMPACT also would repeal the present-law 25-percent penalty on overstated deposit claims. Businesses, large and small, think this is the most important improvement.

E. FOREIGN RELATED PENALTIES

1. Penalties for failure to withhold

IMPACT provides that in cases where a tax on the U.S. income of a foreign person was required to be withheld under Chapter 3, but was not in fact withheld, and the income recipient instead satisfies its own proper tax liability, the withholding agent remains liable for any penalties and additions to tax otherwise applicable for failure to withhold. Thus, under IMPACT these withholding agents are subject to the same general approach applicable to U.S. employers who withhold income taxes from employees' wages.

2. Penalties for failure to file withholding statements

IMPACT integrates the penalty for failure to file Form 1042s and failure to provide Form 1042s to the payee into the general penalty structure. Thus, IMPACT treats each Form 1042s, required to be filed with the IRS and provided to a payee, as an information return and as a payee statement as those terms are defined in Code section 6724. Accordingly, each failure to file any required Form 1042s will be subject to a separate penalty under Code section 6721, and each failure to provide a payee any required Form 1042s will be subject to a separate penalty under Code section 6722.

3. Penalties for failure to report information with respect to certain foreign corporations

IMPACT clarifes the reporting requirements and penalties imposed by Code section 6038 by expressly applying those provisions to failures to provide certain information with respect to related parties, such as controlled foreign corporations of which the person subject to the requirements is a U.S. shareholder.

Mr. Speaker, a tremendously important, bipartisan, and widely-supported civil tax penalty reform package has been approved by the Committee on Ways and Means. I wish to let my colleagues and all taxpayers across this country know that help is on the way.

On June 20, 1989, the Committee on Ways and Means approved, on the very first day of its consideration of budget reconciliation, the Subcommittee on Oversight's recommendations for reform and simplification of the civil tax penalty provisions contained in the Internal Revenue Code. This bipartisan protaxpayer reform package was originally set forth in H.R. 2528, the Improved Penalty Administration and Compliance Tax Act [IMPACT], and is accompanied by a detailed set of recommendations for improved penalty administration by the Internal Revenue Service. In a nutshell, IMPACT will make our civil tax penalty system simpler and fairer for all taxpayers. It will ensure that the IRS treats taxpayers in an honest and impartial manner.

COSPONSORS

It was with great pleasure that I introduced IMPACT on June 1, 1989. Ranking Minority Member DICK SCHULZE, and subcommittee members Congressmen BERYL ANTHONY, RONNIE FLIPPO, BYRON DORGAN, HAROLD FORD, and CLAY SHAW joined me as sponsors of this civil tax penalty reform legislation. Since then, Congressman BARNEY FRANK has become a cosponsor of IMPACT. This legislation is the culmination of the hard work by members of the Subcommittee on Oversight of the Committee on Ways and Means. It is a natural extension of tax reform and is in keeping with the committee chairman's efforts toward tax simplification.

WIDESPREAD SUPPORT FOR IMPACT

Since first proposed, IMPACT has received widespread and enthusiastic support from all segments of the tax community. The Treasury Department supports this reform measure. The Internal Revenue Service supports it. The U.S. Tax Court, Justice Department, and the Small Business Administration all approve of this package. Former IRS Commissioners, the American Bar Association, the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, the National Society of Public Accountants, the Tax Executives Institute, the American Bankers Association, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and the National Federation of Independent Business all have indicated their support for IMPACT. The National Taxpayers Union agrees with the improvements made in the bill.

Support for this reform package is not limited to government agencies and professional tax organizations. Individual taxpayers and businesses have written letters to indicate their support for penalty reform. I strongly believe this legislation will create a fairer, more effective and rational penalty system for all Americans.

COMMENTS FROM SUPPORTERS OF IMPACT

1. Department of the Treasury—Dana L. Trier, Tax Legislative Counsel, stated: "I would like to congratulate you on the major effort here. We applaud the efforts of you and all the concerned parties to come up with what we believe to be major improvement in the penalties under the Internal Revenue Code."

2. Internal Revenue Service—Fred T. Goldberg, Commissioner stated: "I applaud the effort you and your colleagues have made in the area of penalty reform. IMPACT is one of the most significant improvements to the tax system. This is a top quality product. I hope it is expeditiously enacted. It is wonderful for taxpayers."

3. American Institute of Certified Public Accountants—Don Skadden, Vice President of Taxes stated: "We were delighted with the process; delighted to be a part of the process; and, believe the end result from that process is an excellent piece of legislation."

4. United States Tax Court—Arthur Nims, Chief Judge stated: "IMPACT goes a long way to make the tax law penalty system more rational, more understandable, and more workable. This is a good bill."

5. Lawrence B. Gibbs, Former IRS Commissioner—"IMPACT will have an impact—an impact for the better. For fairer tax administration. For better voluntary compliance. For better relations between the IRS and taxpayers. This is a good set of proposals. It implements many important improvement in the tax system. And it sets the course for continuing improvements by encouraging better administration of penalties and providing for studies of several important issues. Passed in its present form, it will make significant improvement in tax administration, and for that reason should be supported."

6. Tax Executives Institute—Charles W. Rau, Chair of TEI's Task Force on Penalties, stated: "TEI is extremely pleased with the introduction of H.R. 2528. We agree that IMPACT sets forth a credible framework for obtaining true reform of the tax law's penalty provisions."

7. Department of Justice—Shirley Peterson, Assistant Attorney General stated: "This bill is a welcomed response to the problems created by a complicated civil penalty structure that some have criticized as producing unintended results and perceived unfairness in the administration of our tax laws."

8. Small Business Administration—Frank Swain, Chief Counsel for Advocacy stated: "I think this is an excellent proposal. It is responsive to a number of small business concerns, and we certainly hope that Congress will take expeditious action on it."

9. Jerome Kurtz, Former IRS Commissioner stated: "I would like to congratulate the Subcommittee on its work product. It goes a long way toward bringing order out of what was absolutely chaos and would restore a high degree of fairness to what was in many respects a very unfair system."

10. Donald C. Alexander, former IRS Commissioner stated: "I think you made a great and very constructive step foward in introducing this bill to improve the penalty structure. The present system badly needs an overhaul and IMPACT would resolve many of the current problems."

11. American Bar Association—James E. Merritt stated: "I think when they realize it, other tax practitioners and taxpayers in this country will thank you for bringing some resemblance and a big step in improvement in creating fairness, simplicity in a complex penalty system."

12. National Society of Public Accountants—Chad Piehl stated: "IMPACT marks a significant congressional contribution to the American taxpayer and the tax return preparer."

13. Department of the Treasury—Kenneth Gideon, Assistant Secretary for Tax Policy, stated today: "We think the Committee's penalty reform package is a major improvement over current law. We urge speedy enactment."

WHITE HOUSE BACKS LEGISLATION TO MAKE TAX PENALTY SYSTEM FAIRER AND SIMPLER

(By Hilary Stout)

WASHINGTON.—The Bush administration endorsed legislation intended to make the nation's civil tax penalty system fairer and simpler.

In most cases, the proposed changes probably would mean smaller fines for violators, but government officials regard the new system as more appropriate and believe it would compel more people to comply with the law—thereby keeping the government from losing revenue.

At a hearing before the House Ways and Means oversight subcommittee, officials from the Treasury Department and Internal Revenue Service said the measure was "a major step forward" in improving compliance with the tax code. "The primary objective of the civil tax penalty system should be to promote voluntary compliance," said Dana Trier, the Treasury's tax legislative counsel.

The administration's support makes it likely that Congress will enact substantial changes in the way taxpayers are punished for underpayments.

The legislation was introduced by Rep. J.J. Pickle (D., Texas), the panel's chairman. Rep. Dick Schulze of Pennsylvania, its ranking Republican, and several other members. The subcommittee has been studying the penalty system for more than a year. It would:

Eliminate the so-called stacking of penalties, by coordinating sanctions so only one penalty could be imposed on an underpayment of tax.

Change the current penalty for underpayment through negligence to 20% of the portion of the underpayment directly attributable to negligence, rather than 20% of the entire underpayment.

Tie the fees imposed for late filing of information returns to how late they are. A taxpayer who filed an information return two weeks late would pay a smaller fine than someone who filed six months late.

Reduce the penalty for substantially understating tax liability to 20% of the understatement from 25%.

Waive an understatement penalty if the taxpayer acted in good faith and had "reasonable cause" for the position taken on the return.

The IRS also has been studying the tax penalty system, which has burgeoned from about 13 penalties in the 1950s to some 150 today. In March, the agency issued a series of recommended changes, and officials have been working with the committee to draft the legislation.

While the bill doesn't contain some of the IRS's principal proposals, acting Commissioner Michael Murphy said the agency supports most of the bill's provisions and said it "solves a number of problems."

The Treasury hasn't completed its calculations as to whether the bill would lose or gain revenue. But Mr. Trier said the department's preliminary calculations suggest that with "some tinkering" the bill can be crafted to neither lose nor gain revenue.

Last year the IRS took in $6.04 billion from civil tax penalties.

BACKGROUND ON PENALTY REVIEW

The Oversight Subcommittee, which I chair, conducted a comprehensive review of the civil tax penalty provisions contained in the Internal Revenue Code for more than a year. Four days of hearings were held to review the structure, application, fairness, and effectiveness of the current civil penalty provisions and to receive recommendations for improvements.

The subcommittee received testimony and written comments from numerous witnesses including tax practitioners, the business community, professional organizations, academicians, the Department of the Treasury, the Internal Revenue Service [IRS], and former IRS Commissioners and chief counsels. The subcommittee heard a rising chorus of complaints and concerns about the current penalty system. We heard repeatedly that the current penalty structure is a confusing morass of complex, overlapping penalties that are often unduly harsh or just plain irrational. Concern was also expressed about the complexity, severity, and sheer number of penalties in the code.

STATISTICAL DATA ON PENALTIES

To see how important penalty reform is just look at these facts. Today, the Internal Revenue Code contains nearly 150 provisions designed to penalize those who do not comply with the Federal tax law. Yet, only 3½ decades ago, the penalties were simple and few. The Internal Revenue Code of 1954 initially included 13 penalties. This grew to 25 in 1967 and to 150 in 1987.

The growth in penalty assessments has kept in step with the expansion in the number of penalty provisions. For fiscal year 1978, the IRS reports that it assessed 15.4 million penalties for a total of $1.3 billion. After abatements, 1978 assessments totaled approximately $1 billion. Ten years later, for fiscal year 1988, data indicates that the IRS assessed 26.6 million penalties for a total of $10.9 billion. Approximately 14 million penalties were assessed against individuals for $2.4 billion; about 844,000 penalties were assessed against corporations for $1.3 billion. After abatements, 1988 assessments totaled approximately $6 billion. I think these figures are staggering and deserving the Congress' attention.

PROBLEMS WITH CURRENT PENALTY SYSTEM

With nearly 150 penalties currently in the code, the IRS, taxpayers, and tax practitioners are faced with substantial compliance and administrative burdens resulting from the complexities involved with these provisions. There are just too many penalties. Many penalty provisions are too complex for the IRS to effectively administer and, for many taxpayers, too complex to comprehend. And, under our current structure, there are a number of instances where the same taxpayer behavior can be subject to more than one tax penalty. In other words, a number of the penalties overlap and stack, increasing the possibility that enormous penalties may be imposed on relatively small tax deficiencies.

DEVELOPMENT ON PENALTY REFORM PACKAGE

In July of last year, the subcommittee took that important first step toward penalty reform when we began to receive concrete recommendations for change from such groups as the American Bar Association. Later, in February 1989, IRS Commissioner Larry Gibbs presented to the subcommittee his study group's report entitled, "Report on Civil Tax Penalties, by Executive Task Force, Commissioner's Penalty Study, Internal Revenue Service." At the same time, we also heard from the chief judge of the U.S. Tax Court and the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants. At that point, it became apparent to all that a consensus on the specifics of penalty reform was an attainable goal.

IMPACT embodies that consensus. I am proud to say that this consensus developed as a result of the myriad of written comments the subcommittee received from individual and business taxpayers, followed by a series of task force or roundtable discussions the subcommittee recently held with tax practitioners, various interested organizations, and government representatives. We all rolled up our sleeves and indentified areas of agreement and ironed out many of our differences. It was a highly productive way of going about a very massive, complex task. I commend everyone who has contributed to this process for their outstanding efforts. This excellent legislation is the product of this process, and one of which we all can be proud.

SUMMARY OF IMPACT'S MAJOR PROVISIONS

IMPACT will provide a fairer, less complex, more effective and more rational civil tax penalty system. In summary, IMPACT will improve the penalties applicable to information reporting by treating those who attempt to comply with the law less harshly than those who do not. With respect to the current-law negligence, overvaluation, and understatement of income penalties, IMPACT will eliminate the stacking of the penalties and consolidate them into a single, uniform accuracy penalty. We retained the present-law fraud penalty. IMPACT will improve the penalties for failure to pay and failure to make timely deposits of tax by eliminating overlapping and encouraging remedial action. IMPACT enhances the standards for income tax return preparers. Finally, IMPACT will address the penalties applicable to tax shelter promoters and tax protesters.

IMPACT sets forth a penalty framework that is fairer, simpler, less harsh, and easier to administer. And importantly, this reform package will maintain the trust of honest taxpayers by ensuring that there are proper penalties for those who fail to comply with our Federal tax laws.

OBJECTIVES TO PURSUE IN HANDLING PENALTY CASES

Penalty reform requires more than legislative action. Penalty reform can only be truly meaningful if it is accompanied by administrative improvements implemented by the IRS. The IRS has recognized this and, in the Commissioner's civil tax penalties study report, listed the following objectives that IRS should follow as it handles each penalty case:

First, similar cases and similarly situated taxpayers should be treated similarly;

Second, taxpayers should have the opportunity to have their interests heard and considered. This includes providing a forum, listening to their views, and modifying decisions when appropriate;

Third, IRS should strive to make good substantive decisions in the first instance. A wrong decision, even though corrected eventually, negatively impacts voluntary compliance;

Fourth, an adequate opportunity should exist for incorrect decisions to be corrected. This encompasses appeals to the office that asserts the penalty, a separate appeals apparatus, and access to the court system;

Fifth, the agency should act in an impartial and honest way. While each IRS representative appropriately approaches his or her job from a Government perspective and with the objective of protecting the Government's interest, the true interest of the Government is the impartial enforcement of the tax laws, and this requires that treatment of taxpayers not be biased in the Government's favor;

Sixth, IRS should help taxpayers understand their legal rights and assist them in understanding their appeal rights. IRS should scrupulously observe the taxpayer's procedural rights; and Seventh, IRS should seek to promptly process and resolve each taxpayer's case. Promptness requires a certain amount of initial informality in the dispute resolution process."

ADMINISTRATIVE RECOMMENDATIONS

I commend the IRS for its commitment to taxpayer service and its stated objectives of handling taxpayer cases in a prompt, objective, and forthright manner and intend to hold the IRS to these standards. To assist the IRS in achieving these goals and to insure effective implementation of the subcommittee's legislative package, the Oversight Subcommittee developed additional administrative recommendations to accompany the statutory penalty reform package. We have said that the IRS should:

GENERAL ADMINISTRATIVE RECOMMENDATIONS

First, the IRS should develop a policy statement emphasizing that civil tax penalties exist for the purpose of encouraging voluntary compliance.

Second, the IRS should develop a handbook on penalties for all employees. This handbook should be sufficiently detailed to serve as a practical guide for most issues of penalty administration.

Third, the IRS should provide clear guidance to its employees on how to compute penalties. This guidance should be incorporated into the penalty handbook.

Fourth, the IRS should revise existing training programs to reflect the purpose for penalties and their administration.

Fifth, the IRS should examine its communications with taxpayers to determine whether these communications do the best possible job of explaining to taxpayers why they received the penalty and how they can avoid the penalty in the future. These communications include penalty notices and publications. Penalty notices should also provide the telephone number of contact offices which taxpayers may call with questions and which have the authority to address disputed penalties.

Sixth, the IRS should finalize its review and analysis of the quality and clarity of machine-generated letters and notices used in the Adjustments and Correspondence Branches of the IRS service centers and report to Congress by July 1, 1990.

Seventh, the IRS should consider ways to develop better information concerning the administration and effects of penalties. The IRS should develop a master file data base to provide statistical information regarding the administration of penalties. The IRS should continuously review information for the purpose of suggesting changes in compliance programs, educational programs, penalty design, and penalty administration.

Eighth, in the application of penalties, the IRS should make a correct substantive decision in the first instance rather than mechanically assert penalties with the idea that they will be corrected later.

INFORMATION REPORTING PENALTIES

First, the Internal Revenue Service should adopt a clear policy of working with the third party payor community to assure accurate and timely filing of information, in a format that is usable by the IRS and the taxpayer without unduly burdening the third party that is required to provide this information.

Second, the IRS should maintain an ongoing effort to develop, monitor, and revise programs designed to assist taxpayers in complying with legal requirements and avoiding penalties. The IRS should develop a publication for every business, exempt organization, and governmental unit enumerating all information reporting requirements, sanctions for noncompliance, whom to call with questions, and where to file. The IRS should also provide speakers on information reporting to industry meetings and programs.

Third, the IRS should consider the creation of an advisory group comprised of representatives from the payor community and practitioners interested in the information reporting program that meets on a regular basis to discuss improvements to the system. This advisory group would be useful to discuss problems, the feasibility of complying with or the economic impact of rules and regulations affecting the reporting industry.

Fourth, the information returns master file [IRMF] should be managed under the jurisdiction of a single function within the IRS. This function should have responsibility not only for the magnetic media filing program and the processing of data to the IRMF, but also for penalty assertion and abatement programs in this area, processing paper documents, payor education programs, and examination and other compliance programs. This function should also have operational responsibility for the issuance of regulations and ruling.

Fifth, penalty case work in the information reporting area, including administrative appeals, should be centralized and the procedures for handling the abatement of information reporting penalties should be streamlined.

Sixth, the IRS should better use its limited enforcement resources to ensure that taxpayers who continually fail to comply with the reporting requirements are identified and penalized, rather than focusing only on taxpayers who are working with the IRS in an attempt to comply with the law.

Seventh, the IRS must provide to a taxpayer upon request, or to a financial institution with the taxpayer's authorization, within 30 days, a list of the names the IRS has—in its computer matching program file—under the taxpayer's identification number. This information could be used by the taxpayer to reconcile or determine the reason for any mismatches between the information the taxpayer has supplied a financial institution, between the information the financial institution has supplied to the IRS, and the information the IRS has in its master file.

PREPARER, PROMOTER, AND PROTESTOR PENALTIES

First, disciplinary sanctions by the Director of Practice should not be viewed as a adjunct to the civil tax penalty system as it applies to tax return preparers. In matters involving nonwillful conduct, the IRS should only refer cases to the Director of Practice in instances where the IRS can establish a pattern of failing to meet the required standards. An isolated instance in which a penalty may apply should not, in and of itself, require a referral unless willful conduct is involved.

Second, the Department of the Treasury should issue regulations related to the IRC section 6700 penalty for promoting abusive tax shelters and the section 6701 penalty for aiding and abetting understatement of tax liability to the extent the provisions may apply to activities which could be subject to the section 6694 and 6695 tax return preparer penalties. Guidance on these matters should be issued in a timely fashion.

Third, the IRS should instruct its employees that they cannot threaten the use of preparer penalties during an examination, appeals conference, or other proceedings involving a tax advisor.

Fourth, the Director of Practice should publish more information about the basis for being disciplined and warnings in appropriate cases. Questions and answers prepared in conjunction with input from practitioners would be helpful to the tax practitioner community.

ROLE PENALTIES PLAY IN VOLUNTARY TAX SYSTEM

Our voluntary tax system in this country is remarkable. For the system to continue to work, however, it needs the respect, confidence, and support of all of us. Penalties do play an important role in our tax system. Penalties should exist for the primary purpose of encouraging voluntary compliance with the tax laws. Penalties should not be used simply to raise revenues. Penalties and the standard of conduct required of taxpayers should be readily known and easily understood. Penalties should be targeted only to culpable conduct. Multiple penalties should not apply to the same misconduct. Penalties should be proportionate. Penalties should encourage compliance. Penalties should not treat taxpayers who make a good faith effort to comply with the tax laws as harshly as those taxpayers who deliberately violate the laws. Finally, administrative procedures for imposing penalties should ensure that all taxpayers are treated in a fair and equitable manner by the Internal Revenue Service. IMPACT will go far in making these worthy goals a reality.

CLOSING REMARKS

The reform package, as adopted by the Ways and Means Committee, will eliminate much of the overlapping and stacking of penalties and will go a long way toward resolving many of the complaints we have heard about the current system. "IMPACT" is of great importance to all taxpayers. I believe the American public is entitled to a fair and just penalty system. IMPACT is sure to be the pro-taxpayer legislation of 1989. I want to strongly urge my colleagues to join in enacting this crucial reform legislation.

TERRORISM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk today about a subject I wish and others wish did not have to be discussed on this floor, and that is terrorism. It is, to be explicit, the wave of kidnapings and murders that have tragically come to be a method of political discourse in parts of the Middle East. Fanatics of the sort grouped around Hezbollah have declared outrageously, with no moral justification, with no basis legally, morally, or any other way, that they have the right at will to kidnap, abuse, torture innocent people, and when they find it convenient, kill them, people who are in most cases innocent by any definition.

Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to suggest by that people like Colonel Higgins who were so brutally killed were in any way guilty in a rational world, but even in the distorted, perverted, illogical world of the fanatics who do this, they have victimized people who by no stretch of the imagination acted contrary to their interests.

Ironically—more than ironically, appallingly, these people who themselves assert their right to kidnap, and murder and torture react with a resignation that would be comic if it were not for the tragedy of the circumstances when one of their leaders is subjected to a retaliatory kidnaping. I am referring, obviously, to the action by the State of Israel in seizing Sheik Obeid who admits to being one of those who directed the kidnaping of people, some of whom were later murdered.

Mr. Speaker, we should be very clear that the condemnation goes to those like Sheik Obeid and others who have asserted their right to kidnap, and I think we ought to also be clear, whether we are talking about the United States, or Israel or other nations, that those who are the representatives of the victims of the kidnaping have every moral right of self-defense.

Obviously we would prefer a situation in which there was some tribunal before which justice could be obtained, but there is none. We are talking about a situation where there is no international law of any sort to which we can appeal. There is no protection for Americans, for Germans, for English people, for French people, for Israelis, for other Arabs, because many of the victims of this minority of Arab terrorists have in fact been Arabs.

Let us note, and I will return to this, that the major victims today of brutal Arab fanaticism are innocent Arabs, the Christian Arabs in Beirut who are being bombarded mercilessly by Syrians. Others who may speak out politically in opposition to the terrorists, they themselves become the victims.

However, Mr. Speaker, we should be very clear that those nations which represent the victims have every right of self-defense. I believe there is an almost unanimous agreement in this House, and I say "almost" because one can never be certain, but I believe that there is virtual unanimity here that we have a moral right to strike out in self-defense and that, if we were able to through our intelligence to identify precisely where these hostages who are Americans are being held, and not just Americans; I think we have got the right to go to the aid of those who are being tortured by these kidnapers if we were in possession of the intelligence which said, "Here's where they are"; and if we could tactically work out plans by which we could bring forces to bear and rescue all of them simultaneously so that those left behind would not be further victimized, I do not think there is any question about our moral and legal right to do so.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I believe there was no question about the right of Israel, acting out of self-defense, to seize Sheik Obeid who is an acknowledged leader of this terrorist movement. This is a man who proclaims his right to murder, kidnap, and torture, and, yes, those who are the legal representatives of the victims have a right of self-defense.

Nor does it make any sense for those of us on the antiterrorist side to begin to quarrel over tactics. There are legitimate differences. America has found itself since the late 1970's in a very frustrating position. We are an extraordinarily powerful Nation, and it is said that power cannot be brought to bear effectively on behalf of our citizens. President Jimmy Carter, President Ronald Reagan, and President George Bush have had in common a terrible frustrating and a sense of personal pain that we were not able effectively, as they would have liked, to, all three of them, bring American power to bear to free our innocent citizens who were being so abused.

The Israelis have had for a variety of reasons a focus on methods of doing this, a knowledge of the area, an organization of their operations. They have had greater success than most other nations in acting against some of these terrorists. Their ability to do so in this case seems to me to be a source of strength for those of us who are antiterrorist.

Those of us who have criticized Israel because acting out of a legitimate sense of self-defense they seized a man who has been a fomenter of murder against their own citizens, I think is wrong morally and politically. It is wrong because it gives aid and comfort to the terrorists to see the antiterrorists quarreling, nor is it all sensible to suggest somehow Israel bears the responsibility for the murder of Colonel Higgins, assuming he was murdered after the kidnaping, and we cannot be sure of that, nor would it be sensible to suggest that if America did exercise its right of self-defense, that we would somehow be responsible for other murders.

People who kidnap and torture and threaten killing are not entitled by any shred of logic to say, "Oh, but if any of you try to defend yourselves, we are going to kill them brutally, and it will be your fault." Nonsense, nonsense morally, nonsense logically, nonsense politically. We have got to stand together.

None of us here are critical of the fact the President has not yet acted, because we understand his principle, which is action must if it happens be of a sort which will protect people without endangering others, and I admire the restraint the President is showing in the fact of what we know to be a strong desire to lash out, but we cannot as a Nation lash out and damage innocent people in the Middle East, nor endanger our own hostages, but neither should we allow our frustration at our inability to act to lead into what seems to me to have been, other than in this building, inaccrurate and unfair condemnations of Israels assertion of its right of self-defense, and obviously I am not arguing for that out of any view that Americans cannot criticize Israeli policy.

People sometimes say, "Well, you can't criticize this country or that country." I am a great believer in the first amendment and I think everybody can criticize everybody.

The strongest of allies will occasionally differ. Of course, there will be times when American and Israeli policies will differ and American and British policies will differ, American and French policies will differ, American and Canadian policies will differ. We are mature enough and strong enough in our mutual relationships to allow criticism without any sort of breach to develop. Of course, we can do that.

But what we must also do is to recognize that a common core of moral and political commitment binds us, and particularly at a time like this we have got to focus on who our real enemy is. Our enemies in this situation, sadly, are the people who have chosen to make themselves our enemies.

We have not in this country and other countries decided to make war on a particular faction of Shiites. We have not declared that some war exists between us and people who profess a particular political philosophy. They have said that they have the right in the expression of their political differences to make war on innocents. Our response has got to be, "No, you may not, and no, you may not claim as an excuse for your murder the act of self-defense, whether by Israel or the United States."

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we will recognize, in my judgment, that Israel had every right to do what it did, that in fact a willingness to strike back against the terrorists, even when in the short term it may not appear to have benefits, is an important part of trying to keep that in check. If Israel were to announce today and the United States were to announce today, and others to announce today, that we give up any right of retaliation the result overwhelmingly would be more murder of the innocents and more kidnaping and torture.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, because I do not want to prolong today's proceedings, I do want to return to what I mentioned before, and that is the Syrian attack on the Christians in Beirut. I think we have to look at this in the context of the role of Iran as well. We have in the Syrian-Iranian alliance two nations which continue to foment, support, and indeed participate indirectly in the worst sort of violence against innocents. The people are being killed in Lebanon today by a Syrian occupation force, and it is sad that the Arab League decided it had to abandon its peacekeeping efforts. We cannot abandon the victims in Lebanon of this sort of attack. There are more victims today of that violence in the Middle East than from any other source.

It is important the new government of Iran be made to understand that there will be no conciliation. There will be no economic easing. There will be no relaxation of tensions as long as they say some nice words with one hand, but with the other continue to support the kind of violence and abuse that we have seen.

We must also let their partners, the Syrians know—the Syrians who on the one hand talk about the importance of Arab unity and the Arab cause, and on the other hand are responsible for the killing of more Arabs than any force in the world today. The Syrians must also know that this sort of murderous behavior will not be tolerated.

Mr. Speaker, we all feel deeply for the victims of the kidnapers and murderers. We are united, I believe, in this Congress with the President in our desire to do whatever will work to free these innocent people from the terrible prisons in which they have been so cruelly put.

Part of our ability to do that, Mr. Speaker, is to work together with our allies in Europe, in the Middle East, in Israel, and elsewhere. Egypt is another country which is by and large supportive of our antiterrorism efforts and has in fact been victimized. There have been victims in the Emirates and elsewhere.

Those of us who may have other political differences, but who stand firmly opposed to this sort of terrorism, have to stand together and hope that we will be able to find ways of working together, pooling our resources and pooling our energies, not only to free those who are now in prison, but to make the individual terrorists, their oganizations and those nations like Syria and Iran that stand behind them, understand the price for a policy of murder and torture is too high.

THE D.C. APPROPRIATIONS BILL AND PRO-LIFE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DYSON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I am going to exercise the option to speak from the leadership desk because I have some exhibits to elucidate the vote yesterday on the D.C. appropriations bill, and to try one more time to explain why the Pro-Life Caucus in this House, and I believe the majority of this House, because the majority in all the time I have been here since 1976 have been prolife, why they are upset about the proceedings during the D.C. vote and what happened at the doors of this House to turn 30 Members around who had always voted prolife and had voted for near identical Dornan language last year, and now find themselves as prolifers in the difficult position of answering to national prolife groups and their own local prolife groups why their vote, if President Bush fails to veto the D.C. appropriations bill on this very point of funded abortions, and he will not fail us. He will veto it. He is a man of honor. I have his letter before me which I will admit as exhibit A. Why these prolifers are upset that they have been caught out on a limb and the prolife groups correctly will say to them, "If something goes wrong, if we didn't have this backup of the President's veto, then your vote, each 1 of the 30, would start the killing again in the District of Columbia that has been cutoff for 10 months with public funds, tax funds, and will remain cutoff throughout our 5-week break, all of September, until October 1.

The Dornan language that is law now has the life of the mother exception in it. It is what I want. It is what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] wants. It is what every prolifer in this House on both sides of the aisle wants.

It will never come out of conference any other way, and that is why I went through the same process that I went through last year to get to the end result of a Dornan amendment in the D.C. appropriations bill that has been law since last October 1, 1988. So, exhibit A, a letter from the President of the United States, a letter to Mr. DIXON, JULIAN DIXON, where he starts off, "Dear JULIAN." I began the debate this way the other day, and I said to the distinguished chairman who did treat me fairly, I said, "I know the chairman will not mind my reading this, because although it is a 'Dear JULIAN' letter, it was sent to me by the White House and provided in the cloakroom to anybody who wanted to read it." It started off, "Dear JULIAN," and went on to say, "I will veto the D.C. appropriations bill if any appropriated funds in this bill go toward abortion except in the case where it protects the life of the mother."

One of the things that caused this confusion yesterday is, I believe, with all due respect to the parliamentarians in this building, that I got bad advice on how I had to use strike language to get out the money that would start the killing, the abortion on demand, with public funds, not Federal funds, but other public funds, that would start it again October 1. I did not have to have anything to do at all with the language in the bill that even talks about drugs or devices to prevent implanation or ectopic pregnancies, which is allowed by every religion, at least in the Western world, because that is considered a malfunctioning organ when the pregnancy begins to take place in the fallopian tubes, and the fallopian tube can never bring a baby in the womb to term. It will always explode the organ, and they are allowed to remove it as a malformed or misfunctioning organ to save the life of the mother.

As a loyal, practicing Roman Catholic, I know that my church has always held to this theory, as does every other Protestant and Christian denomination in this country, as does the Jewish faith, as I repeat, every faith in the Western World, and I will bet anything that the Islamic faith as practiced in modern medicine in the hospitals throughout all the major cities in the Mideast and the Far East, that they also understand that ectopic pregnancy has nothing to do with aborting or killing a child in the womb, although it does kill a living fetus, a potential human being. The primary cause or the primary purpose is to save the life of the mother by removing this organ.

Of course, there is not a person in this House, and yet some people took to the well, some of our female Members, and accused this Member of a belief that I have never held to, since I first learned what this was, probably sometime early in high school.

Exhibit B, I would like to show the handout that was, first of all, I think in fairness I should read the entire letter from President Bush, because one Member on our side of the switch 30 came to me and said, "If only I had known President Bush was going to veto this and how he felt, I would have voted with you. I do not want anybody criticizing this gentleman from Florida." He is angry at his staff. It is not his staff's fault. They did not have the television on at the very beginning of the debate when I read the whole letter.

Let me go back to the letter to my friend, "August 2, the White House, Washington:"

DEAR JULIAN: The House soon will consider the District of Columbia appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990. If the bill presented to me permits the use of appropriated funds to pay for abortions other than those where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term, I will veto it.

I urge the Congress to vote to protect the lives of America's unborn children.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH.

That 30, particularly the 5 Republicans who switched, if they had known that George Bush was urging them to vote to protect the lives of America's unborn children, they would have been with me, but during the confusion of the vote, and we are just 2 or 3 days, well, it was 2 days ago, 2 days away from the conclusion of this House, so things are rushed, but better rush now than Christmas season or on the eve of October 1 when the new fiscal year begins, but there was confusion. Here is exhibit B. This is the passout that was passed out at both doors, and the verbal explanation that went with it was even more misleading. I will not say deceitful any longer, because after listening to three of my colleagues compound their errors and continue this confusion, maybe the conclusion is that they do not have it right. So I am going to explain the langauge carefully, because we will revisit this issue.

The gentleman from Oregon brought it up in a 1-minute speech yesterday, because he thought we were going to revisit it yesterday when the bill came up for final passage, the D.C. appropriation bill. We will revisit it for sure when President Bush, an honorable man, fulfills his promise to veto the D.C. appropriations as he did in that letter.

Back to exhibit B, let us just take the one line on the bottom: "Disallows contraception." The Dornan language that I want in the bill, or the net result of passing the way it was, has nothing to do with contraception, and Mr. DIXON carefully explained this during the debate, and I will put it in his own words. He said, "If the committee language goes through, the District is allowed to distribute contraceptive devices." What he did not say, and I do not see why he should have to say it, but if they do not want to, that is their right, too. They can do it or not do it.

Year before last, or this year, with the Dornan langauge, with the life-of-the-mother exception in it, they can or cannot pass out birth control devices.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORNAN of California. I will yield when I am through with this explanation. I tried to rush over to get you folks during that thing, and it would have been fascinating, but let me get this fulsome explanation out.

Language in the bill, whether it is in or not, and right now at this moment it is in before it goes to conference and before Bush vetoes it, that is superfluous language. It does not mean anything. That is why I took exception with the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] on the "Today" show this morning against the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] on our side leaving out two or three key words at the beginning.

The gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] said that if the Dornan language goes through, as it did a year ago, the bill remains silent on birth control. The major bottom line is at this moment with Dornan language law, the District can or cannot as it wishes pass out birth control devices.

Here are the words in the bill where I got bad parliamentary advice. I could have drawn a line above it and just forgotten it and left that as the committee's problem. They put it in for boilerplate, or if I wanted to be a little paranoid, they put it in to cause confusion at the doors when the vote came up. I do not think the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] would do that. I choose to think it is just boilerplate.

Here is what it says: "My intent is to take out one word only in the committee bill, 'Federal' and then add 'the life of the mother.'" I was not allowed to do that last year or this year.

As a matter of fact, I have been doing this for over a decade when I won with that language in my freshman year, August 1989; abortions were cutoff with our defense dollars the next month in the fall of 1978, and 11 years later, to this month, that Dornan amendment stays public law, no military appropriated funds can ever go for an abortion for a high-ranking officer or a sergeant's girlfriend or their wife or a stranger or somebody they got onto the base. Nobody gets an abortion in a military hospital, although they drag their feet on some cases for a year or two, and finally the head of all chaplains came down on them, and finally the Pentagon tightened it up the way the House passed it. That language has existed for 11 years with the life of the mother.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORNAN of California. No, it will take me quite a while to come back to this point here.

I tried over and over on D.C. The reason I used the word "gagged" or that the House is "mugged"; we did a special order here for hours that the whole House is mugged on minority rights, and what we wanted to get through with our amendment.

Where is the balanced-budget amendment? Every Member in this Chamber knows, and I will bet anybody $1,000 that if you put in Bush's language, my President's, and I respect his opinion, life of the mother, rape and incest, we win by probably 290 to 300 votes.

The gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] voted, as did the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN], as did the gentlewoman from my State of California [Mrs. BOXER], they all voted for the Health and Human Services and Labor bill earlier that same morning 2 days ago, and that bill went through 365 to 58.

The 58 people, including myself, were all conservatives who were voting against it for budgetary reasons.

But for the record, for the truth here, these three people who just took out a point of personal privilege, they all voted for the Dornan-Smith, or to give credit to its author, the Hyde language which does not have rape or incest, which is in the Health and Human Services bill that my good friend, HENRY HYDE, got through on this House floor in his freshman term, 2 years before I cut off abortions in the military. That was about 30,000 abortions a year. He cut off 10 times that, 300,000 to 400,000 federally funded abortions a year, HENRY HYDE of Illinois cut off in 1976, and that has been the law to this date, without rape or incest exceptions, only the life of the mother. That is the law, and these three Members just voted for it.

Mr. AUCOIN. Will the gentleman yield? He mentioned my voting record. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORNAN of California. I will not yield.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Parlimentary inquiry.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I am not going to yield. Take notes, the two of you where I misstate facts.

Hyde, law 11 years, life of the mother, you all voted for it day before yesterday.

Mr. AUCOIN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Next point, Dornan defense law. I do not know whether you voted for that. Law for 11 years, excuse me, Hyde was 13 years, Dornan, District of Columbia, life-of-the-mother exception, law, 1 year.

But now let me come to the point.

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman will yield I will get time and yield to him.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Parliamentary inquiry, Madam Speaker.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Yes.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Madam Speaker, must the gentlewoman from Colorado and the gentleman from Oregon refer to the gentleman from California as a gentleman if he is not being a gentleman?

Mr. DORNAN of California. No, I will answer that. You can call him the Member from California. But then my gentlemanliness will return shortly.

Now let me come to the real point of contention here, and I am going to tell you what I said earlier, because the gentleman from Oregon was not on the floor. When I watched their point of personal privilege, which by the way may not have been precisely accurate, when I tried to get a point of personal privilege against Mr. COELHO a few years ago, and got it, I was informed by the Parliamentarian that it had to be in writing, in your districts, before you could prove harm, that it cannot involve, that it cannot involve a Dear Colleague letter or anything that is said on the House floor as long as somebody's integrity is not impugned.

Now here is the point, the main point of contention, or maybe it is still continuing confusion because the propaganda still goes out. Let me go from one Member back up to Mr. AUCOIN. Mrs. BOXER, my good friend said on the floor, in the well, the Dornan amendment will not allow you to pass out birth control pills in the District.

Wrong. They are passed out now under the Dornan language. I have no desire to cut that off. To me that is a personal issue, and that is not even in the language of the bill that Mr. AUCOIN took exception to.

There was a statement in the RECORD by the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER], and again it confused this issue. So let us come to Mr. AUCOIN, who has been more precise on the language, and did question me when I was in the well, and I yielded to him.

Mr. AUCOIN. I hope the gentleman will yield as he has mentioned me again.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I will eventually.

This was so annoying that at that moment, because I had not precisely heard what Mr. DIXON said, that the Dornan bill is silent on the issue of birth control, and they are being passed out now under my language, and will continue to be if it goes through with life of the mother, or if in committee we get rolled on rape or incest. That is my President hero's words, and I am not going to get up tight. I will take that loss, not as the spoiled person that you claim.

What annoys me is your words in the first minute yesterday where you, threatened is too strong a word, where you advised the 30 Members who flipflopped that now that they are prochoice they had better not go back in a 24-hour period, that the women of America will not take kindly to it, and the fact is that not one of the 30 has become prochoice, they are all still prolife.

Mr. AUCOIN. Will the gentleman yield now? He has mentioned my name for a third time.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Not now, that it is my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York). The gentleman from California controls the time.

Mr. DORNAN of California. The point here is, here are the words in the bill, all I want to do is strike out the word "Federal," and here is the effect of striking out the word "Federal," my bill, which is law this moment, which says, "None of the funds provided in this Act shall be used to perform an abortion except to save the life of the mother." That is the goal I am driving for. Every Member of this House who is not confused knows that, and 206 prolifers in this House made the most difficult vote of their life on this issue because of the way it was improperly characterized by the opposition.

Now to get back to this, I have to strike the word "Federal," which was put in, and then the committee put in a whole bunch of language. I was told by the Parliamentarians that if I strike the word "Federal," which they added back in, which means, as we know, deceptively that they will put the Federal funds in one bank account and start killing babies again October 1 with the tax-raised funds in the district, and that is going to be a whole, OK deal, and we have seen that deception in days gone by with planned parenthood operations where they pass out literature in the front room, and have an abortuary in the back room. To take out "Federal," I am told by the Parliamentarian, I must strike all of these words, "except where the life of the mother would be in danger if the fetus were carried to term." I do not want to strike, I want it in, and everybody in the Chamber who listened to the debate knows it. We will get it back in in conference after Bush vetoes the bill. Two, "or except for such medical purposes necessary for the victims of rape or incest, when such rape or incest has been reported promptly." Prolifers got that prompt reporting language in there. That has been off and on in some bills in this House. It does not tear me up, because this is one of the most painful things in this country, to have a woman violated, and then to find herself pregnant. I know the pain of that. God forbid it should happen to anybody in my family.

But I will tell you something, Geraldo Rivera takes a bum rap in this country by elite, sophisticated critics still trying to punish him for his show on Satanism, which was way before the Satanic slaughters at Matamoros. But he did a show this very week with four mothers who had been raped and had their children, and I can only tell you the words "virtuous heroism" came to mind. Whether you can legislate virtue or heroism I do not know. That issue will be in doubt. My President that I admire, I consider him to be a hero of mine, disagrees with me, but if those words are in or out, that is a battle to be fought.

Mr. AUCOIN. In fairness, will the gentleman please yield?

Mr. DORNAN of California. I am reading legal law. What we are trying to do is make law, to kill my Dornan law. Now it says, next line, and that is where I should have drawn the line, taken my lumps, taken out rape and incest and let you try and put that back in conference, let everybody know, as they knew last year when rape and incest and life of the mother was out that I would fight to get it back in conference, and did that, and everybody in the Senate kept their promises that they would get life of the mother back in. I gave assurances on the floor of HENRY HYDE, recovering from surgery, and of Mr. NICKLES and Mr. HUMPHREY, who share this title with me, it is not just the Dornan amendment, it is the Dornan, Humphrey, Nickles amendment, and now here comes the killer, where you thought you got me.

Mr. AUCOIN. Who is the gentleman referring to now?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Nobody in general, all of those who listened to the other side of the debate.

Mr. SCHROEDER. The gentleman is not calling us killers or is he calling us killers?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Madam Speaker, I did not hear that. I tried not to hear it. I will continue.

There is a period here. I am told to draw your period right there, take your lumps on rape, incest, life of the mother, and win that in conference, and it will be identical to last year's vote.

This sentence was added, brand new to the language, and in a perverse way, I congratulate the smoke screen that they created. New sentence, "Nor, nor are payments prohibited." not authorized or asked to be spent, "nor are payments prohibited for drugs or devices to prevent implantation of the fertilized ovum or for procedures for the termination of an ectopic pregnancy." I do not mind the last one at all, but the middle one and the last one are an advisory, it is boilerplate because nobody is stopping them from doing that or not doing that now, and that is why JULIAN DIXON honorably said, my good friend, the Dornan amendment is silent on this birth control stuff, because whether those words are in there or not in there, it does not matter.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Madam Speaker, now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORNAN of California. The District of Columbia will do it or not do it as it chooses.

Mr. AUCOIN. Will the gentleman yield at that point for two questions right there, in fairness?

Mr. DORNAN of California. I am getting closer.

So what we have is exhibit A, the President's letter; exhibit 2, "disallows contraception." Wrong; if not deceitful, confusing and stupid.

□ 1500

It is not what is in my language or would have been the intent if the Dornan language had stayed in and it will not be in when the President vetoes it when we come to appropriations.

Now listen to this, I will tell you what I will do.

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORNAN. I resist your blandishments. I will tell you what I will do. I will yield to you when I read Mr. CHRIS SMITH's analysis which he did not have time to do with you in worthy debate on the Today Show today, entitled "Let's Get the Record Straight." Please do not bring up rule 18 or I will skip-read and we will go through this, 4 points, very simply.

Point 1, the Dornan amendment has no effect on contraceptives. On Wednesday during the rollcall vote on the Dornan amendment to the D.C. appropriations bill, Members opposed to the amendment circulated a handout which stated that the Dornan amendment disallows contraception. Many Members were misled by this gross misrepresentation. In fact, approval of the Dornan amendment is necessarily to simply preserve the pro-life policy enacted into law last year, the Dornan-Humphrey-Nickles law has been in effect since October last year and it has no effect whatsoever on contraception.

The current law reads, and here it is, my colleagues, "None of the funds contained in this act shall be used to perform abortions except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term." This is the same language as the Hyde amendment to the Labor-HHS bill, passed that same day 365–58. Under both Hyde and Dornan law congressionally appropriated funds continue to pay for all contraceptives, IUD, condoms, sperms, jellies, jams, et cetera, the works, folks. The only thing prohibited is funding for abortion.

Thus the Dornan amendment was grossly distorted by its opponents. And I will add as the debate goes on they were lost in self-inflicted confusion, they knew not what they did.

No. 2—I may forgive you yet—No. 2, the Dornan amendment has no effect on emergency treatment for rape victims. Why would I ever consider doing that? The language of the current Dornan law is the same as that of the Hyde amendment which governs the Federal Medicare Program. Neither amendment prohibits emergency treatment for rape victims, for example, high-estrogen morning-after pills taken within 72 hours of a sexual assault are always effective and are fundable under both Hyde and Dornan amendments.

I wish you folks would memorize that last one.

Three, and I only have two to go. The final version of the Dornan amendment will contain the same life-of-the-mother exception as the Hyde amendment. On Wednesday pro-life caucus chair CHRIS SMITH, and the co-chair is ALAN MOLLOHAN, made two attempts to include the standard life-of-the-mother exception in the Dornan amendment. However, Chairman DIXON twice blocked these moves by raising the threat of a point of order or a point of order that such exception violates the House rules against legislating on an appropriation bill.

Now the effect of that is that my friend JULIAN DIXON, to deny this life-of-the-mother language, I know he will accept that as a last-stand resort for his position; he did in conference last year. He is trying to win as chairman of this committee, he is trying to have his way, which is proper. But he did it in an honest, upfront way. Incredibly, CHRIS and the pro-life caucus goes on, incredibly opponents of the Dornan amendment then attacked the Dornan amendment for lacking the life-of-the-mother exception which they themselves had blocked. A little bit of the kind of tyranny of the majority here. And that is why I say certainly not only were 30 Members mugged, well, maybe not Mr. DURBIN, the whole House was mugged. Incredibly I read that, this is a familiar pro-abortion tactic which has been used in the past against the Hyde amendment and other pro-life amendments.

I saw this film that you people are pushing on the Hill. As we have pushed "Silent Scream" and "Loss of Reason," you push "Abortion for Survival," produced by Eleanor Smeal, and I do not know who all paid for that, but you have got a doctor in there convicted in Massachusetts of manslaughter.

In that film, which acts like every abortion is a tidy little matter of a pink and red tissue about 2 inches across. That is not true. The heart starts beating at 8 to 10 weeks. They show a little mass of protoplasm and say that is all there is to abortion; it is nothing. That film, in that film, one doctor from USC says we are opposed to sexuality. Gee, I hate that charge. My wife knows that is not true.

Then it says we are all into birth control, furthering the deception that went on here, the deception is embodied in the body of edited film of 30 minutes that I will bet they spent 400 hours editing that down so that every little nuance could get every type of blue smoke and mirrors involved in this debate to try to broaden your constituency because you know if you had an up or down vote in this House on life of the mother, we would win by 40, if you have it with rape and incest we would win by, the vote is over 300.

So here is the final line of point 3, this familiar tactic: It has been used in the past, it will be used again. The life-of-the-mother exception will always be restored, that is in capital letters, in the conference committee, and it will always be submitted on the floor by every pro-lifer that I know on both sides of the aisle, including the 50 who wrote your party chairman Ron Brown and said get this abortion language out of our platform before you drive away every ethnic in this country who are blue-collar, grass-roots laboring Democrat classes. You already know that Dukakis lost the Polish. I can speak for the Irish Catholic vote even if they are not Republicans.

You drive thousands of them away when you put this killing amendment in your party platform. That is why 50 of you want it out and why a lot more would not sign the letter but want it out.

The life of the mother would always be restored as it has been since 1976 under our, pray God, HENRY HYDE. HENRY, I know you are listening. Please come back here, we need you.

Number 4, the language supported by Chairman DIXON would result in a restoration of tax-funded abortion on demand in DC. Fortunately, President Bush has already sent this letter which I have talked about to veto the appropriations and unless it continues the current law, that is the prohibition of abortions except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term.

Now my staff occasionally follows the proceedings of this House and because of this exegesis of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that not everybody is fair on yielding when they have the microphone, I am going to break a promise to everybody on my staff. My gentlemanly honor has been questioned, so I will rise to my 6 foot 1 inch and yield to the gentlelady first and maybe we can end the confusion. Sorry, staff, I happily yield to my friend from Colorado, the distinguished lady.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I thank the gentleman from California for yielding. And I want to say to the gentleman from California, I think maybe you missed the point of our personal privilege. I think that you said exactly what happened vis-a-vis the language that you took language out that had not been there before. We pointed that out at the door by showing people what was in the bill and had bracketed what the Dornan amendment would take out of the bill.

Now as a lawyer it seems to me the courts could go two ways. Yes, the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] said that the Dornan amendment, if it happened, if it had passed, it would be silent on family planning because it would strike the provision on family planning. That is correct.

But a court could say because it was now in the bill and Congress acted to take it out of the bill, it could even mean; it was silent and therefore the District could do anything; or it is very conceivable the courts could also say that Congress did not want them to do that either.

Now that——

Mr. DORNAN of California. I want to reclaim 10 seconds of my time and I will yield right back to you to keep this in discourse. Would the lady please listen to the words. Nor are the—this is where Mr. AUCOIN erred, he left out "nor" or "are" and he left out "prohibited." Nor, are, and prohibited, and he said yesterday on the floor payments for drugs or devices to prevent implantation. I want to take that out. It says, "Nor are payments prohibited for drugs." That is an advisory, it could go either way. It means nothing.

I yield back.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Then why did the gentleman take it out? I mean the gentleman's amendment took it out. So the question is why did the Congress vote to take it out, had we voted for your bill?

Mr. DORNAN of California. I reclaim my time for only 10 more seconds. I do not think you were on the floor when I said that the House Parliamentarian told me I had to keep it in. I am not accusing anybody any longer that they put it in deliberately although the suspicion is there to do what the film "Abortion for Survival" does and try to drag us into a birth control debate which expands your base across this country. But when you leave it out, your base begins to collapse. And so I was advised to take it out to try to get to where we were last year, and that is a vote on the Dornan amendment to go to committee, and what it did was it strung out people who have not come over to your side, you know that. These 30 people, at least 27—I talked to about 15—are angry that pro-lifers think that because of the Webster decision that they have deserted a lifelong career of pro-life and have become pro-choice.

Your majority leader, DICK GEPHARDT, voted for this terribly restricted tough language because of the parliamentary games here. I am proud of DICK that he stood strong as your leader on this.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Will the gentleman yield back?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Yes, I yield back.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. You keep saying that the other people are angry. But you are the one that appears to be angry.

□ 1510

The point of personal privilege that we made and that the Parliamentarian sustained is that the gentleman was accusing Members of being deceitful, willful, and all sorts of things. The gentleman is also alleging we are pushing a film that I have never heard of before or seen. The gentleman is expanding this thing way beyond the issue, taking it every which way he can—defense bills, HHS bills. We are focusing on what happened that day.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I have to reclaim my time. It is not taking far afield to point out that the gentlewoman voted for the defense bill and the Health and Human Services appropriations bill with Hyde-Dornan language in, life of the mother, no abortion.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. If the gentleman will yield further, there was no Hyde-Dornan language in this bill because the gentlemen was striking "life of the mother, rape and incest." That is a very different picture. The gentleman is trying to portray others as doing something inconsistent. We were not.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I reclaim my time. Is the gentlewoman so sure? A lot of Members are not, including the 30 who flip-flopped for the first time in years around here. Is she so sure, without the disallowed contraception and the confusing message to some of the freshman Members, that this was a final act locked in, is she so sure after the President vetoes this, that the gentlewoman is going to prevail again, the 30 pro-lifers will come over to the pro-choice side, pro-abortion side, and start the killing again on October 1?

Mrs. SCHROEDER. If the gentleman will continue to yield, please stop using such loaded words. If we could all have joined hands and worked on better family planning 10 years ago we would not be here.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I have to reclaim my time for a point. A play has been sent in from the bench that birth control devices are funded right now under title 10. We all know that. That battle goes on.

If the gentlewoman would not try to do what this film, that you never heard of, although it was sponsored a week ago by the pro-abortion caucus on the Hill. I don't know what you call yourselves. Maybe the gentlewoman is not a Member. The name "Abortion for Survival," again trying to confuse birth control and human sexuality, and whether it is for fun or for just procreation, to mix all this up in this debate. Of course, we can get together here on how to help little children. I was willing to debate Mr. GONZALEZ' amendment.

Mr. AUCOIN. If the gentleman will yield, is the gentleman ready to debate me or my question?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Is the gentlewoman ready for me to yield? She is not through with me yet.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. The gentlewoman would want to make it perfectly clear what we are talking about. I take it the gentleman from California was very upset there was language in the bill this time on family planning?

Mr. DORNAN of California. No; it did not upset me at all.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. If the gentleman will continue to yield, the gentleman still struck it.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I reclaim my time. I did not care about that language. But the House Parliamentarian told me that for my amendment to be in order I had to strike the language.

I do not now believe that I had to. It could not be law. It is an advisory. It says to the District, "You can or can't do that, as you can do right now."

Mrs. SCHROEDER. If the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman still struck it out. Second, the Congressional Research Service did not interpret what we do here. Courts do. What we were saying is that could be interpreted either way. If the gentleman did not care about the language, why did the gentleman not just leave it out? The gentleman is making a point.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I reclaim my time. The gentlewoman is being fair, and I am going back to her and being fair. I do not have to be fair because I can reclaim my time whenever I feel like it.

The issue was not debated that way on the House floor. The gentlewoman's pal and mine, the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER], took that well and said that the Dornan amendment disallows birth control pills. This says nothing about birth control pills.

Of course, without this, and remember, we are going to revisit this next year, and one thing on this word "killing," I have to take exception to someone not getting the use of the word because I try, I think I slipped twice in 12 years and used the emotion-packed word "murder." Murder, I was taught in grade school by the good sisters, takes place in someone's head. If a person thinks they are murdering people, even in a war, if a person thinks the war is unjust and a person is willing, that person is murdering. If a person thinks they are defending a cause of their country, they are not. That takes place in someone's head, but the word "killing" look, if I am in your office visiting with you, PATRICIA SCHROEDER, and a guy comes around and he is close to me, you say, "Kill that guy," I killed it. We are trying to find a way to kill the AIDS virus, a virus that splits when you try to kill it. People kill when they eat. We have slaughter houses to get McDonald hamburgers here. We kill a fetus. It is not an appendicitis attack. It is a living embryo, then a fetus, then a baby that lives outside the womb.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. If the gentleman will further yield. One of the big difficulties we have, as the gentleman knows, many people in the antiabortion groups do not believe in family planning. Some believe in family planning and some believe only in the rhythm system which is not totally accurate.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I reclaim my time, I reclaim my time.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. If the gentleman will continue to yield, what we are really talking about is when your language struck that out of the bill, a lot of people thought courts could go either way on that issue. We then handed it out. It was your language, what the gentleman struck.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I reclaim my time. That is wrong.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. If the gentleman will continue to yield, that is not what I handed out. I handed out a blue sheet of paper with what the gentleman struck. For the gentleman to call me deceitful or saying we are willfully trying to lead people astray, or calling Members muggers.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I reclaim my time. Calling you muggers, first of all, the gentlewoman knows in this House there are special orders that go on all week long where the minority over and over makes the point, and we feel it in a very sincere, heartfelt way, we are mugged over here all the time. There is nothing at all that is cruel about that word. We get mugged regularly. We were mugged by the long count where I watched House employees drag a Member from Texas down the aisle and have him change a whole vote that was significant. So do not get hung up on the mugging.

On the killing thing, I am sorry. When there is a Day's Inn, and I hate to use a commercial name, but it is true, a Day's Inn, a national franchise, has an inn, and I will not mention the State because I have it mixed up between two States in the middle of the country, that allows a doctor to put women in there, in their ninth month of pregnancy, eighth month, seventh month, and performs a hysterotomy to take out a live baby and kill it, when that goes on, the gentlewoman, yourself, Mrs. SCHROEDER, knows there has not been one doctor, including the abortion back alley pigs that the people talk about in this debate who were killing people before 1974, and it was made legal, and put their greasy shingle and put it out on Main Street and continued to butcher people, not one has been convicted in 16 years. The shame of the AMA and all of the doctors now in the majority that this should continue this level of killing 1½ million babies a year.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is missing my point. Many Members feel very strongly that we have not made the proper onslaught onto family planning that we should. That many people in America are having to use this same system Cleopatra used because they have not got safe, available, user friendly, truthworthy contraceptions that will work. So if we had, we really think that abortions would be a thing of the past and should be a thing of the past. The thing that frightened Members about the gentleman's amendment was the expansiveness and how that might be interpreted in the District of Columbia.

Now, that is what we pointed out. The gentleman is saying he could have gone either way.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I reclaim my time. The Parliamentarian told me, "If you don't take this meaningless language that starts with 'nor are payments prohibited' I would be subject to a point of order," and the whole point of the mugging thing here is why am I subject to a point of order? Why when the Dornan language is law, why am I not entitled to vote, get a vote up or down on existing Dornan language so that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KANJORSKI], so that any Member in this House can repeat their vote of last year and keep, I am sorry, the "killing" held to a low minimum in the District of Columbia where we all know there are more abortions than live births for 14 unbroken years.

□ 1520

When we get the statistical act extract when this fiscal year ends of September 30, I hope and I pray to God that because of my amendment, with the help of HENRY HYDE and CHRIS

SMITH and ALAN MOLLOHAN and JOHN LAFALCE and Mr. NICKLES, and some Democratic pro-lifers in the other body, Mr. HUMPHREY, I hope that for the first time in 15 years, births in this District, most of them black children, will far outweigh the genocide of black babies in their mothers' wombs in this, the Federal Capital of the freest Nation in the world.

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield one more time?

Mr. DORNAN of California. I must be fair. All right, just one time, I yield to the gentlewoman from Colorado.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. I just want to say one final thing. I am pleased to hear the gentleman say he is for family planning. I hope he joins us and helps us expand that idea, because we would like to make all of this moot. I do not know what the Parliamentarian told the gentleman; I only know that we were very concerned when we saw the expansiveness of the gentleman's language, and I think that is why so many Members were concerned. We really believe we should be out there fighting for family planning, and I hope the gentleman joins us. I hope the gentleman moves in that direction. I was just very, very sad to see your thinking that if anyone rose up and helped to defeat your amendment, you ought to go out and kick their heads like a soccer ball.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I would not do that to the gentlewoman.

Madam Speaker, how much time do I have left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York). The gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Madam Speaker, I would never do that to the gentlewoman.

Now, time is relative. If we had 17 1-minutes here we could get a lot of work done. Let me just comment on family planning.

I used family planning when I was a young husband. I had 5 children before my 27th birthday, and thank God they were all healthy and my wife never had any miscarriages, although she had long labors, 28 hours, 26 hours, 17 hours, and it stayed that way until the end.

My wife and I used the rhythm method of family planning. Yes, I am intelligent enough to follow a chart, and, yes, I can hum a pretty good tune, and it worked for us. But we did want a lot of children. We wanted 7, 8, 9, or 10 if God would give us that. We got five, and now we have seven grandchildren.

But I am not going to force that on anyone else. It has always been my concept on this whole issue of birth control, although, yes, there is a division when it comes to an abortificient—the gentleman I am about to yield to had a little problem pronouncing that during that point of personal privilege, because I guess he does not like the word, "abort," at the beginning of "abortificient." But he will get it right the next go around.

Let me just say this: I know the gentlewoman in her law training, maybe in her logic classes of epistemology or ontology, the thought of the lesser evil, the very nature of the horns of a dilemma. Every little nun or great religious scholar who ever taught me said, "When you are presented with the temptation to take human life"—yes, they used the word, "kill," and in some cases, with the properly formed conscience, "murder"—or "murder human life, when you are presented with that evil, far better that earlier in the process you had opted for what other people would call a lesser offense, being that you are mortal, in some cases to prevent conception, particularly if you are unmarried or you are in a situation where you know that you have a problem with decisions of this sort, better to opt for some form of family planning than to be put in a position where you know you are going to succumb under societal pressures to abort a living child in the womb."

In conclusion, what I say is that I do not think that is ever going to come up in a vote on the House floor. The last State that I know that had laws against any kind of birth control was Connecticut and that ended 20 or 30 years ago.

What I said on this crippled, weird Ted Turner debate down there in Atlanta on Bastille Day, I said to Eleanor Smeal and the intelligent and articulate Fay Wattleton, whose mother in Atlanta is pro-life—Fay admitted that to me—I said to the two of them, "Look, I don't know anybody on Capitol Hill, from a hundred Senators, Mr. QUAYLE; the President of the free world, the United States of America, or anybody in this Chamber who has any legislation that involves birth control pills," which we know have caused a lot of medical problems, but that is for others to be concerned about; that is for Mr. WAXMAN in his Health Subcommittee to deal with. I said, "I don't know of anybody here who has exception." I said that, except when it gets into the area of the RU-486 bill, the French pill, which I choose to call the "death pill," which has so many medical side effects that are unknown. We do not want another thalidomide baby problem, which we did not have in the United States because our Food and Drug Administration in the main is more careful.

We are now down to about 14 1-minutes left here. I thank the gentlewoman from Colorado. I never would kick her like a soccer ball. I think she is one of the more energetic Members of this House and one of the most sincere. She can be a tough adversary. When she uses her velvet sledgehammer of gentleleness is when she is most deadly.

All I am going to say is that you were confused, and I understand that. But I am with you. Family planning is a conscience issue, like divorce. I am against divorce.

Do you know what is going to happen to us in the year? We are going to have more people on their second marriages than their first. I do not care about those people on their second marriages. What we all care about is the children, because the evidence is now coming out that divorce absolutely rips children.

But that is a matter of personal conscience. I do not want anything here to be involved that is of a legal nature on this floor, but I feel about divorce the same way as I feel about birth control

Now I will yield to TOM or TIM. I never can get the identical twins separated. And let me say that you ought to get on this DICK DURBIN, because you are using this home rule thing. When you have got the constitutional power to cut off killing, as we did October 1, Mr. DURBIN, then by gosh, we ought to keep it cut off. I am sure you do not want to answer to the pro-lifers of your pro-life State. You ought to come to California, a pro-death State, DICK, what they are going to ask you is: "Why do you let the killing exist when constitutionally you can cut off smoking, thank God, in an airplane so we all live a lot longer? You have the power to cut off abortions in your State."

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Durbin just got on the floor. I have been sitting here for 30 minutes waiting for the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. DORNAN of Califorina. I know. I have tried to be gentlemanly.

Let me explain it to my distinguished colleague from north of me, from the State where they say, "visit us and then get out of here."

Mr. AUCOIN. That applies to some Californians, not all.

Mr. DORNAN of California. All right. Not to me certainly.

Mr. AUCOIN. Would the gentleman allow me to speak for, let us say, 1 minute and 20 seconds without interrupting me?

Mr. DORNAN of California. I yield the gentleman 1 minute and 30 seconds. the clock has started.

Mr. AUCOIN. I appreciate that.

Let us get back to what the point of personal privilege was all about. The gentlewoman from California [Mrs. SCHROEDER] and myself took a point of personal privilege this morning because of the letter the gentleman wrote. On all the options the gentleman is mentioning, the question of contraception and abortion and all the rest, we will debate that again, and I concede that this Congress is not a pro-choice Congress. But for the first time, on August 2, a victory was scored by the pro-choice forces on the Dornan amendment. We defeated the Dornan amendment.

But let us leave that aside, because we are going to have lots of chances to debate the substance of that question many times again. And let me say something more. The voters are going to watch and they are going to choose candidates on that issue the next time, and I predict we are going to see a whole different case of characters here.

What we are here today to talk about—and I ask that the gentleman pay attention to this——

Mr. DORNAN of California. Oh, I am paying attention. I just saw Mr. SLATTERY come out on the floor.

Mr. AUCOIN. Does this come out of my time?

Mr. DORNAN of California. That does not come out of the time, no. You have 35 seconds left.

Mr. AUCOIN. What we are here talking about today is the fact of whether the gentleman's colleagues, as he stated in his letter, were blatantly deceitful in representing his amendment.

If I run over 1 minute and 30 seconds, I hope the gentleman will allow me more time to finish up my thought, because, believe me, I will seek time and let him have as much as he wants.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Ask and ye shall receive.

Mr. AuCOIN. I simply want to have this on the record.

He said that we were blatantly deceitful. He said I was blatantly deceitful, and I have to take a point of personal privilege on that, because that is impugning my motives.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Your time is up.

I yield the gentleman on additional 30 seconds.

Mr. AuCOIN. I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

If the gentleman will go back in his memory to the debate on the House floor of August 2 when he was offering his amendment, I asked him to yield to me on three different occasions, and he did, and I compliment the gentlemen for that. I have a copy of the RECORD in my hand. This is page 4928, August 2, 1989. I gave the gentleman a copy of it.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I yield an extra minute. We are going to reenact that scene.

Mr. AuCOIN. I appreciate the gentleman's giving me additional time.

I asked the gentleman this question on the conception language, and I am quoting from the RECORD. I said, "The way I read that, the gentleman strikes funding for contraceptive devices."

That is how I read it. Then I continued: So is it then true that Members in voting for his amendment would be making a personal record that they oppose funding of contraceptive devices? Is that not correct?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Read my fulsome words, please, sir.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. DORNAN of California said: "May I answer with a slight amplification? Technically, again the gentleman is correct, except there is a division in the minds of what I believe a majority in this House"—and then he goes on and gets off the point of whether or not he felt that funding for abortions would be——

Mr. DORNAN of California. I reclaim my time. I ask the gentleman to be patient. I am not cutting you off. I think now at this point, because we are getting to relative history and you have accurately reflected my words——

Mr. AuCOIN. I was going by the gentleman's words.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Do not interupt.

Mr. AuCOIN. I will get my own time.

Mr. DORNAN of California. What we are now going to do in reliving history is this: The gentleman is accurate to that point. Later I decided that was all a clever plan, and then maybe it was not, so we could throw the "Dear Colleague" in the ashcan. I thought it was a plan to confuse this issue, just as the film on survival or on birth control was, and I should have repeated Mr. DIXON's words that are silent on that. I think Mrs. SCHROEDER is wrong. Any court of law worthy of having the scales of justice over the front door would say it is advisory.

Mr. AUCOIN. The gentleman had yielded to me, I thought.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Wait a minute. Let me finish. I am now going to pretend you just asked me the question, and here is the answer I should have given you, and then you would not have been confused and our staffs would not have thought there was deceit here.

Starting from the period or before the word, "nor," these are meaningless words, because it is inadvisory. It does not say they must spend money for abortion, or it is not taking away their option, and they have the right not to. That is the way it exists today under Dornan language, and that is irrelevant. Then I would have brought a steely gaze upon the gentleman from Oregon, and then I would have said: "Dear Sir: Don't confuse this issue of birth control. Give me the life of the mother. You express that right now. Hold your chairman in obeyance so we don't get a point of order." And then, according you your own analysis, the pro-life House would have receive the voters of Mr. SLATTERY, Mr. KANJORSKI, and maybe Mr. DURBIN—at least, if not on this vote, later he would vote if the full language was in from the committee. If he helped me on two dastardly nights last September, he might vote that way again.

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Yes.

Mr. AUCOIN. Will the gentleman let me complete my thought as he yields to me?

Mr. DORNAN of California. How much time will that take?

Mr. AUCOIN. I say about 45 minutes.

Mr. DORNAN of California. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] has it.

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] yielding.

If the gentleman now concedes that he gave an answer in response to my question when I asked for the benefit of the membership what the effect of his amendment was, when he concedes that he gave an improper answer, when he concedes he should have said something else, why then does he send a dear-colleague letter when I took his analysis on faith, I took his description and debated on the merits of that? Why does he then accuse me of a smokescreen and being blatantly deceitful?

Madam Speaker, that is why I took a point of personal privilege, and I think the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] should really be careful about slinging around words like that when he has lost the first antiabortion amendment in 10 years on the floor of this House.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Reclaiming my time, Madam Speaker, last year was the first one I won, for heaven's sake, in 10 years on D.C.

Mr. AUCOIN. The gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] is not going to win many again, I will tell him that.

Mr. DORNAN of California. What the gentleman knows, and he said this; he can read this Congress from that first vote, that with this terribly narrowed-down, rough language causing problems for prolifers we still got 206 votes. Does the gentleman know—wait, wait, wait. I say to the gentleman from Oregon, "Now, come on, LES. Don't do that."

I ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN], "Do you know how many of the switchbacks we need when HENRY HYDE comes back tan, rested, and ready for combat in September?"

That is one. We only need 6 of the 30 flipfloppers—6. We can write off all the freshmen, and that broke in the favor of the gentleman from Oregon, and I say this in a fencing term, "en garde," for myself, that of the six defeated Members, the lowest in the history of the Nation in two centuries, two Democrats, four Republicans, by a roll of the dice, because the issue never came up from what I can tell in any other campaigns.

Mac Sweeney of Texas was replaced by a fighting Irishman and prolifer, Mr. LAUGHLIN, and the other five, the Democrat, FREDDIE ST GERMAIN, who was always a loyal, consistent prolifer. JOE DIOGUARDI, MAC SWEENEY we lost. There were perceived real scandals in those cases. Jack Davis lost to a fellow colleague by less than a thousand votes who served in the Senate of Illinois with him.

I say to the gentleman, "5 you get; 1 we get. That narrows a little bit, but of the 30 flipfloppers we are going to get back surely 6, and the battle is on again."

Let me tell the gentleman what he——

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] answer my question?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Wait a minute. I yield to the gentleman.

Give me the question.

Mr. AUCOIN. The question I asked; I wish the gentleman would answer it, is, if the gentleman has stated, as he just stated moments ago——

Mr. DORNAN of California. I already know the question. I take back my time.

Mr. AUCOIN. Then he should have said something else.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Madam Speaker, I take back my time.

Mr. AUCOIN. Why does the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] claim that I am being blatantly deceitful when I go on the basis of his description of his amendment?

Mr. DORNAN of California. I ask the gentleman, Don't make me turn to the Chair for disciplinary help. I will answer you.

Madam Speaker, I believe the gentleman to be—now I am not going to say it on the House floor because the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] could have my words stricken down. What I put in print in the privacy of a dear colleague was what my thoughts were at the time because, as the debate unfolded, as this got amplified over and over again, I turned to Old English to conjure up not old ideas, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] accused me of, but to conjure up the image of Jefferson Madison, to conjure up the image of Edmund Burke in the Parliament in England.

I said, "I think he doth know my position on that," to a lady and she went right ahead and twisted the facts.

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORNAN of California. Not just yet. We are not through. This is exciting. Now wait a minute. I do not want to interrupt the rhythm here.

Go ahead.

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Speaker, I think the gentleman is excited because he is trying to refight a battle lost——

Mr. DORNAN of California. We are going to fight it with President Bush if he vetoes the D.C. bill.

Mr. AUCOIN. If the President wants to be—figures and thinks that that is being kind and gentle to the women of this country, then that is an interesting definition. But what the gentleman said in answer to my question, and I was correct when I asked him if——

Mr. DORNAN of California. Reclaiming my time. Hold thy tongue, sir. I reclaim my time.

I said, "Let me answer with some amplification," and, if I had not been missteered by our purportedly nonpartisan Parliamentarians here, if I had talked over with JULIAN DIXON earlier——

Mr. AUCOIN. The gentleman's problem then is that he was missteered and I was deceitful. That is why I made a point of personal privilege.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I thought the gentleman was deceitful because when it was clarified later in the debate when he heard his own majority chairman of D.C. say, "The Dornan amendment is silent on anything that has to do with birth control," he may have left the floor when later other prolife caucus members said, "Nothing is changed in the prolife—I mean in birth control devices in the District under Dornan language in the law." That is when I thought there was deceit.

If it is only obstinate, obdurate, unbelievable confusion, then I have wasted this hour.

May I ask the Chair how much time I have?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. DORNAN of California. One minute left.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK] has not engaged in fair scales of balance on yielding. We are going to get back to the days of old when he and I were fair in that area maybe, but with 1 minute left, having worked in 34 States, including the State of the gentleman from Massachusetts, the State of Colorado, the State of Illinois, the State of Virginia, and the State of Oregon and, yes, even the State of Kansas for the current President, let me return to a kinder and a gentle close.

I say to my colleagues, "If you folks in the majority, fighting as hard as you can on the merits, will take a little well-meant advice and battle over rape and incest, because you've got President George Bush in your corner, you might win a few. But give us the decency of our heart-felt position which, by the way, is a fraudulent claim in these super medical years of this country. I would like some doctor to call me who is watching"—well, no, I cannot violate the rules.

I would like to find a doctor to tell me when is the last time anybody walked into a room and said, "It's the mother or the child." That has not happened to my knowledge for 20 or 30 years. Let us give us the right of the mother. You will lose most of them, and fight your battles on fairer ground.

I say to all of my colleagues, "En garde. I am passionate on this issue because I believe we are killing human beings with a soul given by God."

Madam Speaker, I thank my colleagues for their generosity during this wonderful debate.

THE CONSULTANT DISCLOSURE AND FRAUD PREVENTION ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KANJORSKI] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KANJORSKI. Madam Speaker, I hope that our Members of the other body observed the last hour here. It certainly attests the fact that we all need a break. Maybe they will have some mercy on us or something.

Madam Speaker, I rise today to announce the introduction of the Consultant Disclosure and Fraud Prevention Act of 1989, legislation I am introducing to eliminate the kind of fraud and abuse we have seen at HUD and other executive branch agencies in recent months.

As I announced at the July 12, 1989, hearing the House Banking Committee held with Secretary Jack Kemp, my bill will deter fraud and corruption by consultants by requiring strict public disclosure of fees paid to consultants, regardless of whether those fees are paid directly or indirectly.

My bill will require reports by any consultant who receives $5,000 in any quarter, or $10,000 in any year, from any applicant or recipient of Federal funds, if the consultant contacts a Federal employee at or above the GS–11 middle-management salary level.

The consultant will have to provide their name, address and phone number along with the name, address and phone number of the person or company which retained their services, a description of the projects they worked on, and the names and titles of the Federal employees they contacted. In addition, the consultant will have to disclose if they have been employed by the Federal Government in the last 2 years, and if so, they will have to disclose the name of the agency, and their last title and salary.

Consultants will file their reports with agencies inspectors general, and the reports will be available for public inspection.

Consultants who fail to file reports will be guilty of a criminal misdemeanor and can be fined up to $5,000 or the amount of their consulting fee, whichever is greater, and can be imprisoned for up to 1 year. They will also be barred from contacting Federal agencies as a consultant for 3 years.

Consultants convicted of a misdemeanor and who continue to consult in violation of the 3-year prohibition, will be guilty of a felony and can be imprisoned up to 5 years.

Madam Speaker, this bill is important for two reasons. First, because it enables us to clean house at HUD and every other Government agency. And second, because unlike other proposals in this area it puts the burden on consultants, and not on our Nation's towns and cities or other applicants for Federal funds.

Madam Speaker, I invite all of my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important legislation, and I want to announce my intention to offer a HUD specific version of it as an amendment to the housing authorization bill, when that bill is considered by the House Banking Committee.

MY ADVICE TO THE PRIVILEGED ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Madam Speaker, for some time now I have been waiting for an opportunity to come back to a way of proceeding that I embarked on the second week that I was sworn in as a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives, and that was to appeal to the privilege of what we call the special order procedure or processes, which in studying its history had perhaps one of the most profound reasons for producing this opportunity for a Member of a numerous body, compelled during regular debate to limit speech, an opportunity to enlarge beyond these limitations on a subject matter associated with the legislative process in an extended fashion that would enable that Member who might feel keenly on an issue or two to extend and discuss his views and his remarks with respect to that particular issue.

Through the years since I was sworn in, and that was January 10, 1962, I have exercised this great privilege innumerable times. Since the advent of public coverage of the proceedings of the House, there has perforce been an enlarged scope of citizens participating vicariously, but nevertheless participating; however, the reasons in the beginning were that it enabled a Member to be on record explaining and enlarging on his views, which in the give and take of limited debate he would be prevented from doing so.

At no time have I ever conceived even before coverage and when the idea was that one was on the record so that he would communicate or she would communicate with a colleague who would scrutinize the RECORD and if interested communicate and have the free market of ideas exchanged in that method; however, with the advent of public and national coverage, the temptation has been so often to substitute this precious forum, this great, great privilege of the use of the forum of the most free and democratic and open legislative body in the entire world, even that of our mother Parliament where through regulations and the sheer size of say the House of Commons members do not enjoy one-tenth the liberty and the freedom of representation that we as Members of the U.S. House of Representatives have.

For example, as long as the House is in session, one can introduce any number of bills or resolutions as one feels incumbent to do so. Such is not the case of a member of Parliament.

When we are elected, no matter on what basis of party affiliation, once we are sworn into this House the American contribution to the parliamentary system has been the free and untrammeled exercise of conscience and responsibility by that Member, meaning that the criticism of some foreign observers has been this would be chaotic because there would be no discipline of the party. In the case of the mother Parliament, that is not the case. If you are elected as a member of a given party, you have to vote once you become a member as that party dictates. If you want to stray, you are automatically dismissed as a member of that party, so these are the great contributions and differences, and through our processes that have worked and still provide the last best hope, the one beacon ray of light in a troubled world engulfed by war, because even though we talk about peace and peace, there is war and war.

We still have free, untrammeled, and constitutionally protected rights to speak freely in the course of debate. The only privilege in the Constitution, our fundamental law, is the protection of speech of the Member during the course of debate, the men who wrote the Constitution having been victims and having been people who aired a custom of abuse on the part of kings, who did everything they could to intimidate the first of those elected to represent the people in England by either arresting or obstructing their attendance, of attempting to punish for what remarks a member may have made during the course of debate. This is an integral part of the first article of the Constitution of the United States that a Member shall not be answerable, other than specific exemptions such as high crimes, felonies, or treason or misdemeanors even, or breaches of the peace, but other than that, there is no reason why any Member of this body should ever feel intimidation.

Intimidations in our day and time come in other forms, manner, shapes. Just as we boast of the freedom of our press, there are practices that have come to encroach on that freedom and with the accumulation of that tremendous power of control of ownership of the press whereby the famous student of the press, American student of the press, writing about some 40 years ago said, "The only one who really has freedom of the press is the owner of the paper." But what is our form that we should fear? As we should fear, what form does fear inhibit the open and untrammeled disclosure that should be the daily experience in a deliberative body such as this great House of Representatives of the United States of America? In the case of the press, of course, we do not have censorship, but there is more than one way to have overt censorship when some master hand or official says, "I prohibit this from being printed." What is that method? Through omission. If something is not reported, how are the people going to be informed that it is happening?

Today over 93 percent of our American citizens watching television, which is a tremendous, overwhelming number of Americans, are subject to the network presentation and interpretation.

An event can be a nonevent if it is not reported, or if through direction or indirection even the presentation is either fragmented or perverted or truncated. We have then what I call censorship through omission, and that in a society such as we live in today can be the equivalent of denying a free electorate the sources of information which must be vital to its forming an independent judgment in its great trusted responsibility of participating in the governmental processes.

Should we blame people if we accuse them of voting ignorantly if they are not given much of a choice to choose through either inadequate option of choices or a knowledgeable discussion of the facts involved?

These are challenges, I think, we face. Internally there should be no hesitation on even the most meek among us to speak out as the case may be, and as the need summons, on every occasion that the opportunity presents itself.

We have tremendous issues that today have reached the point of no return. Either America and its leaders, and that means the people also, leaders chosen by the people as agents and representatives, to consult and confide in the American people the dimensions of the tremendous problems that at this historical junction of our great Nation we will inevitably inexorably have to face.

Having been assigned to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, what was then known as the Banking and Currency Committee, 28 years ago that I arrived here, I chose to remain on that committee, and I was privileged and honored to have been selected by those who had the power of selection to be assigned and selected for duty and performance on that committee.

Nothing has been more anguishing to me than to have sensed, to have seen, to have surmised, to have concluded both through observation, in hearing testimony over the course of many hearings, as well as reading and study to predict reasonably and on a rational and safe conclusion that certain events plus certain events just as surely as mathematically 2 plus 2 would equal 4, that it would be reasonable to expect this or that, to find that it is battling a tremendous sea of indifference or perhaps, more pointedly, ignorance.

There were other issues not incidentially to the duties of serving on the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs that have agitated me even long before I would ever dream I would have the honor of being elected to the U.S. House of Representatives. I am a Depression-era generation, and that means a world war generation. It has been my privilege to live through the most incredible times never once imagined in the wildest of our fantasies in youth.

I have seen dear ones, friends, companions of childhood and boyhood, when we never thought we would go beyond 100 miles from our hometown, finding ourselves to the four points of the world in war, somehow to return, some returning maimed, wounded, torn up, some of us to witness what was so incredibly that, even to this day it sounds as if it was just a bad nightmare, the assassination of a loved President. I was one that was fortunate and chosen to ride with President Kennedy on Air Force One on the first leg of that fateful trip.

I was also one of only four Members of the Congress who were invited to fly on Air Force One. Two other Members, colleagues of the House, Representative OLIN or "Tiger" Teague of Texas, and Representative John Young, also of Texas, and U.S. Senator Ralph W. Yarborough, U.S. Senator at the time from Texas, and that was it. The rest of the contingent from Congress was on the backup, Air Force Two, with Vice President Lyndon Johnson.

The next day, of course, it was just incredible when I found myself, through a fortuitous combination of events, outside of the room in this corridor with the lone person, the wife of that President at one end, and I unwittingly right across a rather small hall from the door leading to the small room in which just overwhelmingly and astonishingly I found that that was where this great, buoyant, quintessential representative of American youth and leadership was dead and inert there.

For months after, even sometimes more recently now I would wake up in the middle of the night and say what a terrible dream I have had or nightmare, I had the nightmare that the President of the United States had been shot, only to find it is not, the reality is that it did happen.

Since then and the things that happened, and my great privilege of being allowed to, by the 20th District of Texas constituents, continue to serve in the House of Representatives, the issues that preceded, for instance, again it was amazing when the bells were sounded calling for a quorum, which was rare in that day and time in 1965, summoned to the House to discover that the issue on hand was a resolution calling for a constitutional amendment, to be the 25th. Looking at the report to accompany the resolution and at the language of the resolution, I could not believe it. I could not believe that this was being pressed for adoption, for to me, and I say it on the record, incidentally, that there were 28 of us that voted no on that resolution, but I was the only one who gave reason in the RECORD, and I said, because after I went to the then-chairman of the Judiciary Committee and said, "Sir, what do you mean by this section 4 that says that if the majority of the governing body decides that the President is unable or disabled to serve and function he shall then be considered unable and the Vice President shall become the Acting President of the United States?"

I said, "Sir, pardon me for intruding, but what do you mean by the governing body of the United States?" Then with great disgust he said, "Well, the Cabinet. What do you think?" And I said, "But sir, the Cabinet is not a constitutional word, and governing body, unless you define it in a constitutional amendment, can mean anything."

He was so disgusted he waved me away, but I made up my mind right then and there, I could not vote for it. When it was over with, and I had time to think in my mind, why I took the well and I said this is potential for the destruction of our very Constitution right here. I am conversant with the deliberations of the constitutional convention, and the biggest fear that those Members had was that there would be created an office that would even remotely not be accountable, that if there was going to be such a thing in the words used then of a chief magistrate, that by all means it would have to be elected by the people. So I got up and I said so, and I said what this seems to me is evoking those dark days of intrigue of the Roman center at the time the Roman Republic was reaching the point of degeneration and decadence, and the days were just numbered, and it was a matter of time before the Roman Republic and a semblance of democracy for that day were doomed. I said moderately it is reminiscent of the intrigues of the last French republic when facing the German invasion in 1940. The potential for mischief is so great that I cannot conceive of this body passing it out or much less three-fourths of the legislatures approving it.

Well, they did. I said, additionally I am not thinking of times like now, I am thinking of day sof deep cleavages, passionate divisions such as civil wars. What is the potential for mischief here if you have bold and ambitious people who fill the definition of the majority of the governing bodies desirous of power, and the elimination of a duly elected President.

All of that is in the RECORD. It is not what I am saying now in retrospect, and this is why I urge my colleagues that no matter what abuse there is, and I consider it abuse if I were to take this forum and try to substitute it for a political stump, and this is why anybody can search the RECORD of the infinite number of times I have exercised this privilege to speak if I have abused it in any manner, shape or form. I try to never inject political partisan, because I think that is for us to take back to the stump and argue before the people, not here among us.

I am giving these as examples only, and that is just one of many. I took this floor 57 times between 1970 and 1971 announcing what I entitled "the Sharpstown Follies." And what was that? It was revealing the corruption emanating from Texas and reaching the highest levels of the Justice Department in the person of the Deputy Assistant Attorney General for Criminal Matters, a former attorney general of Texas. I directed a letter to the President, I directed a letter to the Attorney General. The Attorney General, John Mitchell, not once an acknowledgment, but after the 55th speech, the newspapers in Texas discovered that there was a scandal of giant proportions, and what I was saying was truthful. I even placed in the RECORD Xeroxes of canceled checks and other documentation showing that the processes were being corrupted, and that the greatest interests of the greatest number were not being served.

Finally that deputy assistant attorney general resigned, and in Texas it led to a gigantic, cataclysmic political upheaval. One of the highest placed State officials went out, some ended up being indicted and the like.

Then came right on the heels of that, but a few years later, the assassination of Federal judge John W. Wood of the western district of Texas, and working out of San Antonio and over to the border, 600 miles away in El Paso.

□ 1610

Before that, not here but back home, I had made four trips to the local grand jury to report that after the closing of the cocaine ring, the French connection, as they called it, along our northeast and Canadian border, the activities had been transplanted to south of the border. And San Antonio was becoming the way station, and that these elements were so brazen that they had developed $1½ billion business of the stolen cars of the United States into Mexico in exchange for a drug. As a matter of fact, it was so sophisticated that in Chicago the underworld had a computerized link in which information as to what kind of car, what kind of car part was desired. Chop shops.

Then there were four lines of transportation. Eastern: Coming from this area down to the South across New Orleans, Houston, down to the southern tip of the border in Texas.

The other: New York, Chicago, Dallas, through San Antonio, Laredo, and into the interior of Mexico.

The other: Las Vegas, El Paso, Juarez, and then in.

The other, on the west coast: Los Angeles down on the border and into Mexico.

There were certain murders occurring in San Antonio when I had a call from the chief of the homicide division of detectives of the San Antonio Police Department. He said, "Henry"—and the reason he knew me was that when I was chief probation officer for Bexar County, after the war, he was a rookie. I became intimately acquainted with the law enforcement processes, the problems confronting them.

Let me say by way of preface that my swan song when I left that in 1947, was to warn what I felt was an impending danger among our youth, drug. But what was the drug? It was what they call yellow jackets, amphetamines. There was no juvenile during the 4 years I served that we ever had because of drug addiction. There was no such thing as what we call a drug problem among our youth.

The worst we had were juveniles who happened to be arrested with adults who happened to have some marijuana cigarettes. But there was no hard core. Even among the sophisticated, affluent elements of our population, it was only during the war that the amphetamines became popular as sedatives.

And then soon the kids discovered, and I had a theater manager call me and say, "Henry, shameful things are happening. Some of these kids are buying yellow jackets," which you could have gotten over the counter at that time in a pharmacy. They were taking them and dropping them in a Coke bottle and getting a big kick.

That was my warning. The only other thing that we had was some of the returning, and I will say this, the proudest days of my whole life, including my political career was the service as a juvenile officer, and the great, great feeling, I can't describe it, when I have a grown adult call me or come by here and say, "Remember me? I have been wanting to thank you because today I have a wife, have a family, I have property, I have a business. But at the time I came to your attention I might have gone somewhere else and I know I would have." That to me is the greatest thrill.

But when this sergeant calls and says, "How do you figure two men bumped off here in the south of the county, one over here on the north side, stabbed 82 times?" My question to him was, "Who are these individuals, and what records do they have?" And he said, "That is the thing, they are all automobile salesmen but not a one of them has a record." And I said, "Well, I would suggest that what you have is some hits that are being made by elements coming across the border."

After all, a person could get in a car in Nuevo Laredo, cross the bridge, come into the United States, in 3 hours' time he was in San Antonio, make the hit, and 4 hours later he was across the border.

What could the police do?

So then I went to the grand jury because I had a constituent whose son I had handled some years before, and who was very worried. Sure enough, she had reason to be.

And it led to the first evidentiary knowledge I could produce as to the existence of this drug activity, mostly as a waystation.

When the overlords decided from the New Orleans sector that they would go into the drug traffic, they actually came to Houston, about 190 miles southeast of my city, but the fact is that finally I suggested that the local officials coordinate with the State Department of Public Safety, the State law enforcement, and the Federal.

To my astonishment I found that on the Federal level Customs, Border Patrol, Immigration did not even communicate among themselves, much less than the, what was the equivalent then of our Drug Enforcement Agency today. It was a very meager bureau at the time.

I came up, I sought and obtained an audience with the then special assistant to the President. By then it was Mr. Carter.

Thanks to that help they finally coordinated some effort and operated a sting operation, of just 1 day, on the arteries leading in and out of San Antonio.

There were characters that were well known to the police that were spotted driving late-model cars, pickups, you name it, and when stopped, were discovered to have engines whose serial numbers somehow or other were not there. They found in that one day that there were 152 passenger automobiles stolen on their way to Mexico; there were 11 motorbikes or motorcycles; there were 57 pickups and another number, I forget which, of trucks and the like.

So that gave an idea of this activity.

But when there was an attempt to try to enforce, in El Paso, then a murder was reported of a prominent lawyer whose brother was very active in Las Vegas, but who were very exercised because of what they called "Hanging judge" John W. Wood.

□ 1620

I explained all this. I went to the grand jury. I said, "Look, the day is going to come when our law enforcement agents are going to be in real danger because these elements are so brazen that they think they are just free to do as they please. They have very modern, sophisticated methods." I repeated about the computerized operation in Chicago. Well, the rest is history.

One morning in October the assistant district attorney for the western district who had just returned from a prosecution in El Paso coming out of his home. Where was his home? Well, it was, after redistricting, it was out of my district, it was up in the affluent Alamo Heights suburb, and a van came up and fired, I forget how many rounds, through the rear window. Miraculously, he ducked underneath to the floor of his car and he was not hit. The police had no ideas, no clues, nothing. Again, I was called by the police. I said, "Well, I think that you have a description of a van, and when you find it, you will find that it is stolen, and I think you ought to look toward Austin, Texas." Sure enough, that was right. They never could find the weapons. They never could ascertain the identity of those that had perpetuated that deadly assault.

"What was the motive," they said? I said, "It is brazenness. They are out to prove that they are going to cow the judiciary and the law enforcement; that is, the district attorneys and their assistants." I said, "You have to find them." Well, the thing just lulled, so when the Congress opened, I spoke out. Every day. Now, there was no television coverage. I could not be accused of seeking publicity. However, I was hoping to keep this on the front burner of law enforcement. The long and the short of it is that finally a special investigative team on the Federal level was formed. They went down to the area. I was here in May. That was 8 months after the assault, when I had a call. There was this young assistant district attorney who said, "I am here because the Justice Department has invited to honor me, and I can't leave without coming by and thanking you and telling you that Judge Wood would like to convey his best." So I had breakfast with him in the dining room, and he said, "Judge Wood would like for you to send him an autographed picture," is what he said. "We are so grateful that you have maintained this interest in this, and try to keep this case in the forefront of enforcement." I said, "Well, I think we owe it to ourselves." He said, "Judge Wood has gotten impatient because of the assault on me. The marshals have given us some protective custody, but Judge Wood has gotten impatient and as of last week he ordered the marshals away." I could not eat. I stopped eating. I said, "Sir, when are you going back to San Antonio?" He said, "Saturday." And this was Thursday. I said, "You've got to call. You've got to get back and tell Judge Wood he's got to keep the marshals." Under no circumstances, and he laughed, and he said, "You don't know Judge Wood." I said, "Maybe I don't know Judge Wood, but I do know the elements out there."

Well, that happened to be May, and the Thursday and Friday before Memorial Day Monday. So I go down on Friday, praying that this young man would advise the judge. I looked up the judge's phone number, but he was not listed as far as his personal residence was concerned. Monday was Memorial Day, and I was proceeding to prepare to come back on Tuesday. There was no business on Tuesday, when at 8:30 in the morning I received a call from the local editor. He was all excited, saying, "Congressman, Judge Wood has just been shot outside his apartment," again up in this area known as Alamo Heights. This is the affluent section of our city. I said, "How? I hope he is not badly hurt." He said, "No, I am afraid he is dead." They said their superior asked them, the city desk editor was calling and wanted to know if I had any ideas. I said, "I tell you what happened this last week when the young man came over, the assistant district attorney, but I just don't know to explain this other than to tell you it has to be professional, it has to have been very well planned, and it just makes me feel like crying. It is avoidable." Well, sure enough, it finally came to the conclusion that the assassin had been lying in wait up at a roof point, had waited for the precise moment. The judge was very regular when he would step forth, go to his car, and at that point he was shot dead.

Well, obviously, a person does not have to be an expert to know that that is a pro. It is a professional. That it had to have been well planned, that it had to be a matter of weeks of casing, as they say in police work.

Well, lo and behold, the whole thing raises alarm, and 3 months later, no clues, no nothing. They could find a gun. They did not know who to suspect. They had no evidence, nothing.

I took the floor. I spoke, and I spoke, and I spoke. I was criticized for many months. More than a year later, I went home, and I get a call from Director Webster of the FBI. He says:

> We wanted you to be the first to know because we want to give you thanks for having spoken, made it possible for us to get the needed resources we needed. I wanted you to be the first to know that in the next 2 hours we are going to answer the first four indictments in this murder.

Well, of course, that makes me feel proud. The point I am trying to make is that I was not coming to this House floor to get notoriety or anything like that. I was not making press releases. I was telling my colleagues that this was the crime of the century, that it was a first assassination in the history of our judiciary, and that we could not afford to let it lie in the dust of history. We could not let the death of Judge Wood go the way of the disappearance of other Americans who to this day, their deaths are unaccounted for. Americans like Jimmy Hoffa. He is just a police case number, and so on. That is not acceptable in a free democracy. I said then, "This is king crime."

Today, I am rising to say that this country faces the greatest confrontation of combined dilemmas, domestic and external, that it has faced, and yet it pains me to say it is not recognized as such. For instance, since 1964 I have pointed out that over half of our defense budget is for the so-called defense of Europe. I asked the question, but what Europe? A 1947 Europe. We have a defense bill. Taxpayers pay for it, a better than $300 billion, over 60 percent of that is supposed to be for what? The defense of Europe.

Nineteen forty-seven Europe.

In 1964 I said:

> My colleagues, that has gone on forever. We've got new generations coming up. They are going to be stepping in our shoes. They're on the threshold of demand all over the world.

In Germany, where we have 300,000, plus of our military dependents, what is going to be the context? The perception?

Sometime in the early 1950's, we changed the designation of our troops from occupation to defense. But the day is going to come, as it did after World War I, and how long did it take after World War I?

By 1930 and 1931 the German writers and thinkers, those who felt they were enthralled as a result of the treaty, were saying, "German guilt is a myth."

With that, should anybody have been surprised that a Hitler emerged? Did Hitler come out of somewhere and foist himself on the German people? Are the German people lesser or smarter than any other group of human beings? Of course not.

Are we exempt from the same happening to us? Of course not.

Just within the last 8 years, I have repeatedly taken this floor, pointed out how we have been nibbling away on what we used to consider sacrosanct constitutional rights. I have pointed out for 25 years how the economic freedom of the American people has been bargained away, how we have created that which the Founding Fathers would never, never have conceived as being acceptable, and that is the creation of so powerful an agency, not accountable to either the representatives of the people or the Presidents, that it would have total control on the credit and the economic lifeblood of the country. But we have had that freedom, and we are on record in every one of these events.

Today, now, all of a sudden, we have the reports about Ein Deutschland, one Germany. Well, of course. The Constitution of the Federal Republic of Germany, one of its first clauses is: ultimate reunification. How can we sit here and think that a generation now—for instance, the chief of state in Germany is Mr. Kohl. He was 15 years old at the time of World War II. The chief of state in Russia, Gorbachev, was 15 years of age at the time.

So, what is happening here? We are now going to be considered anomalous, out of place. All of a sudden the big fear of the invasion of the Russians through middle Europe. To what? I never could understand that, never.

Mr. Speaker, why would the Russians want to come over and take France, for instance? Man, they could not even handle Poland in the first place.

But who was trying to learn what the intellectuals and the writers in Russia, and Germany and Poland have been saying? I have never seen any evidence of that in any of our free press, and yet it is absolutely fundamental and imperative that we do so, for it is time.

The winds of change are the only thing in human existence. Changes are sweeping over those broad lands.

How will we channel it? Is there a peace treaty? No.

Did our press report that in the last elections Mr. Kohl had, and the election before last; in two of the German provinces the big issue was "We think we ought to have the return of the province of Silesia and that other province that is now in Poland but right now belongs to Germany."

Did our press find out how Mr. Kohl tried to mollify those fears and questions? He said, "Wait until we have a peace treaty. That will be part of the discussions."

Gorbachev goes to Germany, which would have been incredible to think of 10 years ago. Our Presidents go to Germany and say, "Oh, the wall ought to go down," and Gorbachev goes and says, "Well, you know," and the Germans take him to heart. They acclaim him because no longer now do they fear that threat.

But our defense, it is predicated on that threat.

So, where are we? Where is our leadership? Should we wait for the British, for instance, whose fears are a little bit more practically grounded? Should we not in our leadership say that the world has changed?

We have got a brand-new world here, so, therefore, we are going to face, after almost 50 years, the need to have an understanding among us, and now that we have reached a point of discussion where we can at least sit at a table with the Soviets, what do we do about the German question?

The beginning of the Cold War was the German question, and our insistence on rearming Germany and inability of anybody to say, Well, I can't wait to get together for having self-determination." Under what conditions, for instance, if it is so desired, shall they have an election in so-called East Germany where the people will express themselves if they want to come and reunite to their fatherland?

All those are no-noes. We better not because from time immemorial temperament and German custom is so totalitarian and authoritarian.

Mr. Speaker, what are we going to do then? Wait until events pile up over which then we will have very little control? What about the fate of our 300,000 servicemen there? What is the outlook there now?

That is one. That is just one.

Incredibly south of the border, and the world is again restructuring in economic blocs, and Japan, without using war, as it did in the thirties, has put back in place a Japanese coast-of-fear prosperity. They have gone a long way in penetrating all those markets.

Oh, there is still a lot of inherent hatreds and fears; Koreans, for instance, and Vietnamese, Chinese. But there is accommodation, and what they were unable to do through force, through economic ability they are succeeding quite well.

As a matter of fact, as they did before World War II, they are succeeding greatly south of the border. And what are they doing? We are isolating ourselves totally under these disasters, and I cannot be accused of not having spoken out. In fact, I spoke out to the point of political damage to a certain expense back home.

I criticized President Reagan, as I still do, to think that in the 1980's a President would come across the horizon in the United States who would take our country back to Calvin Coolidge and gunboat diplomacy. It is incredible to me even now, instead of using the American leadership, the tremendous potential that even the peoples in those countries are seeking, where we would build our block in the natural way it should.

We have retreated. In 5 years, beginning in the middle of the seventies and the beginning of the eighties, business, American private enterprise and investment went down from 37 percent to 17 percent in Latin America, and mind you, this was before these tremendous cataclysmic earthquakes of developments, human earthquakes of revolutions, because the world has shrunk and no longer will we be able to control, or anybody, the masses of people who for 300 years have been submerged and subjected to despots, with total loss of freedom in the most impossible ways.

Should we not then be restructuring a rebirth of American leadership, the ingenuity and the ability that is there?

If our President can go to China and sit down cheek by jowl with the Communist leaders there, if he can go to the Soviets and do the same, what is wrong with him asserting his leadership and calling a summit of the Western World here or at another acceptable place, and saying, "All right, what is your trouble? What is your ache?"

I say there would be such an acceptance, there would be such an overwhelming acceptance that it would amaze and surprise even those most skeptical and cynical of such consideration.

So I say, what is wrong with American leadership saying:

Hey, we lost many thousands of our lives for freedom. We don't want our children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren to have to face a similar fate because of our inability to face reality.

While we still have, God willing, the ability to shape events, not be the creatures of fate, but the shapers of destiny, and say on the one hand:

We are going to call a conclave. Now that you Europeans are going to form a single market, your development of the European monetary system and the currency unit unquestionably is targeted for the day that it will replace the dollar as the international reserve unit.

My colleagues, if that happens, what are you going to face with the horrendous private corporate and governmental debt beholden for the last 7 years to foreign capital, fickle? What that would mean would be that all that debt would have to be paid back in somebody else's currency, not our dollars.

My colleagues, I cannot begin to describe to you what a horribly fateful day that will be for American freedom of every kind, economic as well as other. In this day and time, political freedom, fine, but without economic freedom, what do we have?

Above all, the vaunted American standard of living, that is what is at stake.

For that reason, Madam Speaker, I thank the Chair for the indulgence and privilege of addressing the House in this fashion.

HEAD START AND DAY CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BROWN of California). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, Head Start was established to give economically disadvantaged 3 to 5 year old children a better chance of educational success and is one of the Nation's most successful and popular domestic initiatives. Support for Head Start is broad based. President Bush has endorsed the program and the House of Representatives has recently approved a modest funding increase. Head Start provides nutrition meals, medical and dental screenings and immunizations for children who would otherwise not have them. In addition, Head Start closely involves the parents in their children's education—35 percent of Head Start staff are former Head Start parents.

Head Start students are 65 percent more likely to graduate from high school;

Head Start students are one-third more likely to pursue a college or vocational education after high school; and

A $1 investment in Head Start returns $6 because of the decrease in long term costs of health care, special education, public assistance and crime.

Unfortunately, Head Start serves only one-fifth of the eligible children. Almost 5 million children in the United States below age 6 live in families with incomes below the poverty level. Head Start should be fully funded to help close the opportunity gap for these young people.

This year, awareness of the need for affordable day care is also at the forefront of the national agenda. This need is greater than ever for economically disadvantaged families. Many of my colleagues propose the creation of a new Federal program to subsidize day care for low and middle income families. This would involve billions of dollars in new spending and would compete for scarce resources with other needed programs like Head Start. Without changing the structure and purpose of the Head Start education program, I propose funding for full-day care and summer care for Head Start children whose parents are working or attending a job training or educational program. This is a more targeted, affordable option which reaches those families with the greatest need.

My bill also contains a pay-as-you-go component. It calls for delaying the indexing of the standard income tax deduction for 1 year. This approach would provide sufficient revenue for the Head Start expansion and would spread the cost fairly among all taxpayers.

There is a lot of discussion of Capitol Hill about making child care and education programs a priority. I believe my legislation to fully fund Head Start and offer day care to Head Start families is the right approach. An investment in Head Start today will produce long lasting benefits.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO AMEND THE FEDERAL INSECTICIDE, FUNGICIDE, AND RODENTICIDE ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENNY). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. BROWN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to amend the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act [FIFRA]. The proposed amendments contained in this legislation are not a comprehensive rewrite of the law, but represent a first attempt to deal with some of the more nagging shortcomings of the statute. This proposal is also a clear signal that we are serious about taking another look at FIFRA in light of a number of recent events.

I have been involved in the legislative discussions on FIFRA for many years, too many for my liking. As chairman of the House Agriculture Subcommittee which has jurisdiction over FIFRA, I have spent much of the last 7 years looking at comprehensive changes to the statute. During that time, the problems have mounted and our inability in Congress to fix some of these problems has come back to haunt us. The recent food safety scare which hurts producers, retailers, and consumers alike can be traced to well recognized satutory shortcomings which have been neglected. If we are to restore public confidence in our pesticide regulatory system and return some stability to the farm sector, now racked with uncertainty about the next EPA decision or the next public pesticide panic, we in Congress need to step up to the issue and deal with it.

What I am proposing in this legislation deals mainly with the process of an orderly review of registered pesticides and an expedited cancellation process for those pesticides which cannot be used without posing an unacceptable risk to people and the environment. It does not attempt to solve a number of other problems which my subcommittee has uncovered over the last 7 years; it simply addresses the most serious problems and sets the ball rolling for consideration of solutions to the other problems.

I also do not assume that this proposal is a perfect solution. I hope that during the months ahead that this proposal can be further refined and improved.

What has led me to introduce this bill is a combination of need and frustration. The need for reform should be evident to anyone who has picked up a paper or magazine in recent months. Our current pesticide regulatory system is not working and does not have the confidence of the American public.

My frustration results from having waited in vain for nearly 5 months for the administration or interest groups to develop legislative suggestions for pesticide regulatory reform. Our colleagues, Mr. WAXMAN, has introduced legislation which seeks to meet this need for reform using the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act [FFDCA]. But this legislation does not fix all of the problems and does not fix them in the pesticide statute, FIFRA. While some changes in the FFDCA are needed, they should be accompanied by, or in some cases replaced by, changes in FIFRA.

Mr. WAXMAN should be applauded for his efforts in drafting legislation but his bill should also have spurred a similar effort in FIFRA.

To date that has not happened. There has been much talk and hand wringing about the issue. There has been much debate about whether Mr. WAXMAN's approach is right or wrong. But there has been no action taken to fix the real problems of FIFRA. The administration has been working for the last 3 months to develop a legislative proposal but, except for press reports, we have not seen an administration position. I have been asked to wait for this position and have been asked to wait until various interest groups can develop concrete proposals, but I have seen nothing emerge.

What has emerged are calls to my subcommittee from panicked consumers who fear pesticide residues on their food. I hear from growers asking if they should use a certain pesticide residues on their food. I hear from growers asking if they should use a certain pesticide on their crops because they know it is under review at the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA]. I hear the shrill protests from groups seeking protection from this bill or the EPA action, but I hear no solutions being offered, no firm proposals for getting out of this mess we are in.

So, on the last day before the August district work period, I have taken this step of offering a proposal of my own because I am tired of waiting for the interested parties to develop a consensus.

First, this bill lowers the threshold for cancellation and changes it from a lengthy hearing process into an informal rule making process, similar to that used in other environmental statutes. It sets up a process for suspending a pesticide which poses a risk too high to wait for the cancellation process, meaning that the use of the pesticide is not allowed during the cancellation process. It proposes an even more rapid emergency suspension process for pesticides which pose such a great risk that they cannot even wait for the consultation and review involved in a regular suspension procedure.

The need for this streamlined process which provides EPA with a range of regulatory options for problem pesticides has been evident for some time. The current cancellation process involving administrative hearings can drag on for years. The subcommittee has repeatedly heard from EPA that they prefer an informal rulemaking process as a way of speeding up the cancellation process. The process proposed in my bill will take up to 2 years. It does not shortcut the scientific review process leading up to a cancellation decision, a review process in which the registrant is involved at every step of the way. This simply says that after EPA takes years to evaluate the science behind the possible risk posed by the use of a pesticide and decides that cancellation of some uses is the only option, they should be able to move quickly without the adverse public reaction over delays, like the one which occurred in the Alar decision earlier this year.

Similarly, if EPA has discovered an especially risky pesticide for which even a 2-year delay is too great, they should be able to move rapidly to suspend use of the pesticide during the cancellation proceeding, since during cancellation a registrant can continue to market a pesticide. The proposal in my bill says that if a risk is too high to even allow that additional 2 years of exposure, EPA should be able to act.

Second, the bill then proposes that there be a regular review of existing pesticides on a 9-year cycle, putting a permanent program in place similar to the one-time reregistration process contained in the 1988 FIFRA amendments.

This proposal addresses the situation that led up to the reregistration program passed last year. Without some process for regular review, EPA simply passes over currently registered pesticides when a new test is required. This means that older pesticides remain untested for years until EPA gets around to them. This also means that new pesticides, in effect, have to meet a higher standard than older pesticides, inhibiting the development of newer, and perhaps safer and more effective, pesticides.

Third, there is a provision for relief for farmers who are caught by a suspension and have no alternative pest control options other than the suspended pesticide. This new provision allows a State to seek a continued registration on a very strictly controlled, 1-year basis for a crop for which there is no alternative, as long as there is work underway to find an alternative or to reduce the risk from the pesticide to an insignificant level.

Fourth, there is a provision which requires the Department of Agriculture [USDA] to become a player, perhaps even a partner, in the regulatory process. USDA has been extremely negligent in keeping track of EPA actions on pesticides. They become involved at the tail end of the regulatory process, usually when it is too late to do anything except argue that they do not have enough time to develop alternatives to the proposed cancellation of a pesticide use.

What I am proposing is a process which at least keeps USDA abreast of EPA actions by requiring them to provide EPA with a list of pests which need to be controlled on specific crops and the available pest control technologies currently available. It is hoped that when they notice that a certain pest has too few control options available, they will institute research and extension work on alternative methods of pest control, chemical, biological, or other methods. I requested this action in a letter to the Secretary of Agriculture in May and, having not received a reply, I am left with no alternative but to propose legislation to do this.

This is not a broad and earthshaking set of amendments, but I expect that it will draw a great deal of attention, especially from those who seem content to simply sit back and react to events and not take charge. I hope that these amendments stimulate discussion and action in Congress, within the administration, and among the various interest groups, in agriculture and in the environmental community, who are involved in pesticide regulation. It should be taken as a clear signal that the time to study the issue is over.

This bill does not deal with a number of FIFRA issues which must be addressed: lack of actual pesticide use, residue, and exposure data, lax enforcement of pesticide violations, weak pesticide applicator training and certification requirements, and a host of others which fill hearing volumes from my subcommittee. It also does not deal with a wholly inadequate level of activity at USDA in keeping abreast of EPA decisions, developing safer pest control measures, and preparing the American farmer for regulatory decisions which, while underway for years at EPA, seem to come as a surprise to USDA.

I hope that this legislation stimulates the thinking of my colleagues, the administration, and the various interest groups during the August district work period. I look forward to a very interesting fall as we move toward serious consideration of needed changes to FIFRA.

A summary of the legislation follows:

SUMMARY OF THE PESTICIDE REGULATORY REFORM AMENDMENTS OF 1989

The legislation proposes four major changes to current law. The central purpose is to change Section 6 of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA) to expedite the process and adjust the standards for the cancellation, suspension, and emergency suspension of a pesticide registration. The legislation also imposes a nine-year sunset on pesticide registrations, phased-in with the current process of reregistration contained in the 1988 FIFRA amendments. In addition, the legislation proposes a new category of temporary state pesticide registration to allow agricultural producers severely impacted by a pesticide suspension decision to phase out their use of a suspended pesticide. Finally, the legislation proposes that the Department of Agriculture (USDA) compile and provide the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) with a detailed accounting of pest control measures currently available, by pest and crop, and indicate research underway to deal with shortages of pest control measures. EPA and USDA will also engage in joint development of Integrated Pest Management (IPM) systems and methods and guidelines to be used in the calculation of benefits provided by the use of pesticides.

CANCELLATION—AMENDMENT TO SECTION 6(B) OF FIFRA

EPA may propose to cancel, deny an application, or change the classification of a pesticide by using a notice and comment process in the Federal Register. When a pesticide has "a reasonable probability of causing unreasonable adverse effects on the environment when used in accordance with its labeling or in accordance with actual practice," EPA will consult with USDA and the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) before issuing a proposed cancellation order. The proposed order will be sent to the registrant, to the Scientific Advisory Panel (SAP), and published in the Federal Register. A 60-day comment period will be allowed. At the end of that period, EPA can propose a final cancellation order which will be effective upon publication in the Federal Register. If EPA has established conditions and terms as an alternative to cancellation, 30 days will be allowed for the registrant to take those actions or the cancellation will be final. The cancellation is reviewable in Federal Court and can be overturned if it is "arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or not in accordance with the law." The burden of proof will be on the registrant to show that the standard for cancellation is not met. EPA can allow the use of existing stocks of the pesticide after a final cancellation order and the pesticide can be marketed during the pendency of the cancellation process.

SUSPENSION—AMENDMENT TO SECTION 6(C) OF FIFRA

If EPA finds that the use of a pesticide "generally causes an unreasonable adverse effect on the environment," they may suspend the registration of a pesticide. EPA shall consult with USDA and HHS prior to issuing the suspension order. EPA shall notify the registrant and publish the order in the Federal Register. The order will become effective upon publication or upon receipt of the notice by the registrant, whichever is first. The suspension will expire in 180 days unless EPA moves to cancel the pesticide. The order is subject to Federal Court review and can be overturned for the same reasons as the cancellation.

EMERGENCY SUSPENSION—AMENDMENT TO SECTION 6(D) OF FIFRA

If EPA finds that the use of a pesticide is "likely to result in an imminent hazard (defined as 'a situation in which the use of a pesticide poses a significant risk to human health')," EPA can order the suspension of a pesticide without prior notification of the registrant or consultation with other federal agencies. The order will expire within 180 days unless EPA moves to cancel the pesticide. The order is subject to Federal Court review and can be overturned for the same reasons as cancellation.

SUNSET—AMENDMENT TO SECTION 6(A)(1)

After initial phase-in and synchronization with the ongoing reregistration program, a pesticide registration will automatically expire on a nine-year cycle. One year prior to the registration expiration (or six months prior for a formulator), EPA will notify the registrant of the upcoming expiration of registration. The registrant will have to apply for a renewal of its registration before the nine-year period expires. The application for renewal will be denied unless the registrant, (1) makes a timely application which complies with the requirements for registration renewal, (2) agrees for delivery of information needed for renewal, including a time table for delivery, and (3) makes a good faith effort to comply with the delivery schedule.

CONTINUING REGISTRATION—NEW SECTION 24(D) OF FIFRA

Within 60 days of a suspension order, a State may apply for the continued use of a suspended pesticide if: (1) severe economic dislocation will result, (2) no known alternatives to the suspended pesticide are available, (3) conditions for use of the pesticide, including plans for reducing the adverse effects are provided, (4) the estimated volume of pesticide to be applied and acreage treated are provided, (5) pesticide sale and use reporting provisions are required, and (6) a listing of research into alternative pest control is provided. EPA will have 120 days to act on the State's application and may approve it as long as the continued use does not pose an "excessive risk." The registration will last one year, with two additional renewals possible, and will expire at the end of the approved period or upon final cancellation, whichever comes first.

COOPERATION WITH USDA—AMENDS SECTION 28 OF FIFRA

USDA will help EPA identify pests to be brought under control and identify the pest control measures available for that control. USDA will provide EPA with an annual update of this information and identify those pests for which there is concern about the limited number of control methods available, or where pest resistance has been identified. USDA will also provide a description of research and extension efforts underway to deal with the areas of concern and on alternative control methods for pesticides approved for a continuing registration under the new Section 24(d). In addition, USDA and EPA will jointly develop IPM pest control methods, and jointly develop methods for calculating the benefits coming from pesticide use. Guidelines for benefits calculations will be published in the Federal Register.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of earlier today, the Chair declares the House in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

Bells will be rung 15 minutes before the House reconvenes.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

□ 2220

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 10 o'clock and 21 minutes p.m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Further message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 480. An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for the Federal Maritime Commission, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2467) "An act entitled the '1988 Disaster Assistance Extension Act'."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the further report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1278) "An act to reform, recapitalize, and consolidate the Federal deposit insurance system, to enhance the regulatory and enforcement powers of Federal financial institutions regulatory agencies, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate has passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2461. An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 2461) "An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. NUNN, Mr. EXON, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. DIXON, Mr. GLENN, Mr. GORE, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. BYRD, Mr. WARNER, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. COHEN, Mr. WILSON, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. GORTON, Mr. LOTT, and Mr. COATS, to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 797. An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to improve the education of children by establishing a National Endowment for Children's Educational Television, and for other purposes;

S. 926. An act to improve cash management by executive agencies, and for other purposes;

S. 976. An act to postpone the effective date of section 511(e)(3)(B) of the Controlled Substances Act, relating to the disposition of forfeited property and State law;

S. 1153. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for the establishment of presumptions of service-connection between certain diseases experienced by veterans who served in Vietnam during the Vietnam era and exposure to certain toxic herbicide agents used in Vietnam; to provide for interim benefits for veterans of such service who have certain diseases; to improve the reporting requirements relating to the "Ranch Hand Study"; and for other purposes; and Con. Res. 61. Concurrent resolution in support of basic human rights and democracy in Burma.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1278, FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS REFORM, RECOVERY AND ENFORCEMENT ACT, 1989

Mr. GONZALEZ submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 1278) to reform, recapitalize, and consolidate the Federal deposit insurance system, to enhance the regulatory and enforcement powers of Federal financial institutions regulatory agencies, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 101-222)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1278) to reform, recapitalize, and consolidate the Federal deposit insurance system, to enhance the regulatory and enforcement powers of Federal financial institutions regulatory agencies, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

TITLE I—PURPOSES

SEC. 101. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are as follows:

(1) To promote, through regulatory reform, a safe and stable system of affordable housing finance.

(2) To improve the supervision of savings associations by strengthening capital, accounting, and other supervisory standards.

(3) To curtail investments and other activities of savings associations that pose unacceptable risks to the Federal deposit insurance funds.

(4) To promote the independence of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation from the institutions the deposits of which it insures, by providing an independent board of directors, adequate funding, and appropriate powers.

(5) To put the Federal deposit insurance funds on a sound financial footing.

(6) To establish an Office of Thrift Supervision in the Department of the Treasury, under the general oversight of the Secretary of the Treasury.

(7) To establish a new corporation, to be known as the Resolution Trust Corporation, to contain, manage, and resolve failed savings associations.

(8) To provide funds from public and private sources to deal expeditiously with failed depository institutions.

(9) To strengthen the enforcement powers of Federal regulators of depository institutions.

(10) To strengthen the civil sanctions and criminal penalties for defrauding or otherwise damaging depository institutions and their depositors.

TITLE II—FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

SEC. 201. DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO REFERENCES TO INSURED BANK.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1811 et seq.) is amended by striking out "insured bank", "insured banks", and "insured bank's" each place each term appears in such Act (except where any such term is preceded by "member" or "nonmember") and inserting in lieu thereof "insured depository institution", "insured depository institutions", and "insured depository institution's", respectively.

(2) EXCEPTIONS.—The terms "insured bank" and "insured banks" shall not be amended pursuant to paragraph (1) in sections 3(h), 11(h), 11(i), 13(c)(1)(B), 13(f), and 18(d) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

(b) AMENDMENTS TO REFERENCES TO FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD.—The Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1811 et seq.) is amended by striking out "Federal Home Loan Bank Board" each place such term appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision".

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 2 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. MANAGEMENT.

"(a) BOARD OF DIRECTORS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a Board of Directors consisting of 5 members—

"(A) 1 of whom shall be the Comptroller of the Currency;

"(B) 1 of whom shall be the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision; and

"(C) 3 of whom shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among individuals who are citizens of the United States.

"(2) POLITICAL AFFILIATION.—After February 28, 1993, not more than 3 of the members of the Board of Directors may be members of the same political party.

"(b) CHAIRPERSON AND VICE CHAIRPERSON.—

"(1) CHAIRPERSON.—1 of the appointed members shall be designated by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to serve as Chairperson of the Board of Directors for a term of 5 years.

"(2) VICE CHAIRPERSON.—1 of the appointed members shall be designated by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to serve as Vice Chairperson of the Board of Directors.

"(3) ACTING CHAIRPERSON.—In the event of a vacancy in the position of Chairperson of the Board of Directors or during the absence or disability of the Chairperson, the Vice Chairperson shall act as Chairperson.

"(c) TERMS.—

"(1) APPOINTED MEMBERS.—Each appointed member shall be appointed for a term of 6 years.

"(2) INTERIM APPOINTMENTS.—Any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which such member's predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term.

"(3) CONTINUATION OF SERVICE.—The Chairperson, Vice Chairperson, and each appointed member may continue to serve after the expiration of the term of office to which such member was appointed until a successor has been appointed and qualified.

"(d) VACANCY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any vacancy on the Board of Directors shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

"(2) ACTING OFFICIALS MAY SERVE.—In the event of a vacancy in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency or the office of Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision and pending the appointment of a successor, or during the absence or disability of the Comptroller or such Director, the acting Comptroller of the Currency or the acting Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, as the case may be, shall be a member of the Board of Directors in the place of the Comptroller or Director.

"(e) INELIGIBILITY FOR OTHER OFFICES.—

"(1) POSTSERVICE RESTRICTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No member of the Board of Directors may hold any office, position, or employment in any insured depository institution or any depository institution holding company during—

"(i) the time such member is in office; and

"(ii) the 2-year period beginning on the date such member ceases to serve on the Board of Directors.

"(B) EXCEPTION FOR MEMBERS WHO SERVE FULL TERM.—The limitation contained in subparagraph (A)(ii) shall not apply to any member who has ceased to serve on the Board of Directors after serving the full term for which such member was appointed.

"(2) RESTRICTION DURING SERVICE.—No member of the Board of Directors may—

"(A) be an officer or director of any insured depository institution, depository institution holding company, Federal Reserve bank, or Federal home loan bank; or

"(B) hold stock in any insured depository institution or depository institution holding company.

"(3) CERTIFICATION.—Upon taking office, each member of the Board of Directors shall certify under oath that such member has complied with this subsection and such certification shall be filed with the secretary of the Board of Directors.".

(b) TRANSITION PROVISION.—

(1) CHAIRPERSON.—Notwithstanding any provision of section 2 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation on the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 may continue to serve as the Chairperson until the end of the term to which such Chairman was appointed.

(2) MEMBERS.—Notwithstanding any provision of section 2 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, the appointed member of the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation on the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 who is not the Chairman shall continue to serve in office until the earlier of—

(A) the end of the term to which such member was appointed; or

(B) February 28, 1993,

except that such member may continue to serve after the end of such term until a successor has been appointed and qualified.

(3) APPOINTMENTS BEFORE MARCH 1, 1993.—Notwithstanding any provision of section 2 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, the term of any member appointed to the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation before February 28, 1993 (including the term of any Chairperson), shall end on such date.

SEC. 204. DEFINITIONS.

"(x) DEFINITIONS RELATING TO DEFAULT.—

"(1) DEFAULT.—The term 'default' means, with respect to an insured depository institution, any adjudication or other official determination by any court of competent jurisdiction, the appropriate Federal banking agency, or other public authority pursuant to which a conservator, receiver, or other legal custodian is appointed for an insured depository institution or, in the case of a foreign bank having an insured branch, for such branch.

"(2) IN DANGER OF DEFAULT.—The term 'in danger of default' means an insured depository institution with respect to which (or in the case of a foreign bank having an insured branch, with respect to such insured branch) the appropriate Federal banking agency or State chartering authority has advised the Corporation (or, if the appropriate Federal banking agency is the Corporation, the Corporation has determined) that—

"(A) in the opinion of such agency or authority—

"(i) the depository institution or insured branch is not likely to be able to meet the demands of the institution's or branch's depositors or pay the institution's or branch's obligations in the normal course of business; and

"(ii) there is no reasonable prospect that the depository institution or insured branch will be able to meet such demands or pay such obligations without Federal assistance; or

"(B) in the opinion of such agency or authority—

"(i) the depository institution or insured branch has incurred or is likely to incur losses that will deplete all or substantially all of its capital; and

"(ii) there is no reasonable prospect that the capital of the depository institution or insured branch will be replenished without Federal assistance.".

SEC. 205. INSURED SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.

Section 4 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1814) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by striking out "(a) Every bank" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE.—

"(1) BANKS.—Each bank"; and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—Each savings association the accounts of which were insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation on the day before the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989, shall be, without application or approval, an insured depository institution.";

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) by inserting after the 1st sentence the following new sentences: "Any application or notice for membership or to commence or resume business shall be promptly provided by the appropriate Federal banking agency to the Corporation and the Corporation shall have a reasonable period of time to provide comments on such application or notice. Any comments submitted by the Corporation to the appropriate Federal banking agency shall be considered by such agency.";

(B) by striking out the penultimate and the last sentences; and

(C) by striking out "(b) Every national bank" and inserting in lieu thereof "(b) CERTIFICATION BY OTHER BANKING AGENCIES.—Every national bank"; and

(3) by striking out subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subsections:

"(c) CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE AFTER CONVERSION.—Subject to section 5(d)—

"(1) any State depository institution which results from the conversion of any insured Federal depository institution; and

"(2) any Federal depository institution which results from the conversion of any insured State depository institution, shall continue as an insured depository institution.

"(d) CONTINUATION OF INSURANCE AFTER MERGER OR CONSOLIDATION.—Any State depository institution or any Federal depository institution which results from the merger or consolidation of insured depository institutions, or from the merger or consolidation of a noninsured depository institution with an insured depository institution, shall continue as an insured depository institution.".

SEC. 206. APPLICATION PROCESS; INSURANCE FEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 5 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1815) is amended—

(1) by striking out "(a) Subject to the provisions of this Act, any" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) APPLICATION FOR INSURANCE.—

"(1) NATIONAL AND STATE NONMEMBER BANKS; STATE SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—Any";

(2) in the 1st sentence of subsection (a)(1) (as so redesignated by paragraph (1) of this subsection), by striking out the comma after "State nonmember bank" and inserting in lieu thereof "and State savings association,"; and

(3) in the 2nd sentence of subsection (a)(1) (as so redesignated by paragraph (1) of this subsection)—

(A) by striking out the comma after "State nonmember bank" and inserting in lieu thereof "and State savings association,";

(B) by striking out the comma after "such bank" and inserting in lieu thereof "or savings association,"; and

(C) by inserting "or savings association, and, in the case of an application by a State savings association, the Corporation shall notify the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision of the Corporation's approval of such application" before the period at the end;

(4) by adding at the end of subsection (a) the following new paragraphs:

"(2) FEDERAL SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—Any Federal savings association shall become an insured depository institution upon—

"(A) application to the Corporation; and

"(B) receipt by the Corporation of a certificate issued to the Corporation by the Director which meets the requirements of paragraph (4), unless insurance is denied by the Board of Directors.

"(3) INTERIM FEDERAL SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—In the case of any interim Federal savings association which is chartered by the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision and will not open for business, such association shall be an insured depository institution upon the issuance of such association's charter by the Director.

"(4) CERTIFICATE REQUIREMENTS.—Any certificate issued to the Corporation under paragraph (2) shall state that the Federal savings association is authorized to transact business as a savings association and that consideration has been given to the factors enumerated in section 6.

"(5) REVIEW REQUIREMENTS.—In reviewing any certificate and application referred to in paragraph (2), the Board of Directors shall consider the factors described in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5) of section 6 in determining whether to deny insurance.

"(6) NOTICE OF DENIAL OF APPLICATION.—If the Board of Directors, after giving due deference to the determination of the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision with respect to such factors, does not concur in the determination of the Director, the Board of Directors shall promptly notify the Director that insurance has been denied, giving specific reasons in writing for the Corporation's determination with reference to the factors described in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5) of section 6, and no insurance shall be granted.

"(7) VOTING REQUIREMENTS.—The authority of the Board of Directors to make any determination to deny insurance under this subsection may not be delegated by the Board of Directors and any such determination may be made only upon a vote of ¾ of all members of the Board of Directors (excluding the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision).";

(5) in subsection (b)(4), by inserting "and fitness" after character;

(6) in subsection (b)—

(A) by redesignating paragraphs (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (6), (7), and (8), respectively; and

(B) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following:

"(5) the risk presented to the Bank Insurance Fund or the Savings Association Insurance Fund;"; and

(7) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) INSURANCE FEES.—

"(1) UNINSURED INSTITUTIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any institution that becomes insured by the Corporation, and any noninsured branch that becomes insured by the Corporation, shall pay the Corporation any fee which the Corporation may by regulation prescribe, after giving due consideration to the need to establish and maintain reserve ratios in the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund as required by section 7.

"(B) FEE CREDITED TO APPROPRIATE FUND.—The fee paid by the depository institution shall be credited to the Bank Insurance Fund if the depository institution becomes a Bank Insurance Fund member, and to the Savings Association Insurance Fund if the depository institution becomes a Savings Association Insurance Fund member.

"(C) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—Any depository institution that becomes an insured depository institution by operation of section 4(a) shall not pay any fee.

"(2) CONVERSIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—

"(i) PRIOR APPROVAL REQUIRED.—No insured depository institution may participate in a conversion transaction without the prior approval of the Corporation.

"(ii) 5-YEAR MORATORIUM ON CONVERSIONS.—Except as provided in subparagraph (C), the Corporation may not approve any conversion transaction before the end of the 5-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989.

"(B) CONVERSION DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'conversion transaction' means—

"(i) the change of status of an insured depository institution from a Bank Insurance Fund member to a Savings Association Insurance Fund member or from a Savings Association Insurance Fund member to a Bank Insurance Fund member;

"(ii) the merger or consolidation of a Bank Insurance Fund member with a Savings Association Insurance Fund member;

"(iii) the assumption of any liability by—

"(I) any Bank Insurance Fund member to pay any deposits of a Savings Association Insurance Fund member; or

"(II) any Savings Association Insurance Fund member to pay any deposits of a Bank Insurance Fund member;

"(iv) the transfer of assets of—

"(I) any Bank Insurance Fund member to any Savings Association Insurance Fund member in consideration of the assumption of liabilities for any portion of the deposits of such Bank Insurance Fund member; or

"(II) any Savings Association Insurance Fund member to any Bank Insurance Fund member in consideration of the assumption of liabilities for any portion of the deposits of such Savings Association Insurance Fund member.

"(C) APPROVAL DURING MORATORIUM.—The Corporation may approve a conversion transaction at any time if—

"(i) the conversion transaction affects an insubstantial portion, as determined by the Corporation, of the total deposits of each depository institution participating in the conversion transaction;

"(ii) the conversion occurs in connection with the acquisition of a Savings Association Insurance Fund member in default or in danger of default, and the Corporation determines that the estimated financial benefits to the Savings Association Insurance Fund or Resolution Trust Corporation equal or exceed the Corporation's estimate of loss of assessment income to such insurance fund over the remaining balance of the 5-year period referred to in subparagraph (A), and the Resolution Trust Corporation concurs in the Corporation's determination; or

"(iii) the conversion occurs in connection with the acquisition of a Bank Insurance Fund member in default or in danger of default and the Corporation determines that the estimated financial benefits to the Bank Insurance Fund equal or exceed the Corporation's estimate of the loss of assessment income to the insurance fund over the remaining balance of the 5-year period referred to in subparagraph (A).

"(D) CERTAIN TRANSFERS DEEMED TO AFFECT INSUBSTANTIAL PORTION OF TOTAL DEPOSITS.—For purposes of subparagraph (C)(i), any conversion transaction shall be deemed to affect an insubstantial portion of the total deposits of an insured depository institution, to the extent the aggregate amount of the total deposits transferred in such transaction and in all conversion transactions occurring after the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 does not exceed 35 percent of the lesser of—

"(i) the amount which is equal to the sum of—

"(I) the total deposits of such insured depository institution on May 1, 1989; and

"(II) the total amount of net interest credited to the depository institution's deposits during the period beginning on May 1, 1989, and ending on the date of the transfer of deposits in connection with such transaction; or

"(ii) the amount which is equal to the total deposits of such insured depository institution on the date of the transfer of deposits in connection with such transaction.

"(E) EXIT AND ENTRANCE FEES.—Each insured depository institution participating in a conversion transaction shall pay—

"(i) in the case of a conversion transaction in which the resulting or acquiring depository institution is not a Savings Association Insurance Fund member, an exit fee (in an amount to be determined and assessed in accordance with subparagraph (F)) which—

"(I) shall be deposited in the Savings Association Insurance Fund; or

"(II) shall be paid to the Financing Corporation, if the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the Financing Corporation has exhausted all other sources of funding for interest payments on the obligations of the Financing Corporation and orders that such fees be paid to the Financing Corporation;

"(ii) in the case of a conversion transaction in which the resulting or acquiring depository institution is not a Bank Insurance Fund member, an exit fee in an amount to be determined by the Corporation (and assessed in accordance with subparagraph (F)(ii)) which shall be deposited in the Bank Insurance Fund; and

"(iii) an entrance fee in an amount to be determined by the Corporation (and assessed in accordance with subparagraph (F)(ii)), except that—

"(I) in the case of a conversion transaction in which the resulting or acquiring depository institution is a Bank Insurance Fund member, the fee shall be the approximate amount which the Corporation calculates as necessary to prevent dilution of the Bank Insurance Fund, and shall be paid to the Bank Insurance Fund; and

"(II) in the case of a conversion transaction in which the resulting or acquiring depository institution is a Savings Association Insurance Fund member, the fee shall be the approximate amount which the Corporation calculates as necessary to prevent dilution of the Savings Association Insurance Fund, and shall be paid to the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(F) ASSESSMENT OF EXIT AND ENTRANCE FEES.—

"(i) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF EXIT FEES.—

"(I) CONVERSIONS BEFORE JANUARY 1, 1997.—In the case of any exit fee assessed under subparagraph (E)(i) for any conversion transaction consummated before January 1, 1997, the amount of such fee shall be determined jointly by the Corporation and the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(II) ASSESSMENTS AFTER DECEMBER, 31, 1996.—In the case of any exit fee assessed under subparagraph (E)(i) for any conversion transaction consummated after December 31, 1996, the amount of such fee shall be determined by the Corporation.

"(ii) PROCEDURES.—The Corporation shall prescribe, by regulation, procedures for assessing any exit or entrance fee under subparagraph (E).

"(G) CHARTER CONVERSION OF SAIF MEMBERS.—This subsection shall not be construed as prohibiting any savings association which is a Savings Association Insurance Fund member from converting to a bank charter during the period described in subparagraph (A)(ii) if the resulting bank remains a Savings Association Insurance Fund member.

"(3) OPTIONAL CONVERSION THROUGH MERGER.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding paragraph (2)(A), any bank holding company that controls any savings association may merge or consolidate the assets and liabilities of such savings association with, or transfer such assets and liabilities to, any subsidiary bank which is a Bank Insurance Fund member with the approval of the appropriate Federal banking agency and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

"(B) ASSESSMENTS BY SAIF ON DEPOSITS ATTRIBUTABLE TO FORMER SAVINGS ASSOCIATION.—That portion of the average assessment base of any subsidiary bank referred to in subparagraph (A) for any semiannual period which is equal to the adjusted attributable deposit amount (determined under subparagraph (C) with respect to the transaction described in subparagraph (A)) shall—

"(i) be subject to assessment at the assessment rate applicable under section 7 for Savings Association Insurance Fund members;

"(ii) shall not be taken into account for purposes of any assessment under section 7 for Bank Insurance Fund members; and

"(iii) shall be treated as deposits which are insured by the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(C) DETERMINATION OF ADJUSTED ATTRIBUTABLE DEPOSIT AMOUNT.—The adjusted attributable deposit amount which shall be taken into account by any bank subsidiary referred to in subparagraph (A) for purposes of determining the amount of the assessment under subparagraph (B)(i) for any semiannual period is the amount which is equal to the sum of—

"(i) the amount of any deposits acquired by such bank subsidiary in connection with any transaction described in subparagraph (A) (as determined at the time of such transaction);

"(ii) the total of the amounts determined under clause (iii) for semiannual periods preceding the semiannual period for which the determination is being made under this subparagraph; and

"(iii) the amount by which the sum of the amounts described in clauses (i) and (ii) would have increased during the preceding semiannual period (other than any semiannual period beginning before the date of such transaction) if such increase occurred at a rate equal to the greater of—

"(I) an annual rate of 7 percent; or

"(II) the annual rate of growth of deposits of such subsidiary bank minus the amount of any deposits acquired through the acquisition, in whole or in part, of a Bank Insurance Fund member during such semiannual period.

"(D) DEPOSIT OF ASSESSMENT.—The amount of the assessment referred to in subparagraph (B)(i) shall be deposited in the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(E) CONDITIONS FOR FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD APPROVAL.—The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may not approve any application by any bank holding company to engage in any transaction described in subparagraph (A) unless such Board determines that—

"(i) the amount which is equal to the aggregate amount of the total assets of all depository institution subsidiaries of such bank holding company is not less than the amount which is equal to 200 percent of the total assets of the savings association (at the time of the proposed transaction);

"(ii) the bank holding company and all bank subsidiaries of such holding company will meet all applicable capital standards upon consummation of the proposed transaction;

"(iii) the transaction is not in substance the acquisition of any Bank Insurance Fund member bank by any Savings Association Insurance Fund member;

"(iv) in the case of any transaction which occurs—

"(I) during the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989, the savings association had tangible capital of less than 4 percent during the preceding quarter; and

"(II) during the 1-year period beginning after the end of the 1-year period referred to in subclause (I), the savings association had tangible capital of less than 5 percent during the preceding quarter; and

"(v) the transaction would comply with the requirements of section 3(d) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 if, at the time of such transaction, the savings association were a State bank which the bank holding company was applying to acquire.

"(F) ALLOCATION OF COSTS IN EVENT OF DEFAULT.—If any subsidiary bank referred to in subparagraph (A) is in default or danger of default at any time before this paragraph ceases to apply, any loss incurred by the Corporation shall be allocated between the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund, in amounts reflecting the amount of insured deposits of such bank subsidiary (other than the adjusted attributable deposit amount) which is insured by the Bank Insurance Fund and the adjusted attributable deposit amount which is insured by the Savings Association Insurance Fund pursuant to subparagraph (B)(iii).

"(G) SUBSEQUENT APPROVAL OF CONVERSION TRANSACTION.—This paragraph shall cease to apply if—

"(i) after the end of the 5-year period referred to in paragraph (2)(A), the Corporation approves an application by the bank described in subparagraph (A) to treat the transaction described in subparagraph (A) as a conversion transaction; and

"(ii) such bank pays the amount of any exit and entrance fee assessed by the Corporation under paragraph (2)(E) with respect to such transaction.

"(e) LIABILITY OF COMMONLY CONTROLLED DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—

"(A) LIABILITY ESTABLISHED.—Any insured depository institution shall be liable for any loss incurred by the Corporation, or any loss which the Corporation reasonably anticipates incurring, after the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 in connection with—

"(i) the default of a commonly controlled insured depository institution; or

"(ii) any assistance provided by the Corporation to any commonly controlled insured depository institution in danger of default.

"(B) PAYMENT UPON NOTICE.—An insured depository institution shall pay the amount of any liability to the Corporation under subparagraph (A) upon receipt of written notice by the Corporation in accordance with this subsection.

"(C) NOTICE REQUIRED TO BE PROVIDED WITHIN 2 YEARS OF LOSS.—No insured depository institution shall be liable to the Corporation under subparagraph (A) if written notice with respect to such liability is not received by such institution before the end of the 2-year period beginning on the date the Corporation incurred the loss.

"(2) AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION; PROCEDURES.—

"(A) USE OF ESTIMATES.—When an insured depository institution is in default or requires assistance to prevent default, the Corporation shall—

"(i) in good faith, estimate the amount of the loss the Corporation will incur from such default or assistance;

"(ii) if, with respect to such insured depository institution, there is more than 1 commonly controlled insured depository institution, estimate the amount of each such commonly controlled depository institution's share of such liability; and

"(iii) advise each commonly controlled depository institution of the Corporation's estimate of the amount of such institution's liability for such losses.

"(B) PROCEDURES; IMMEDIATE PAYMENT.—The Corporation, after consultation with the appropriate Federal banking agency and the appropriate State chartering agency, shall—

"(i) on a case-by-case basis, establish the procedures and schedule under which any insured depository institution shall reimburse the Corporation for such institution's liability under paragraph (1) in connection with any commonly controlled insured depository institution; or

"(ii) require any insured depository institution to make immediate payment of the amount of such institution's liability under paragraph (1) in connection with any commonly controlled insured depository institution.

"(C) PRIORITY.—The liability of any insured depository institution under this subsection shall have priority with respect to other obligations and liabilities as follows:

"(i) SUPERIORITY.—The liability shall be superior to the following obligations and liabilities of the depository institution:

"(I) Any obligation to shareholders arising as a result of their status as shareholders (including any depository institution holding company or any shareholder or creditor of such company).

"(II) Any obligation or liability owed to any affiliate of the depository institution (including any other insured depository institution), other than any secured obligation which was secured as of May 1, 1989.

"(ii) SUBORDINATION.—The liability shall be subordinate in right and payment to the following obligations and liabilities of the depository institution:

"(I) Any deposit liability (which is not a liability described in clause (i)(II)).

"(II) Any secured obligation, other than any obligation owed to any affiliate of the depository institution (including any other insured depository institution) which was secured after May 1, 1989.

"(III) Any other general or senior liability (which is not a liability described in clause (i)).

"(IV) Any obligation subordinated to depositors or other general creditors (which is not an obligation described in clause (i)).

"(D) ADJUSTMENT OF ESTIMATED PAYMENT.—

"(i) OVERPAYMENT.—If the amount of compensation estimated by and paid to the Corporation by 1 or more such commonly controlled depository institutions is greater than the actual loss incurred by the Corporation, the Corporation shall reimburse each such commonly controlled depository institution its pro rata share of any overpayment.

"(ii) UNDERPAYMENT.—If the amount of compensation estimated by and paid to the Corporation by 1 or more such commonly controlled depository institutions is less than the actual loss incurred by the Corporation, the Corporation shall redetermine in its discretion the liability of each such commonly controlled depository institution to the Corporation and shall require each such commonly controlled depository institution to make payment of any additional liability to the Corporation.

"(3) REVIEW.—

"(A) JUDICIAL.—Actions of the Corporation shall be reviewable pursuant to chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.

"(B) ADMINISTRATIVE.—The Corporation shall prescribe regulations and establish administrative procedures which provide for a hearing on the record for the review of—

"(i) the amount of any loss incurred by the Corporation in connection with any insured depository institution;

"(ii) the liability of individual commonly controlled depository institutions for the amount of such loss; and

"(iii) the schedule of payments to be made by such commonly controlled depository institutions.

"(4) LIMITATION ON RIGHTS OF PRIVATE PARTIES.—To the extent the exercise of any right or power of any person would impair the ability of any insured depository institution to perform such institution's obligations under this subsection—

"(i) the obligations of such insured depository institution shall supersede such right or power; and

"(ii) no court may give effect to such right or power with respect to such insured depository institution.

"(5) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Corporation, in its discretion, may exempt any insured depository institution from the provisions of this subsection if the Corporation determines that such exemption is in the best interests of the Bank Insurance Fund or the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(B) CONDITION.—During the period any exemption granted to any insured depository institution under subparagraph (A) or (C) is in effect, such insured depository institution and all other insured depository institution affiliates of such depository institution shall comply fully with the restrictions of sections 23A and 23B of the Federal Reserve Act without regard to section 23A(d)(1).

"(C) LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The Corporation may, in its discretion, exempt any limited partnership and any affiliate of any limited partnership (other than any insured depository institution which is a majority owned subsidiary of such partnership) from the provisions of this subsection if such limited partnership or affiliate has filed a registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission on or before April 10, 1989, indicating that as of the date of such filing such partnership intended to acquire 1 or more insured depository institutions.

"(ii) REVIEW AND NOTICE.—Within 10 business days after the date of submission of any request for an exemption under this subparagraph together with such information as shall be reasonably requested by the Corporation, the Corporation shall make a determination on the request and shall so advise the applicant.

"(6) 5-YEAR TRANSITION RULE.—During the 5-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989—

"(A) no Savings Association Insurance Fund member shall have any liability to the Corporation under this subsection arising out of assistance provided by the Corporation or any loss incurred by the Corporation as a result of the default of a Bank Insurance Fund member which was acquired by such Savings Association Insurance Fund member or any affiliate of such member before the date of the enactment of such Act; and

"(B) no Bank Insurance Fund member shall have such liability with respect to assistance provided by or loss incurred by the Corporation as a result of the default of a Savings Association Insurance Fund member which was acquired by such Bank Insurance Fund member or any affiliate of such member before the date of the enactment of such Act.

"(7) EXCLUSION FOR INSTITUTIONS ACQUIRED IN DEBT COLLECTIONS.—Any depository institution shall not be treated as commonly controlled, for purposes of this subsection, during the 5-year period beginning on the date of an acquisition described in subparagraph (A) or such longer period as the Corporation may determine after written application by the acquirer, if—

"(A) 1 depository institution controls another by virtue of ownership of voting shares acquired in securing or collecting a debt previously contracted in good faith; and

"(B) during the period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 and ending upon the expiration of the exclusion, the controlling bank and all other insured depository institution affiliates of such controlling bank comply fully with the restrictions of sections 23A and 23B of the Federal Reserve Act, without regard to section 23A(d)(1) of such Act, in transactions with the acquired insured depository institution.

"(8) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN FSLIC ASSISTED INSTITUTIONS.—No depository institution shall have any liability to the Corporation under this subsection as the result of the default of, or assistance provided with respect to, an insured depository institution which is an affiliate of such depository institution if—

"(A) such affiliate was receiving cash payments from the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation under an assistance agreement or note entered into before the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989;

"(B) the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, or such other entity which has succeeded to the payment obligations of such Corporation with respect to such assistance agreement or note, is unable to continue such payments; and

"(C) such affiliate—

"(i) is in default or in need of assistance solely as a result of the failure to meet the payment obligations referred to in subparagraph (B); and

"(ii) is not otherwise in breach of the terms of any assistance agreement or note which would authorize the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation or such other successor entity, pursuant to the terms of such assistance agreement or note, to refuse to make such payments.

"(9) COMMONLY CONTROLLED DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, depository institutions are commonly controlled if—

"(A) such institutions are controlled by the same depository institution holding company (including any company required to file reports pursuant to section 4(f)(6) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956); or

"(B) 1 depository institution is controlled by another depository institution.".

(b) NEWLY INSURED THRIFT PROVISION.—Any insured depository institution (as defined in section 3(c)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as added by section 204(c) of this Act)—

(1) which was an insured institution (as defined in section 401(a) of the National Housing Act, as in effect before the date of the enactment of this Act) on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act;

(2) the board of directors of which determined, before April 1, 1987, to terminate such association's status as an insured institution (as so defined) as evidenced in sworn minutes of the board of directors meeting held before such date;

(3) had insured deposits of less than $11,000,000 on April 1, 1987; and

(4) was an insured institution (as so defined) for less than 1 year as of April 1, 1987, may cease to be a Savings Association Insurance Fund member and become a Bank Insurance Fund member at any time during the 2-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act without the approval of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation under section 5(d)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (as added by subsection (a) of this section) and without incurring any liability for any exit or entrance fee imposed under such section 5(d)(2).

SEC. 207. INSURABILITY FACTORS.

Section 6 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1816) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED.

"The factors that are required, under section 4, to be considered in connection with, and enumerated in, any certificate issued pursuant to section 4 and that are required, under section 5, to be considered by the Board of Directors in connection with any determination by such Board pursuant to section 5 are the following:

"(1) The financial history and condition of the depository institution.

"(2) The adequacy of the depository institution's capital structure.

"(3) The future earnings prospects of the depository institution.

"(4) The general character and fitness of the management of the depository institution.

"(5) The risk presented by such depository institution to the Bank Insurance Fund or the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(6) The convenience and needs of the community to be served by such depository institution.

"(7) Whether the depository institution's corporate powers are consistent with the purposes of this Act.".

SEC. 208. ASSESSMENTS.

Section 7 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(2)—

(A) by inserting ", the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, the Federal Housing Finance Board, any Federal home loan bank," after "Comptroller of the Currency" each place such term appears (except after "Comptroller of the Currency,");

(B) by inserting "the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, the Federal Housing Finance Board, any Federal home loan bank," after "Comptroller of the Currency,";

(C) by striking out "either" in the 1st sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "any";

(D) in the last sentence of subparagraph (A), by inserting "or savings associations" after "banks";

(E) by striking out "State nonmember bank (except a District bank)" and inserting in lieu thereof "depository institution"; and

(F) by striking out subparagraph (B) and inserting the following:

"(B) ADDITIONAL REPORTS.—The Board of Directors may from time to time require any insured depository institution to file such additional reports as the Corporation, after agreement with the Comptroller of the Currency, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, as appropriate, may deem advisable for insurance purposes.";

(2) in subsection (a)(3)—

(A) by striking out "Each insured State nonmember bank" and all that follows through "four reports" and inserting the following: "Each insured depository institution shall make to the appropriate Federal banking agency 4 reports";

(B) by striking out "bank" each place such term appears in the 2nd, 5th, and 6th sentences and inserting in lieu thereof "depository institution";

(C) by striking out "insured national, District" and all that follows through "member bank" in the 7th sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "insured depository institution"; and

(D) by inserting "or savings associations" after "banks" in the last sentence;

(3) in subsection (a)(4), by striking out "bank", "bank's", and "banks" each place such terms appear (except in "foreign bank") and inserting in lieu thereof "depository institution", "depository institution's", and "depository institutions", respectively;

(4) by striking out paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b) and inserting the following:

"(1) ASSESSMENT RATES.—

"(A) ANNUAL ASSESSMENT RATES PRESCRIBED.—

"(i) The Corporation shall set assessment rates for insured depository institutions annually.

"(ii) The Corporation shall fix the annual assessment rate of Bank Insurance Fund members independently from the annual assessment rate for Savings Association Insurance Fund members.

"(iii) The Corporation shall, by September 30 of each year, announce the assessment rates for the succeeding calendar year.

"(B) DESIGNATED RESERVE RATIO DEFINED.—

"(i) The designated reserve ratio of the Bank Insurance Fund for each year shall be—

"(I) 1.25 percent of estimated insured deposits; or

"(II) such higher percentage of estimated insured deposits, not exceeding 1.50 percent, as the Board of Directors determines for that year to be justified by circumstances that raise a significant risk of substantial future losses to the Bank Insurance Fund.

"(ii) The designated reserve ratio of the Savings Association Insurance Fund for each year shall be—

"(I) 1.25 percent of estimated insured deposits; or

"(II) such higher percentage of estimated insured deposits, not exceeding 1.50 percent, as the Board of Directors determines for that year to be justified by circumstances that raise a significant risk of substantial future losses to the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(iii) The Board of Directors shall—

"(I) maintain reserves in the Bank Insurance Fund received pursuant to clause (i)(II) as Supplemental Reserves in the Bank Insurance Fund;

"(II) allocate each calendar quarter to an Earnings Participation Account in the Bank Insurance Fund the investment income earned by the Bank Insurance Fund on such Supplemental Reserves in the preceding calendar quarter;

"(III) distribute such Earnings Participation Account at the conclusion of each calendar year to Bank Insurance Fund members; and

"(IV) distribute such Supplemental Reserves to Bank Insurance Fund members if and to the extent the Corporation determines that such Supplemental Reserves are not needed to satisfy the projected designated reserve ratio for the next succeeding calendar year.

"(iv) The Board of Directors shall—

"(I) maintain reserves in the Savings Association Insurance Fund received pursuant to clause (ii)(II) as Supplemental Reserves in the Savings Association Insurance Fund;

"(II) allocate each calendar quarter to an Earnings Participation Account in the Savings Association Insurance Fund the investment income earned by the Savings Association Insurance Fund on such Supplemental Reserves in the preceding calendar quarter;

"(III) distribute such Earnings Participation Account at the conclusion of each calendar year to Savings Association Insurance Fund members; and

"(IV) distribute such Supplemental Reserves to Savings Association Insurance Fund members if and to the extent the Corporation determines that such Supplemental Reserves are not needed to satisfy the projected designated reserve ratio for the next succeeding calendar year.

"(C) ASSESSMENT RATE FOR BANK INSURANCE FUND MEMBERS.—The annual assessment rate for Bank Insurance Fund members shall be—

"(i) until December 31, 1989, 1/12 of 1 percent;

"(ii) from January 1, 1990, through December 31, 1990, 0.12 percent;

"(iii) on and after January 1, 1991, 0.15 percent;

"(iv) on January 1 of a calendar year in which the reserve ratio of the Bank Insurance Fund is expected to be less than the designated reserve ratio by determination of the Board of Directors, such rate determined by the Board of Directors to be appropriate to restore the reserve ratio to the designated reserve ratio within a reasonable period of time, after taking into consideration the expected operating expenses, case resolution expenditures, and investment income of the Bank Insurance Fund, and the impact on insured bank earnings and capitalization, except that—

"(I) from the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 until the earlier of January 1, 1995, or January 1 of the calendar year in which the Bank Insurance Fund reserve ratio is expected to first attain the designated reserve ratio, the rate shall be as specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of this subparagraph so long as the Bank Insurance Fund reserve ratio is increasing on a calendar year basis;

"(II) the rate shall not exceed 0.325 percent; and

"(III) the increase in the rate in any 1 year shall not exceed 0.075 percent; and

"(v) sufficient to ensure that for each member in each year the assessment shall not be less than $1,000.

"(D) ASSESSMENT RATE FOR SAVINGS ASSOCIATION INSURANCE FUND MEMBERS.—The annual assessment rate for Savings Association Insurance Fund members shall be—

"(i) until December 31, 1990, 0.208 percent;

"(ii) from January 1, 1991, through December 31, 1993, 0.23 percent;

"(iii) from January 1, 1994, through December 31, 1997, 0.18 percent;

"(iv) on and after January 1, 1998, 0.15 percent;

"(v) on January 1 of a calendar year in which the reserve ratio of the Savings Association Insurance Fund is expected to be less than the designated reserve ratio by determination of the Board of Directors, such rate determined by the Board of Directors to be appropriate to restore the reserve ratio to the designated reserve ratio within a reasonable period of time, after taking into consideration the expected expenses and income of the Savings Association Insurance Fund, and the effect on insured savings association earnings and capitalization, except that—

"(I) from the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 through December 31, 1994, the rate shall be as specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) above;

"(II) the rate shall not exceed 0.325 percent; and

"(III) the increase in the rate in any one year shall not exceed 0.075 percent; and

"(v) sufficient to ensure that for each member in each year the assessment shall not be less than $1,000.

"(E) FINANCING CORPORATION AND FUNDING CORPORATION ASSESSMENTS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this paragraph, amounts assessed by the Financing Corporation and the Funding Corporation under sections 21 and 21B, respectively, of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act against Savings Association Insurance Fund members, shall be subtracted from the amounts authorized to be assessed by the Corporation under this paragraph.

"(F) SPECIAL RULE TO ALLOW CONTINUING ASSESSMENTS BY THE FINANCING CORPORATION AND THE FUNDING CORPORATION DURING PREMIUM YEAR ADJUSTMENTS.—In order to ensure that the Financing Corporation and the Resolution Funding Corporation obtain sufficient funds for interest payments on obligations of such corporations, the Corporation, in coordination with the Financing Corporation and the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to allow the Financing Corporation and the Resolution Funding Corporation to impose assessments against Savings Association Insurance Fund members pursuant to sections 21 and 21B, respectively, of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act during the period required to change such members' premium year from the 1-year period applicable under section 404(b) of the National Housing Act (as in effect before the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989) to a calendar year basis.

"(2) ASSESSMENT PROCEDURES.—

"(A) SEMIANNUAL ASSESSMENTS.—Except as provided in subsection (c)(2)—

"(i) the semiannual assessment due from any Bank Insurance Fund member for any semiannual period shall be equal to the product of—

"(I) ½ the annual assessment rate applicable to such Bank Insurance Fund member; and

"(II) such Bank Insurance Fund member's average assessment base for the immediately preceding semiannual period; and

"(ii) the semiannual assessment due from any Savings Association Insurance Fund member for any semiannual period shall be equal to the product of—

"(I) ½ the annual assessment rate applicable to such Savings Association Insurance Fund member; and

"(II) such Savings Association Insurance Fund member's average assessment base for the immediately preceding semiannual period.

"(B) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term 'semiannual period' means a period beginning on January 1 of any calendar year and ending on June 30 of the same year, or a period beginning on July 1 of any calendar year and ending on December 31 of the same year.";

(5) by amending subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d) ASSESSMENT CREDITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—

"(A) By September 30 of each calendar year, the Corporation shall prescribe and publish the aggregate amount to be credited to insured depository institutions in the succeeding calendar year.

"(B) Each insured depository institution shall be notified by the Corporation of the percentage by which the assessment rate should be reduced in computing its net premium.

"(C) Any outstanding obligations owed to the Corporation by an individual insured depository institution shall be deducted from any assessment credit to be credited to such depository institution.

"(2) ASSESSMENT CREDIT FOR INSURED BANKS.—

"(A) CREDIT BARRED.—The Board of Directors shall not prescribe an assessment credit to Bank Insurance Fund members if the Board of Directors determines that the Bank Insurance Fund reserve ratio is expected to be equal to or less than the designated reserve ratio in the coming year after taking into consideration such Fund's expected expenses and income.

"(B) CREDIT AUTHORIZED.—If the Board of Directors determines, after taking into consideration the Bank Insurance Fund's expected operating expenses, case resolution expenditures, investment income, and assessment income, that the Bank Insurance Fund reserve ratio is expected to exceed the designated reserve ratio in the succeeding year, the Board of Directors shall prescribe an assessment credit to Bank Insurance Fund members in such succeeding calendar year equal to the lesser of—

"(i) the amount necessary to reduce the Bank Insurance Fund reserve ratio to the designated reserve ratio; or

"(ii) 100 percent of the net assessment income to be received from Bank Insurance Fund members in such succeeding year.

"(3) ASSESSMENT CREDIT FOR INSURED SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS.—

"(A) CREDIT BARRED.—The Board of Directors shall not prescribe an assessment credit to Savings Association Insurance Fund members if the Board of Directors determines that the Savings Association Insurance Fund reserve ratio is expected to be equal to or less than the designated reserve ratio in the coming year after taking into consideration such Fund's expected expenses and income.

"(B) CREDIT AUTHORIZED.—If the Board of Directors determines, after taking into consideration the Savings Association Insurance Fund's expected expenses and income, that the Savings Association Insurance Fund reserve ratio is expected to exceed the designated reserve ratio in the succeeding year, the Board of Directors shall prescribe an assessment credit to Savings Association Insurance Fund members in such succeeding calendar year equal to the lesser of—

"(i) the amount necessary to reduce the Savings Association Insurance Fund reserve ratio to the designated reserve ratio; or

"(ii) 100 percent of the net assessment income to be received from Savings Association Insurance Fund members in such succeeding year.

"(4) NET ASSESSMENT INCOME DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'net assessment income' means—

"(i) with respect to the Bank Insurance Fund, the Bank Insurance Fund net assessment income (as defined in subparagraph (B)); and

"(ii) with respect to the Savings Association Insurance Fund, the Savings Association Insurance Fund net assessment income (as defined in subparagraph (C)).

"(B) BANK INSURANCE FUND NET ASSESSMENT INCOME.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The term 'Bank Insurance Fund net assessment income' means—

"(I) the total assessments which become due during the calendar year with respect to members of such Fund, minus

"(II) the sum of the amount of the operating costs and expenses described in clause (ii) and the amount by which the Bank Insurance Fund's insurance costs described in clause (iii) exceed its investment income for the calendar year.

"(ii) OPERATING COST AND EXPENSES.—For the purposes of this subparagraph, the operating costs and expenses to be deducted from assessments include the operating costs and expenses of—

"(I) the Corporation for the calendar year directly attributable to the Bank Insurance Fund; and

"(II) the Bank Insurance Fund.

"(iii) INSURANCE COSTS.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the insurance costs include—

"(I) additions to the Bank Insurance Fund's reserve to provide for insurance losses during the calendar year, excluding any adjustments to such reserve which result in a reduction of such reserve; and

"(II) the insurance losses sustained in such calendar year.

"(C) SAVINGS ASSOCIATION INSURANCE FUND NET ASSESSMENT INCOME.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The term 'Savings Association Insurance Fund net assessment income' means—

"(I) the total assessments which become due during the calendar year with respect to members of such Fund, minus

"(II) the sum of the amount of the operating costs and expenses described in clause (ii) and the amount by which the Savings Association Insurance Fund's insurance costs described in clause (iii) exceed its investment income for the calendar year.

"(ii) OPERATING COST AND EXPENSES.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the operating costs and expenses to be deducted from assessments include the operating costs and expenses of—

"(I) the Corporation for the calendar year directly attributable to the Savings Association Insurance Fund; and

"(II) the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(iii) INSURANCE COSTS.—For the purposes of this subparagraph, the insurance costs include—

"(I) additions to the Savings Association Insurance Fund's reserve to provide for insurance losses during the calendar year, excluding any adjustments to such reserve which result in a reduction of such reserve; and

"(II) the insurance losses sustained in such calendar year.

"(5) INVESTMENT INCOME DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'investment income' means—

"(A) for the Bank Insurance Fund, interest, dividends, and net market gains earned on investments of the Bank Insurance Fund; and

"(B) for the Savings Association Insurance Fund, interest, dividends, and net market gains earned on investments of the Savings Association Insurance Fund.".

(6) in paragraphs (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), and (8) of subsection (b), by striking out "bank", "bank's", and "banks" each place such term appears (except where "foreign" precedes any of such terms) and inserting in lieu thereof "depository institution", "depository institution's", and "depository institutions", respectively;

(7) in subsections (c), (e), (f), (g), and (i), by striking out "bank" each place such term appears and inserting in lieu thereof "depository institution";

(8) in subsection (j)(1), by striking out the last sentence;

(9) in subsection (j)(2)(A)—

(A) by striking out "failure" and inserting in lieu thereof "default"; and

(B) by striking out "bank" each place such term appears and inserting in lieu thereof "depository institution";

(10) in subsection (j)(2)(D), by inserting "unless such agency determines that an emergency exists," after "shall,";

(11) in subsection (j)(7)—

(A) by striking out "or" at the end of subparagraph (D);

(B) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (E) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(F) the appropriate Federal banking agency determines that the proposed transaction would result in an adverse effect on the Bank Insurance Fund or the Savings Association Insurance Fund.";

(12) by amending subsection (j)(17) to read as follows:

"(17) EXCEPTIONS.—This subsection shall not apply with respect to a transaction which is subject to—

"(A) section 3 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956;

"(B) section 18(c) of this Act; or

"(C) section 10 of the Home Owners' Loan Act.";

(13) by adding at the end of subsection (j) the following new paragraph:

"(18) APPLICABILITY OF CHANGE IN CONTROL PROVISIONS TO OTHER INSTITUTIONS.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'insured depository institution' includes—

"(A) any depository institution holding company; and

"(B) any other company which controls an insured depository institution and is not a depository institution holding company.";

(14) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(l) DESIGNATION OF FUND MEMBERSHIP FOR NEWLY INSURED DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS; DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) BANK INSURANCE FUND.—Any institution which—

"(A) becomes an insured depository institution; and

"(B) does not become a Savings Association Insurance Fund member pursuant to paragraph (2), shall be a Bank Insurance Fund member.

"(2) SAVINGS ASSOCIATION INSURANCE FUND.—Any savings association, other than any Federal savings bank chartered pursuant to section 5(o) of the Home Owners' Loan Act, which becomes an insured depository institution shall be a Savings Association Insurance Fund member.

"(3) TRANSITION PROVISION.—

"(A) BANK INSURANCE FUND.—Any depository institution the deposits of which were insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation on the day before the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989, including—

"(i) any Federal savings bank chartered pursuant to section 5(o) of the Home Owners' Loan Act; and

"(ii) any cooperative bank, shall be a Bank Insurance Fund member as of such date of enactment.

"(B) SAVINGS ASSOCIATION INSURANCE FUND.—Any savings association which is an insured depository institution by operation of section 4(a)(2) shall be a Savings Association Insurance Fund member as of the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989.

"(4) BANK INSURANCE FUND MEMBER.—The term 'Bank Insurance Fund member' means any depository institution the deposits of which are insured by the Bank Insurance Fund.

"(5) SAVINGS ASSOCIATION INSURANCE FUND MEMBER.—The term 'Savings Association Insurance Fund member' means any depository institution the deposits of which are insured by the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(6) BANK INSURANCE FUND RESERVE RATIO.—The term 'Bank Insurance Fund reserve ratio' means the ratio of the net worth of the Bank Insurance Fund to the value of the aggregate estimated insured deposits held in all Bank Insurance Fund members.

"(7) SAVINGS ASSOCIATION INSURANCE FUND RESERVE RATIO.—The term 'Savings Association Insurance Fund reserve ratio' means the ratio of the value of the net worth of the Savings Association Insurance Fund to the value of the aggregate estimated insured deposits held in all Savings Association Insurance Fund members.";

(15) by adding after the subsection added by paragraph (14) of this section the following new subsections:

"(m) SECONDARY RESERVE OFFSETS AGAINST PREMIUMS.—

"(1) OFFSETS IN CALENDAR YEARS BEGINNING BEFORE 1993.—Subject to the maximum amount limitation contained in paragraph (2) and notwithstanding any other provision of law, any insured savings association may offset such association's pro rata share of the statutorily prescribed amount against any premium assessed against such association under subsection (b) of this section for any calendar year beginning before 1993.

"(2) ANNUAL MAXIMUM AMOUNT LIMITATION.—The amount of any offset allowed for any savings association under paragraph (1) for any calendar year beginning before 1993 shall not exceed an amount which is equal to 20 percent of such association's pro rata share of the statutorily prescribed amount (as computed for such calendar year).

"(3) OFFSETS IN CALENDAR YEARS BEGINNING AFTER 1992.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a savings association may offset such association's pro rata share of the statutorily prescribed amount against any premium assessed against such association under subsection (b) for any calendar year beginning after 1992.

"(4) TRANSFERABILITY.—No right, title, or interest of any insured depository institution in or with respect to its pro rata share of the secondary reserve shall be assignable or transferable whether by operation of law or otherwise, except to the extent that the Corporation may provide for transfer of such pro rata share in cases of merger or consolidation, transfer of bulk assets or assumption of liabilities, and similar transactions, as defined by the Corporation for purposes of this paragraph.

"(5) PRO RATA DISTRIBUTION ON TERMINATION OF INSURED STATUS.—If—

"(A) the status of any savings association as an insured depository institution is terminated pursuant to any provision of section 8 or the insurance of accounts of any savings association institution is otherwise terminated;

"(B) a receiver or other legal custodian is appointed for the purpose of liquidation or winding up the affairs of any savings association; or

"(C) the Corporation makes a determination that for the purposes of this subsection any savings association has otherwise gone into liquidation, the Corporation shall pay in cash to such institution its pro rata share of the secondary reserve, in accordance with such terms and conditions as the Corporation may prescribe, or, at the option of the Corporation, the Corporation may apply the whole or any part of the amount which would otherwise be paid in cash toward the payment of any indebtedness or obligation, whether matured or not, of such institution to the Corporation, existing or arising before such payment in cash. Such payment or such application need not be made to the extent that the provisions of the exception in paragraph (4) are applicable.

"(6) STATUTORILY PRESCRIBED AMOUNT DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'statutorily prescribed amount' means, with respect to any calendar year which ends after the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989—

"(A) $823,705,000, minus

"(B) the sum of—

"(i) the aggregate amount of offsets made before such date of enactment by all insured institutions under section 404(e)(2) of the National Housing Act (as in effect before such date of enactment); and

"(ii) the aggregate amount of offsets made by all savings associations under this subsection before the beginning of such calendar year.

"(7) SAVINGS ASSOCIATION'S PRO RATA AMOUNT.—For purposes of this subsection, any savings association's pro rata share of the statutorily prescribed amount is the percentage which is equal to such association's share of the secondary reserve as determined under section 404(e) of the National Housing Act on the day before the date on which Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation ceased to recognize the secondary reserve (as such Act was in effect on the day before such date).

"(8) YEAR OF ENACTMENT RULE.—With respect to the calendar year in which the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 is enacted, the Corporation shall make such adjustments as may be necessary—

"(A) in the computation of the statutorily prescribed amount which shall be applicable for the remainder of such calendar year after taking into account the aggregate amount of offsets by all insured institutions under section 404(e)(2) of the National Housing Act (as in effect before the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989) after the beginning of such calendar year and before such date of enactment; and

"(B) in the computation of the maximum amount of any savings association's offset for such calendar year under paragraph (1) after taking into account—

"(i) the amount of any offset by such savings association under section 404(e)(2) of the National Housing Act (as in effect before such date of enactment) after the beginning of such calendar year and before such date of enactment; and

"(ii) the change of such association's premium year from the 1-year period applicable under section 404(b) of the National Housing Act (as in effect before such date of enactment) to a calendar year basis.

"(n) COLLECTIONS ON BEHALF OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE OFFICE OF THRIFT SUPERVISION.—When requested by the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, the Corporation shall collect on behalf of the Director assessments on savings associations levied by the Director under section 9 of the Home Owners' Loan Act. The Corporation shall be reimbursed for its actual costs for the collection of such assessments. Any such assessments by the Director shall be in addition to any amounts assessed by the Corporation, the Financing Corporation, and the Resolution Funding Corporation.".

SEC. 209. CORPORATE POWERS OF THE FDIC.

Section 9 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1819) is amended—

(1) by striking out "bank" and "banks" each place such terms appear (except in the last sentence of the paragraph designated the "Fourth") and inserting in lieu thereof "depository institution" and "depository institutions", respectively; and

(2) by striking out "Upon the date" and inserting the following:

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Upon the date";

(3) by amending the paragraph designated the "Fourth" to read as follows:

"Fourth. To sue and be sued, and complain and defend, in any court of law or equity, State or Federal."; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) AGENCY AUTHORITY.—

"(1) STATUS.—The Corporation, in any capacity, shall be an agency of the United States for purposes of section 1345 of title 28, United States Code, without regard to whether the Corporation commenced the action.

"(2) FEDERAL COURT JURISDICTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (D), all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity to which the Corporation, in any capacity, is a party shall be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States.

"(B) REMOVAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (D), the Corporation may, without bond or security, remove any action, suit, or proceeding from a State court to the appropriate United States district court.

"(C) APPEAL OF REMAND.—The Corporation may appeal any order of remand entered by any United States district court.

"(D) STATE ACTIONS.—Except as provided in subparagraph (E), any action—

"(i) to which the Corporation, in the Corporation's capacity as receiver of a State insured depository institution by the exclusive appointment by State authorities, is a party other than as a plaintiff;

"(ii) which involves only the preclosing rights against the State insured depository institution, or obligations owing to, depositors, creditors, or stockholders by the State insured depository institution; and

"(iii) in which only the interpretation of the law of such State is necessary, shall not be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States.

"(E) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Subparagraph (D) shall not be construed as limiting the right of the Corporation to invoke the jurisdiction of any United States district court in any action described in such subparagraph if the institution of which the Corporation has been appointed receiver could have invoked the jurisdiction of such court.

"(3) SERVICE OF PROCESS.—The Board of Directors shall designate agents upon whom service of process may be made in any State, territory, or jurisdiction in which any insured depository institution is located.

"(4) BONDS OR FEES.—The Corporation shall not be required to post any bond to pursue any appeal and shall not be subject to payments of any filing fees in United States district courts or courts of appeal.".

SEC. 210. ADMINISTRATION OF CORPORATION.

(a) EXAMINATION AUTHORITY.—Section 10(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1820(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) EXAMINATIONS.—

"(1) APPOINTMENT OF EXAMINERS AND CLAIMS AGENTS.—The Board of Directors shall appoint examiners and claim agents.

"(2) REGULAR EXAMINATIONS.—Any examiner appointed under paragraph (1) shall have power, on behalf of the Corporation, to examine—

"(A) any insured State nonmember bank (except a District bank) or insured State branch of any foreign bank;

"(B) any savings association, State nonmember bank, or State branch of a foreign bank, or other depository institution which files an application with the Corporation to become an insured depository institution; and

"(C) any insured depository institution in default, whenever the Board of Directors determines an examination of any such depository institution is necessary.

"(3) SPECIAL EXAMINATION OF ANY INSURED DEPOSITORY INSTITUTION.—In addition to the examinations authorized under paragraph (2), any examiner appointed under paragraph (1) shall have power, on behalf of the Corporation, to make any special examination of any insured depository institution whenever the Board of Directors determines a special examination of any such depository institution is necessary to determine the condition of such depository institution for insurance purposes.

"(4) EXAMINATION OF AFFILIATES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In making any examination under paragraph (2) or (3), any examiner appointed under paragraph (1) shall have power, on behalf of the Corporation, to make such examinations of the affairs of any affiliate of any insured depository institution as may be necessary to disclose fully—

"(i) the relationship between such insured depository institution and any such affiliate; and

"(ii) the effect of such relationship on the insured depository institution.

"(B) COMMITMENT BY FOREIGN BANKS TO ALLOW EXAMINATIONS OF AFFILIATES.—No branch or depository institution subsidiary of a foreign bank may become an insured depository institution unless such foreign bank submits a written binding commitment to the Board of Directors to permit any examination of any affiliate of such branch or depository institution subsidiary pursuant to subparagraph (A) to the extent determined by the Board of Directors to be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

"(5) POWER AND DUTY OF EXAMINERS.—Each examiner appointed under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) have power to make a thorough examination of any insured depository institution or affiliate under paragraph (2), (3), or (4); and

"(B) shall make a full and detailed report of condition of any insured depository institution or affiliate examined to the Corporation.

"(6) POWER OF CLAIM AGENTS.—Each claim agent appointed under paragraph (1) shall have power to investigate and examine all claims for insured deposits.".

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 10(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1820(c)) is amended by striking out ", State nonmember banks or other institutions" and inserting in lieu thereof "and any State nonmember bank, savings association, or other institution".

(2) Section 10 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1820) is amended by striking out subsection (d).

SEC. 211. INSURANCE FUNDS.

Section 11(a) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out paragraph (1) and inserting the following:

"(1) The Corporation shall insure the deposits of all insured depository institutions as provided in this Act. The maximum amount of the insured deposit of any depositor shall be $100,000.";

(2) in paragraph (2)(B), by striking out "time and savings"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(4) GENERAL PROVISION RELATING TO FUNDS.—The Bank Insurance Fund established under paragraph (5) and the Savings Association Insurance Fund established under paragraph (6) shall each be—

"(A) maintained and administered by the Corporation;

"(B) maintained separately and not commingled; and

"(C) used by the Corporation to carry out its insurance purposes in the manner provided in this subsection.

"(5) BANK INSURANCE FUND.—

"(A) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established a fund to be known as the Bank Insurance Fund.

"(B) TRANSFER TO FUND.—On the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989, the Permanent Insurance Fund shall be dissolved and all assets and liabilities of the Permanent Insurance Fund shall be transferred to the Bank Insurance Fund.

"(C) USES.—The Bank Insurance Fund shall be available to the Corporation for use with respect to Bank Insurance Fund members.

"(D) DEPOSITS.—All amounts assessed against Bank Insurance Fund members by the Corporation shall be deposited into the Bank Insurance Fund.

"(6) SAVINGS ASSOCIATION INSURANCE FUND.—

"(A) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established a fund to be known as the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(B) USES.—The Savings Association Insurance Fund shall be available to the Corporation for use with respect to Savings Association Insurance Fund members.

"(C) DEPOSITS.—All amounts assessed against Savings Association Insurance Fund members which are not required for the Financing Corporation, the Resolution Funding Corporation, or the FSLIC Resolution Fund shall be deposited in the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(D) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The FSLIC Resolution Fund shall deposit in the Savings Association Insurance Fund such amounts as the Corporation determines are needed during the period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 and ending on September 30, 1991, to pay the administrative and supervisory expenses of such Fund.

"(ii) PRIORITY.—The Savings Association Insurance Fund shall have priority over other obligations of the FSLIC Resolution Fund with respect to such amounts.

"(E) TREASURY PAYMENTS TO FUND.—To provide sufficient funding for the Savings Association Insurance Fund to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to such Fund, for each of the fiscal years 1992 through 1999, the amount, if any, by which $2,000,000,000 exceeds the amount deposited in such Fund (during such fiscal year) pursuant to subparagraph (C).

"(F) TREASURY PAYMENTS TO MAINTAIN NET WORTH OF FUND.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the Savings Association Insurance Fund, for each fiscal year described in the following table, any additional amount which may be necessary, as determined by the Corporation and the Secretary of the Treasury to ensure that such Fund has the minimum net worth referred to in such table throughout each such fiscal year:

"For the fiscal year beginning October 1 of:	The amount of minimum net worth (in billions):
1991	0.0
1992	1.0
1993	2.1
1994	3.2
1995	4.3
1996	5.4
1997	6.5
1998	7.6
1999	8.8

"(G) EXCEPTION TO SUBPARAGRAPHS (E) AND (F).—Notwithstanding subparagraphs (E) and (F), no payment may be made pursuant to such subparagraphs after the Savings Association Insurance Fund achieves a reserve ratio of 1.25 percent.

"(H) DISCRETIONARY RTC PAYMENTS.—If amounts available to the Savings Association Insurance Fund for purposes other than the payment of administrative expenses are insufficient for the Savings Association Insurance Fund to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Corporation may request the Resolution Trust Corporation to provide, and the Oversight Board of the Resolution Trust Corporation (in the discretion of the Oversight Board) may pay, such amount as may be needed for such purposes.

"(I) BORROWING AUTHORITY.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The Corporation may borrow from the Federal home loan banks, with the concurrence of the Federal Housing Finance Board, such funds as the Corporation considers necessary for the use of the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(ii) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—Any loan from any Federal home loan bank under clause (i) to the Savings Association Insurance Fund shall—

"(I) bear a rate of interest of not less than such bank's current marginal cost of funds, taking into account the maturities involved;

"(II) be adequately secured, as determined by the Federal Housing Finance Board;

"(III) be a direct liability of such Fund; and

"(IV) be subject to the limitations of section 15(c).

"(J) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of the Treasury, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this paragraph, except that—

"(i) the annual amount appropriated under subparagraph (F) shall not exceed $2,000,000,000 in either fiscal year 1991 or fiscal year 1992; and

"(ii) the cumulative amount appropriated under subparagraph (F) for fiscal years 1991 through 1999 shall not exceed $16,000,000,000.

"(7) PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO MAINTENANCE OF ACCOUNTS.—

"(A) CORPORATION'S AUTHORITY.—Any provision of this Act forbidding the commingling of the Bank Insurance Fund with the Savings Association Insurance Fund, or requiring the separate maintenance of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund, is not intended—

"(i) to limit or impair the authority of the Corporation to use the same facilities and resources in the course of conducting supervisory, regulatory, conservatorship, receivership, or liquidation functions with respect to banks and savings associations, or to integrate such functions; or

"(ii) to limit or impair the Corporation's power to combine assets or liabilities belonging to banks and savings associations in conservatorship or receivership for managerial purposes, or to limit or impair the Corporation's power to dispose of such assets or liabilities on an aggregate basis.

"(B) ACCOUNTING REQUIREMENTS.—

"(i) ACCOUNTING FOR USE OF FACILITIES AND RESOURCES.—The Corporation shall keep a full and complete accounting of all costs and expenses associated with the use of any facility or resource used in the course of any function specified in subparagraph (A)(i) and shall allocate, in the manner provided in subparagraph (C), any such costs and expenses incurred by the Corporation—

"(I) with respect to Bank Insurance Fund members to the Bank Insurance Fund; and

"(II) with respect to Savings Association Insurance Fund members to the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(ii) ACCOUNTING FOR HOLDING AND MANAGING ASSETS AND LIABILITIES.—The Corporation shall keep a full and complete accounting of all costs and expenses associated with the holding and management of any asset or liability specified in subparagraph (A)(ii).

"(iii) ACCOUNTING FOR DISPOSITION OF ASSETS AND LIABILITIES.—The Corporation shall keep a full and complete accounting of all expenses and receipts associated with the disposition of any asset or liability specified in subparagraph (A)(ii).

"(iv) ALLOCATION OF COST, EXPENSES AND RECEIPTS.—The Corporation shall allocate any cost, expense, and receipt described in clause (ii) or clause (iii) which is associated with any asset or liability belonging to—

"(I) any Bank Insurance Fund member to the Bank Insurance Fund; and

"(II) any Savings Association Insurance Fund member to the Savings Association Insurance Fund.

"(C) ALLOCATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—Any personnel, administrative, or other overhead expense of the Corporation shall be allocated—

"(i) fully to the Bank Insurance Fund, if the expense was incurred directly as a result of the Corporation's responsibilities solely with respect to Bank Insurance Fund members;

"(ii) fully to the Savings Association Insurance Fund, if the expense was incurred directly as a result of the Corporation's responsibilities solely with respect to Savings Association Insurance Fund members;

"(iii) between the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund, in amounts reflecting the relative degree to which the expense was incurred as a result of the activities of Bank Insurance Fund and Savings Association Insurance Fund members; or

"(iv) between the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund, in amounts reflecting the relative total assets as of the end of the preceding calendar year of Bank Insurance Fund members and Savings Association Insurance Fund members, to the extent that the Board of Directors is unable to make a determination under clause (i), (ii), or (iii).".

SEC. 212. CONSERVATORSHIP AND RECEIVERSHIP POWERS OF THE CORPORATION.

(a) BASIC AUTHORITIES.—Section 11 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821) is amended by striking out subsections (c) through (j) and inserting the following new subsections:

"(c) APPOINTMENT OF CORPORATION AS CONSERVATOR OR RECEIVER.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law, the law of any State, or the constitution of any State, the Corporation may accept appointment and act as conservator or receiver for any insured depository institution upon appointment in the manner provided in paragraph (2) or (3).

"(2) FEDERAL DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—

"(A) APPOINTMENT.—

"(i) CONSERVATOR.—The Corporation may, at the discretion of the supervisory authority, be appointed conservator of any insured Federal depository institution or District bank and the Corporation may accept such appointment.

"(ii) RECEIVER.—The Corporation shall be appointed receiver, and shall accept such appointment, whenever a receiver is appointed for the purpose of liquidation or winding up the affairs of an insured Federal depository institution or District bank by the appropriate Federal banking agency, notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law (other than section 21A of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act) or the code of law for the District of Columbia.

"(B) ADDITIONAL POWERS.—In addition to and not in derogation of the powers conferred and the duties imposed by this section on the Corporation as conservator or receiver, the Corporation, to the extent not inconsistent with such powers and duties, shall have any other power conferred on or any duty (which is related to the exercise of such power) imposed on a conservator or receiver for any Federal depository institution under any other provision of law.

"(C) CORPORATION NOT SUBJECT TO ANY OTHER AGENCY.—When acting as conservator or receiver pursuant to an appointment described in subparagraph (A), the Corporation shall not be subject to the direction or supervision of any other agency or department of the United States or any State in the exercise of the Corporation's rights, powers, and privileges.

"(D) DEPOSITORY INSTITUTION IN CONSERVATORSHIP SUBJECT TO BANKING AGENCY SUPERVISION.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (C), any Federal depository institution for which the Corporation has been appointed conservator shall remain subject to the supervision of the appropriate Federal banking agency.

"(3) INSURED STATE DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS—

"(A) APPOINTMENT BY APPROPRIATE STATE SUPERVISOR.—Whenever the authority having supervision of any insured State depository institution (other than a District depository institution) appoints a conservator or receiver for such institution and tenders appointment to the Corporation, the Corporation may accept such appointment.

"(B) ADDITIONAL POWERS.—In addition to the powers conferred and the duties related to the exercise of such powers imposed by State law on any conservator or receiver appointed under the law of such State for an insured State depository institution, the Corporation, as conservator or receiver pursuant to an appointment described in subparagraph (A), shall have the powers conferred and the duties imposed by this section on the Corporation as conservator or receiver.

"(C) CORPORATION NOT SUBJECT TO ANY OTHER AGENCY.—When acting as conservator or receiver pursuant to an appointment described in subparagraph (A), the Corporation shall not be subject to the direction or supervision of any other agency or department of the United States or any State in the exercise of its rights, powers, and privileges.

"(D) DEPOSITORY INSTITUTION IN CONSERVATORSHIP SUBJECT TO BANKING AGENCY SUPERVISION.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (C), any insured State depository institution for which the Corporation has been appointed conservator shall remain subject to the supervision of the appropriate State bank or savings association supervisor.

"(4) APPOINTMENT OF CORPORATION BY THE CORPORATION.—Except as otherwise provided in section 21A of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act and notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law, the law of any State, or the constitution of any State, the Corporation may appoint itself as sole conservator or receiver of any insured State depository institution if—

"(A) the Corporation determines—

"(i) that—

"(I) a conservator, receiver, or other legal custodian has been appointed for such institution;

"(II) such institution has been subject to the appointment of any such conservator, receiver, or custodian for a period of at least 15 consecutive days; and

"(III) 1 or more of the depositors in such institution is unable to withdraw any amount of any insured deposit; or

"(ii) that such institution has been closed by or under the laws of any State; and

"(B) the Corporation determines that 1 or more of the grounds specified in paragraph (5)—

"(i) existed with respect to such institution at the time—

"(I) the conservator, receiver, or other legal custodian was appointed; or

"(II) such institution was closed; or

"(ii) exist at any time—

"(I) during the appointment of the conservator, receiver, or other legal custodian; or

"(II) while such institution is closed.

"(5) GROUNDS FOR PARAGRAPH (4) APPOINTMENT.—The grounds referred to in paragraph (4)(B) for the appointment of the Corporation as conservator or receiver for any insured State depository institution are as follows:

"(A) Insolvency in that the assets of the institution are less than the institution's obligations to its creditors and others, including members of the institution.

"(B) Substantial dissipation of assets or earnings due to—

"(i) any violation of any law or regulation; or

"(ii) any unsafe or unsound practice.

"(C) An unsafe or unsound condition to transact business, including substantially insufficient capital or otherwise.

"(D) Any willful violation of a cease-and-desist order which has become final.

"(E) Any concealment of books, papers, records, or assets of the institution or any refusal to submit books, papers, records, or affairs of the institution for inspection to any examiner or to any lawful agent of the appropriate Federal banking agency or State bank or savings association supervisor.

"(F) The likelihood that the institution will not be able to meet the demands of its depositors or pay its obligations in the normal course of business.

"(G) The incurrence or likely incurrence of losses by the institution that will deplete all or substantially all of its capital with no reasonable prospect for the replenishment of the capital of the institution without Federal assistance.

"(H) Any violation of any law or regulation, or an unsafe or unsound practice or condition which is likely to cause insolvency or substantial dissipation of assets or earnings, or is likely to weaken the condition of the institution or otherwise seriously prejudice the interests of its depositors.

"(6) APPOINTMENT BY DIRECTOR OF THE OFFICE OF THRIFT SUPERVISION.—

"(A) CONSERVATOR.—The Corporation or the Resolution Trust Corporation may, at the discretion of the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, be appointed conservator and the Corporation may accept any such appointment.

"(B) RECEIVER.—Whenever the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision appoints a receiver under the provisions of section 5(d)(2)(C) of the Home Owner's Loan Act for the purpose of liquidation or winding up any savings association's affairs—

"(i) during the 3-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989, the Resolution Trust Corporation shall be appointed; and

"(ii) after the end of the 3-year period referred to in clause (i), the Corporation shall be appointed.

"(7) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—If the Corporation appoints itself as conservator or receiver under paragraph (4), the insured State depository institution may, within 30 days thereafter, bring an action in the United States district court for the judicial district in which the home office of such institution is located, or in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, for an order requiring the Corporation to remove itself as such conservator or receiver, and the court shall, upon the merits, dismiss such action or direct the Corporation to remove itself as such conservator or receiver.

"(8) REPLACEMENT OF CONSERVATOR OF STATE DEPOSITORY INSTITUTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any insured State depository institution for which the Corporation appointed itself as conservator pursuant to paragraph (4), the Corporation may, without any requirement of notice, hearing, or other action, replace itself as conservator with itself as receiver of such institution.

"(B) REPLACEMENT TREATED AS REMOVAL OF INCUMBENT.—The replacement of a conservator with a receiver under subparagraph (A) shall be treated as the removal of the Corporation as conservator.

"(C) RIGHT OF REVIEW OF ORIGINAL APPOINTMENT NOT AFFECTED.—The replacement of a conservator with a receiver under subparagraph (A) shall not affect any right of the insured State depository institution to obtain review, pursuant to paragraph (7), of the original appointment of the conservator.

"(9) ADDITIONAL POWERS.—In any case in which the Corporation is appointed conservator or receiver pursuant to paragraph (4) or (6)—

"(A) the provisions of this section shall be applicable to the Corporation, as conservator or receiver of any insured State depository institution in the same manner and to the same extent as if such institution were a Federal depository institution for which the Corporation had been appointed conservator or receiver; and

"(B) the Corporation as receiver of any insured State depository institution may—

"(i) liquidate such institution in an orderly manner; and

"(ii) make such other disposition of any matter concerning such institution as the Corporation determines is in the best interests of the institution, the depositors of such institution, and the Corporation.

"(d) POWERS AND DUTIES OF CORPORATION AS CONSERVATOR OR RECEIVER.—

"(1) RULEMAKING AUTHORITY OF CORPORATION.—The Corporation may prescribe such regulations as the Corporation determines to be appropriate regarding the conduct of conservatorships or receiverships.

"(2) GENERAL POWERS.—

"(A) SUCCESSOR TO INSTITUTION.—The Corporation shall, as conservator or receiver, and by operation of law, succeed to—

"(i) all rights, titles, powers, and privileges of the insured depository institution, and of any stockholder, member, accountholder, depositor, officer, or director of such institution with respect to the institution and the assets of the institution; and

"(ii) title to the books, records, and assets of any previous conservator or other legal custodian of such institution.

"(B) OPERATE THE INSTITUTION.—The Corporation may, as conservator or receiver—

"(i) take over the assets of and operate the insured depository institution with all the powers of the members or shareholders, the directors, and the officers of the institution and conduct all business of the institution;

"(ii) collect all obligations and money due the institution;

"(iii) perform all functions of the institution in the name of the institution which is consistent with the appointment as conservator or receiver; and

"(iv) preserve and conserve the assets and property of such institution.

"(C) FUNCTIONS OF INSTITUTION'S OFFICERS, DIRECTORS, AND SHAREHOLDERS.—The Corporation may, by regulation or order, provide for the exercise of any function by any member or stockholder, director, or officer of any insured depository institution for which the Corporation has been appointed conservator or receiver.

"(D) POWERS AS CONSERVATOR.—The Corporation may, as conservator, take such action as may be—

"(i) necessary to put the insured depository institution in a sound and solvent condition; and

"(ii) appropriate to carry on the business of the institution and preserve and conserve the assets and property of the institution.

"(E) ADDITIONAL POWERS AS RECEIVER.—The Corporation may, as receiver, place the insured depository institution in liquidation and proceed to realize upon the assets of the institution, having due regard to the conditions of credit in the locality.

"(F) ORGANIZATION OF NEW INSTITUTIONS.—The Corporation may, as receiver—

"(i) with respect to savings associations and by application to the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, organize a new Federal savings association to take over such assets or such liabilities as the Corporation may determine to be appropriate; and

"(ii) with respect to any insured bank, organize a new national bank under subsection (m) or a bridge bank under subsection (n).

"(G) MERGER; TRANSFER OF ASSETS AND LIABILITIES.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The Corporation may, as conservator or receiver—

"(I) merge the insured depository institution with another insured depository institution; or

"(II) subject to clause (ii), transfer any asset or liability of the institution in default (including assets and liabilities associated with any trust business) without any approval, assignment, or consent with respect to such transfer.

"(ii) APPROVAL BY APPROPRIATE FEDERAL BANKING AGENCY.—No transfer described in clause (i)(II) may be made to another depository institution (other than a new bank or a bridge bank established pursuant to subsection (m) or (n)) without the approval of the appropriate Federal banking agency for such institution.

"(H) PAYMENT OF VALID OBLIGATIONS.—The Corporation, as conservator or receiver, shall pay all valid obligations of the insured depository institution in accordance with the prescriptions and limitations of this Act.

"(I) INCIDENTAL POWERS.—The Corporation may, as conservator or receiver—

"(i) exercise all powers and authorities specifically granted to conservators or receivers, respectively, under this Act and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry out such powers; and

"(ii) take any action authorized by this Act, which the Corporation determines is in the best interests of the depository institution, its depositors, or the Corporation.

"(3) AUTHORITY OF RECEIVER TO DETERMINE CLAIMS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Corporation may, as receiver, determine claims in accordance with the requirements of this subsection and regulations prescribed under paragraph (4)(A).

"(B) NOTICE REQUIREMENTS.—The receiver, in any case involving the liquidation or winding up of the affairs of a closed depository institution, shall—

"(i) promptly publish a notice to the depository institution's creditors to present their claims, together with proof, to the receiver by a date specified in the notice which shall be not less than 90 days after the publication of such notice; and

"(ii) republish such notice approximately 1 month and 2 months, respectively, after the publication under clause (i).

"(C) MAILING REQUIRED.—The receiver shall mail a notice similar to the notice published under subparagraph (B)(i) at the time of such publication to any creditor shown on the institution's books—

"(i) at the creditor's last address appearing in such books; or

"(ii) upon discovery of the name and address of a claimant not appearing on the institution's books within 30 days after the discovery of such name and address.

"(4) RULEMAKING AUTHORITY RELATING TO DETERMINATION OF CLAIMS.—The Corporation may prescribe regulations regarding the allowance or disallowance of claims by the receiver and providing for administrative determination of claims and review of such determination.

"(5) PROCEDURES FOR DETERMINATION OF CLAIMS.—

"(A) DETERMINATION PERIOD.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Before the end of the 180-day period beginning on the date any claim against a depository institution is filed with the Corporation as receiver, the Corporation shall determine whether to allow or disallow the claim and shall notify the claimant of any determination with respect to such claim.

"(ii) EXTENSION OF TIME.—The period described in clause (i) may be extended by a written agreement between the claimant and the Corporation.

"(iii) MAILING OF NOTICE SUFFICIENT.—The requirements of clause (i) shall be deemed to be satisfied if the notice of any determination with respect to any claim is mailed to the last address of the claimant which appears—

"(I) on the depository institution's books;

"(II) in the claim filed by the claimant; or

"(III) in documents submitted in proof of the claim.

"(iv) CONTENTS OF NOTICE OF DISALLOWANCE.—If any claim filed under clause (i) is disallowed, the notice to the claimant shall contain—

"(I) a statement of each reason for the disallowance; and

"(II) the procedures available for obtaining agency review of the determination to disallow the claim or judicial determination of the claim.

"(B) ALLOWANCE OF PROVEN CLAIMS.—The receiver shall allow any claim received on or before the date specified in the notice published under paragraph (3)(B)(i) by the receiver from any claimant which is proved to the satisfaction of the receiver.

"(C) DISALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS FILED AFTER END OF FILING PERIOD.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), claims filed after the date specified in the notice published under paragraph (3)(B)(i) shall be disallowed and such disallowance shall be final.

"(ii) CERTAIN EXCEPTIONS.—Clause (i) shall not apply with respect to any claim filed by any claimant after the date specified in the notice published under paragraph (3)(B)(i) and such claim may be considered by the receiver if—

"(I) the claimant did not receive notice of the appointment of the receiver in time to file such claim before such date; and

"(II) such claim is filed in time to permit payment of such claim.

"(D) AUTHORITY TO DISALLOW CLAIMS.—The receiver may disallow any portion of any claim by a creditor or claim of security, preference, or priority which is not proved to the satisfaction of the receiver.

"(E) NO JUDICIAL REVIEW OF DETERMINATION PURSUANT TO SUBPARAGRAPH (D).—No court may review the Corporation's determination pursuant to subparagraph (D) to disallow a claim.

"(F) LEGAL EFFECT OF FILING.—

"(i) STATUTE OF LIMITATION TOLLED.—For purposes of any applicable statute of limitations, the filing of a claim with the receiver shall constitute a commencement of an action.

"(ii) NO PREJUDICE TO OTHER ACTIONS.—Subject to paragraph (12), the filing of a claim with the receiver shall not prejudice any right of the claimant to continue any action which was filed before the appointment of the receiver.

"(6) PROVISION FOR AGENCY REVIEW OR JUDICIAL DETERMINATION OF CLAIMS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Before the end of the 60-day period beginning on the earlier of—

"(i) the end of the period described in paragraph (5)(A)(i) with respect to any claim against a depository institution for which the Corporation is receiver; or

"(ii) the date of any notice of disallowance of such claim pursuant to paragraph (5)(A)(i), the claimant may request administrative review of the claim in accordance with subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (7) or file suit on such claim (or continue an action commenced before the appointment of the receiver) in the district or territorial court of the United States for the district within which the depository institution's principal place of business is located or the United States District Court for the District of Columbia (and such court shall have jurisdiction to hear such claim).

"(B) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—If any claimant fails to—

"(i) request administrative review of any claim in accordance with subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (7); or

"(ii) file suit on such claim (or continue an action commenced before the appointment of the receiver), before the end of the 60-day period described in subparagraph (A), the claim shall be deemed to be disallowed (other than any portion of such claim which was allowed by the receiver) as of the end of such period, such disallowance shall be final, and the claimant shall have no further rights or remedies with respect to such claim.

"(7) REVIEW OF CLAIMS.—

"(A) ADMINISTRATIVE HEARING.—If any claimant requests review under this subparagraph in lieu of filing or continuing any action under paragraph (6) and the Corporation agrees to such request, the Corporation shall consider the claim after opportunity for a hearing on the record. The final determination of the Corporation with respect to such claim shall be subject to judicial review under chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code.

"(B) OTHER REVIEW PROCEDURES.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The Corporation shall also establish such alternative dispute resolution processes as may be appropriate for the resolution of claims filed under paragraph (5)(A)(i).

"(ii) CRITERIA.—In establishing alternative dispute resolution processes, the Corporation shall strive for procedures which are expeditious, fair, independent, and low cost.

"(iii) VOLUNTARY BINDING OR NONBINDING PROCEDURES.—The Corporation may establish both binding and nonbinding processes, which may be conducted by any government or private party, but all parties, including the claimant and the Corporation, must agree to the use of the process in a particular case.

"(iv) CONSIDERATION OF INCENTIVES.—The Corporation shall seek to develop incentives for claimants to participate in the alternative dispute resolution process.

"(8) EXPEDITED DETERMINATION OF CLAIMS.—

"(A) ESTABLISHMENT REQUIRED.—The Corporation shall establish a procedure for expedited relief outside of the routine claims process established under paragraph (5) for claimants who—

"(i) allege the existence of legally valid and enforceable or perfected security interests in assets of any depository institution for which the Corporation has been appointed receiver; and
